In the queen's bench of the high court of justice, before Baron Pollock, in London, hearing of the libel action brought by H. A. Roberts, master of the Bath College, against Countess Russell, £3,000 damages being claimed, came up. The suit is an outgrowth of the action brought by the countess against Earl Russell, her husband, for a judicial separation, in which shocking allegations of immorality were made. The defense is that the statements were made in good faith and without malice. Judgment was rendered in favor of the plaintiff, with costs. Countess Russell, it was stated in court, had made a written withdrawal of the charges and had at the time tendered an apology.

Dun & Co.'s Review.

R. G. Dun & Co.'s Weekly Review of Trade says: "Speculative reaction has not in the least changed the business outlook. The fictitious prices made for wheat and cotton meant no good except for individuals, and the change to prices more nearly in accord with actual relations of demand and supply only conforms to conditions which have been well known for months. The attack on stocks was so plainly artificial that its influence passed with the day, and neither in foreign relations nor in domestic business was there anything to justify alarm. The Government report as to wheat indicated a much smaller yield than anybody really expects, but that has become so much the rule that the report had no real influence, and the principal effect was the serious depression caused by large sales in anticipation of the report, which seemed to be thoroughly known in advance to some speculators."

Vilas Denies a Rumor.

Senator William F. Vilas, at Milwaukee on his way north for a short vacation, denies the report that he declared he and President Cleveland would vote for McKinley. "There is not a word of truth in it," he said. "I have never entertained such a purpose, and I never heard Mr. Cleveland say a word which would give the least suspicion that he had so declared. The story is fiction, pure and simple; an election canard, when everything goes." He did not believe there would be a bolt at the Chicago convention unless the silver men bolted.

He Had an Exciting Career.

Yankton, S. D., has just celebrated the eighty-sixth birthday of W. M. Moore, who first visited the town while on a trip for the American Fur Company in 1836. Mr. Moore served through the Black Hawk, Mexican and border wars of Kansas, and subsequently through the rebellion, besides engaging in innumerable small skirmishes with the Indians during his early life in the West.

Fatal Sport.

William Swartz, while playing ball Sunday at Pataskala, Licking County, Ohio, was struck on the head by a pitched ball and died in a few minutes.

City of Havana Likely to Fall.

London dispatch: The News Tuesday says: "The Junta of the Cuban revolutionists are men of fewer words than their Spanish opponents, but they now assert that they have something to say, and have accordingly said it. They announce that they have broken the Spanish fortified line and that Gomez is at the gates of Havana. If it is not true they will look foolish; if it is the Spanish generals will appear in that light. We shall know soon one way or the other. The Spanish authorities hitherto have had the dispatch of news from the island all to themselves, but their average of about one and a quarter government victories a day may be regarded as rather too high. Gomez is the leader who baffled Campos last summer. The marshal threw 30,000 men across the island to prevent the insurrection from spreading to Puerto Principe. Gomez with 250 men made a feint at two separate points and then passed through the middle of the line without losing a man. His present success may be a fable, but this is history."

SINKS WITH ALL ON BOARD.

Steamer Drummond Castle Strikes a Rock Off the French Coast.

The British steamer Drummond Castle, from Cape Town for Loudon, struck a rock Tuesday night while hugging the French coast and sank three minutes later, with 144 passengers and 103 officers and crew on board. The vessel sank and disappeared entirely in about three minutes after striking. Only two boats were launched and one of these is believed to have been lost. The passengers must have been asleep when the vessel struck. Seafaring men believe the Drummond Castle, while at full speed, struck the ledge, ripped open the water-tight compartments and the greater part of the ship's bottom, slid across the ledge or went down in the deep water on the outside. It is thought that an important witness in the trial of Dr. Jameson and other citizens and mining men of the Transvaal, with their families, were on the vessel. The Drummond Castle belonged to the famous Castle line of steamships running between South Africa and London.

BEECHER'S SON ON TRIAL.

He Is Charged with Unlawfully Using Another Man's Name.

The trial of Henry Barton Beecher, son of Henry Ward Beecher, for forgery was begun Tuesday in the criminal branch of the Supreme Court in New York. His counsel includes his brother, W. C. Beecher, and Francis L. Wellman. The latter represented the State in the prosecution of Erastus Wyman, whose case resembles Col. Beecher's in its main point. Mr. Beecher is charged with having signed the name of "F. S. Bond, vice-president" (of the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul Railway), "Per A. S. B., P. S.," to an application for casualty insurance in the American Casualty Company without having authority to do so, and with having received his share in commissions and dividends of the insurance on a policy based on that unauthorized application. The Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul denies that it ever applied for the insurance.

CLAIM JUMPING IN SOUTH DAKOTA.

Land Speculation in a Portion of the Yankton Reservation.

Reports from the ceded portion of the Yankton Indian reservation are to the effect that many claims now covered by soldiers' declaratory statements are being "jumped" by parties who want the land for homes. It appears that many of these statements have been filed in the names of soldiers who have been dead for years, and others who had used their homestead rights on lands in other parts of the State, upon which they are now residing.

Rich Strike of Gold Quartz.

Rich strikes of gold quartz are being made at Bear Gulch, Beaver and Nigger Hill, fifteen miles west of Spearfish and twenty-six miles from Deadwood, S. D., assaying from $20 to $40 a ton. The largest gold nuggets ever found in the hills have been taken out of this district by placer miners, some weighing as high as eight ounces. The district is swarming with prospectors staking claims. Representatives of some of the large mining companies are following up the stampede.

Jealousy Ends in a Tragedy.

In Owsley County, Ky., at Buffalo Creek, Mrs. J. McIntosh killed Mrs. Polly Ann Fox, wife of the notorious James Fox, who is now serving a ten-year sentence in the penitentiary for counterfeiting. The killing is the result of jealousy over a man.

Suspension of Two Banks.

At Cheney, Wash., the First National bank and the Bank of Cheney have suspended payment. The First National's deposits are small and will probably be paid in full. The affairs of the Bank of Cheney are a matter of speculation.

Would Kill the Superintendent.

At Iron Mountain, Mich., an attempt was made to kill Captain Martin Goldsworthy and family, of the Chapin mine. Two sticks of dynamite were exploded under their house, wrecking the structure badly. Nobody was injured.

Sanitarium Is Burned.

At Santa Fe, N. M., St. Vincent's Sanitarium, conducted by sisters of charity, was burned, and the hospital annex was gutted by the fire. The loss amounts to $100,000; insurance, $8,000.

TENNESSEE'S • CENTENNIAL.

Review of One Hundred Years of Statehood.

THE Tennessee Centennial Exposition will open May 1, 1897, and continue six months, until Nov. 1. The origin of the movement to hold an elaborate industrial exposition in commemoration of the one hundredth anniversary of the admission of Tennessee into the Union dates back to the first of June, 1894. Shortly after that a company was organized and chartered under the laws of the State with an authroized capital of $1,000,000. The first money paid on the stock subscriptions was in the spring of 1894, and the balance of that year was spent in arranging for funds. In the spring of 1895 the available capital had reached $200,000, and since then another $200,000 has been added.

JAMES ROBINSON. JOHN SEVIER. ANDREW JACKSON.

In July, 1895, the Centennial Exposition Company leased an improved piece of property of 200 acres, lying in the western suburb of Nashville, which has for years been the famous racing place known as West Side Park, and in the same month the grading of the grounds for exposition purposes was commenced. A lake of some twenty-five acres was excavated, and also a smaller one of about two acres in extent. In the center of the plan a high terrace was built to represent the Acropolis at Athens, and to form the foundation for the contemplated reproduction of the Athenian Parthenon. The entire contour of the earth was altered, but the trees that were characteristic of old West Side Park were allowed to stand as they were. The first building to be erected was constructed in the fall of 1895. This is the administration building, and in it the director of works, the supervising architects and their assistants have their offices.

This was followed on Jan. 1, 1896, by the letting of the contracts for the Parthenon, the commerce building, the auditorium, the machinery building, the transportation building, and the woman's building. Under the terms of the contracts these buildings will cost $160,000, and are to be covered on the exterior with white staff. Tennessee was admitted into the Union on June 1, 1796, and in honor of the one hundredth anniversary of that event the most elaborate ceremonies that have ever been seen in the South were held on June 1, 1896, when the formal opening of the exposition, which is to really exist during 1897, was made.

CHILDREN'S BUILDING.

COMMERCE BUILDING.

The agriculture building and the children's building are now under contract, and during the summer the erection of the minerals building, the horticulture building, the forestry building, the negro building, and the live stock building will be begun. All of these buildings are to be covered with white staff also, and they must be done by Jan. 1, 1897. The four months after that date and before May 1 will be devoted to finishing off every feature and detail of the exposition and the placing of exhibits, so that when the opening takes place on May 1 there will be no ragged edges to detract from the beauty of the exposition.

The features of the exposition promise to be particularly attractive. There will be an arch of Tennessee marble sixty feet high, a statue of Pallas Athena forty-three feet high, a pyramid of cotton bales 100 feet high, and at least four specially designed fountains. There are at present over 1,000 men employed on the grounds, and the sound of the hammer and the saw resounds from morning until night.

History of the State.

The progress made by this fair Southern State has been rapid and worthy of the pioneers who amid many perils carved out her territory a little over a century ago. In 1796 the largest town in Tennessee had only 100 log huts, and perhaps in the entire State there was not a pane of window glass. Now there are beautiful cities and towns on every hand, and a general air of prosperity, and progress rests over the commonwealth.

The name Tennessee is derived from Tannassee, the Indian name of the Little Tennessee River. The first settlement in the State was attempted in 1754, but the settlers were wiped out by the Indians. Two years later another settlement was made on the Tennessee River near Knoxville, and Fort Loudon was built. In 1760 this place was besieged by Indians and the whites capitulated on the condition that they would be allowed to return to North Carolina. The condition, however, was not observed. The whites on their march back to Carolina were attacked, and those of them who were not killed were reduced to slavery.

In 1769 James Robertson, a hardy Scotch-Irish pioneer, led a band of men into the State, settling on the Watauga and Holston rivers. This settlement rapidly grew, and from 1769 to 1777 the different settlements affected were called the Wautaga Association. The motto of Roberston was: "We are the rear guard of the revolution, the advance guard of civilization, and our way is across the continent." Associated with him in the upbuilding of Tennessee was John Sevier, and later Andrew Jackson, the seventh President of the United States. These three were men of personal magnetism, statecraft and military ability. All were Indian fighters of the same caliber, provoking attacks and following them up, and so well did they do their work among the Creeks and Cherokees that within fifty years Tennessee became as safe as Massachusetts was after 20 years.

It was an inopportune time for the establishment of settlements. There were 50,000 Indian savages in the region, hostile to the whites, and later these were in alliance with England during the revolutionary war. For forty years there is one unbroken record of struggles with these savages, and then when Sevier and Robertson left off Andrew Jackson stepped in.

In 1779 Robertson, leaving Sevier in charge of Watauga settlements, explored the Cumberland region and emigrated there with others. Nashville was founded and the settlers organized themselves into a civil and military body with Robertson at their head. And then this handful of pioneers began a conflict with the Indians, who outnumbered them 10 to 1. Within sixty days thirty-nine of the settlers fell victims to the tomahawk of the Cherokee, and in a few months sixty-seven perished. But through all this adversity Robertson remained steadfast, and until he ended his military services in 1796 he was constantly performing heroic deeds.

WOMAN'S BUILDING.

Sevier rendered most important service in numerous wars against the Indians. In 1773, while living on the Watauga, he took part in Lord Dunmore's war against the Shawnee and other Indian tribes. At the beginning of the revolution he offered the services of the Watauga Association to the colonies, and the whole of what is now Tennessee was organized under the name of the Washington District, and became a county of North Carolina. In 1779 Sevier engaged in a severe war with the Indians, entered their territory and burned their towns. In 1780 he planned the battle of King's Mountain, and with a force of 480 men, which he had raised, and of which he was the colonel, he achieved a signal victory, wresting it from the midst of impending defeat. In the following year he conducted expeditions against the Chickamauga towns, subdued some of them and effected treaties very favorable to the whites.

AUDITORIUM.

At this time and up to 1784 what is now Tennessee formed a part of North Carolina. In that year the territory was ceded to the Federal Government, but the people becoming dissatisfied a convention was called, and a constitution and State government were organized. The State was named Franklin in honor of Benjamin Franklin, and John Sevier was elected Governor. North Caroma was not satisfied with this arrangement, and its Governor, Richard Caswell, isued a proclamation declaring the new government to be a revolt and ordering it to be abandoned. Violence followed the attempt to subdue it, but the people of Franklin were forced to yield to superior numbers. Sevier was captured and imprisoned, and Franklin was again ceded to the United States Government under the rule of the "territory south of the Ohio River." In 1794 a distinct territorial government was given to Tennessee, and in 1796 it was admitted to Statehood with John Sevier as its Governor. He served until 1801, was elected three times to Congress and died in 1815 while engaged in settling a boundary dispute between Georgia and the Creek territory in Alabama.

Another distinguished Tennessean was Andrew Jackson, soldier and statesman, and one of the most picturesque characters in American history. On the admission of Tennessee as a State Jackson was elected to Congress, and 1797 was chosen United States Senator. This position he resigned to accept a seat on the bench of the Supreme Court of Tennessee. Soon afterward he retired from politics, taking up his residence on the plantation known as the Hermitage, near Nashville. On the outbreak of the war with Great Britain Jackson tendered his services to the Government, and the following year he performed distinguished service in the Creek war. His successful defense of New Orleans made him a hero, and his fame was increased by the Seminole war of 1817-18. In 1828 he was elected President of the United States and was re-elected. In 1845 he died at the Hermitage.

AGRICULTURE BUILDING.

Tennessee has had various seats of government. Knoxville was the capital from 1794 to 1811, with the exception of 1807, when the seat of government was at Kingston; Nashville was favored from 1812 to 1815. In 1816 and from 1819 to 1825 Murfreesboro was the seat of government, and in 1817 Knoxville had that honor. In 1826 Nashville again became the capital and has remained so since.

During the war Tennessee was the scene of some of the bloodiest battles in the great struggle, but with the close of hostilities the people acknowledged their allegiance to the Union, and the commonwealth has since greatly prospered.

One Way to Put It.

Many of the sayings and doings of the Southern negro, that find their way into print, may be apocryphal, but enough are known to be true to make good his claim to humor. A gentleman discussing coon-hunting relates an incident, in Forest and Stream, that illustrates this characteristic drollery.

The party, consisting of hunters, dogs, axes and torches galore, had been hunting for a good part of the night without any luck whatever. Finally, the dogs treed a coon. It would take some time to fell so large a tree, and one of the negroes volunteered to climb it and ascertain the whereabouts of the coon.

All agreed to this, and sat around to await developments. Soon after the negro had disappeared among the branches, a peculiar sound was heard from the top of the tree. It was a kind of mixture of negro and coon dialect. Some one ventured the remark:

"Bill, have you got that coon?"

"Yes, sah," was the reply, "I'se got dis here coon; but I wish you'd send some o' dem darkies up here to help me turn him loose."

Anxious to Know.

Doctor—Don't be alarmed. I was sicker than you are a year ago and with the same trouble. To-day I am well and hearty.

Patient (anxiously)—Oh, Doctor, tell me who was your physician.—Waterbury American.

Never say, "That is one thing I would not stand." The people will laugh at you when they see you standing it a few weeks later.

Minor State Items.

Charles Hicks, aged 16, was drowned in an abandoned stone quarry at Huntington.

Charles Brennan, a boy of Bedford, lost a leg while trying to steal a ride on a moving train.

Henry Ernest and George Brown of Richmond, have gone to Africa to explore for riches.

William Ballard, aged 40 of Winchester, one of the finest oil portrait artists in Indiana, died of consumption.

The threatened libel suit of Judge Ellison of Anderson, against the Anderson Herald, has been withdrawn, both sides making manly concessions.

The first of four oil wells being sunk on O. W. Conner's farm, in Huntington County, came in. It is down about 1,075 feet and is producting 240 barrels per day.

Notices were posted at the McBetterlamp chimney plant at Elwood notifying the 800 employes that the plant will close down for the hot season. The big plant will likely resume in about seven or eight weeks.

Judge Taylor, at Lafayette, denied Jesse White a new trial and sentenced him to life imprisonment in the penitentiary. White was convicted of the murder of Mrs. Hester Curtis, a widow, residing alone, last December. Sixty days were given to prepare exceptions.

Grasshoppers are doing immense damage in the farming section surrounding South Bend. Alex Smith of Center Township, has 30 acres of wheat from which every blade has been eaten. Another 18 acres is being eaten up entirely, as well as 15 acres of potatoes and a large field of oats.

Mrs. Henry Wright of Kokomo, was taking her husband's dinner to a factory, and while crossing the Pan-handle bridge a train came on her unnoticed. As the engine was about to strike her, she jumped into the river, disappearing in the water, thirty-five feet below. She was rescued by the trainmen, who found her uninjured.

Marion Webb of Wabash, sued the Wabash Paper Company for $10,000 damages for injuries sustained by his son, Charles Webb, and obtained damages at $933. Three years ago Charles, an employe of the paper company, was caught by a revolving shaft and had one leg badly crushed, crippling him for life. Judge Shively set aside a former verdict for $1,000.

Some weeks ago Mrs. Julia Steward died at Delphi, leaving about $10,000 worth of property to her adopted daughter, Carrie Stewart. Mrs. Caroline Foster of Massachusetts, a sister of the dead woman, brought suit to gain possession of the property. William P. Harris, a married man, whose family reside at Hammond, has been paying attention to Miss Stewart. The latter says she will fight the case.

The notorious Lon Hawk of Anderson, who escaped from the Ohio Penitentiary, has been located. He is at Johannesburg, South Africa. Hawk is well known over the entire Central States as one of the smoothest men who ever operated in Indiana, Ohio and Illinois. He was sentenced in Ohio, but escaped from the Penitentiary. He always had the South African fever, and lost no time in putting the ocean between him and Ohio officers.

Robert Bongen of Lafayette, committed suicide in Anderson. He went there some time ago, and has been on one continued round of dissipation for the past three weeks. He was with his friends, and laughingly remarked that he guessed he would wind up his earthly career. The remark attracted but little attention, as all thought he was joking. But later he was found hanging to a rafter in an old shed near the Panhandle freight depot.

Kokomo, the home of Hon. S. E. Nicholson, author of the famous temperance law that bears his name, is probably the best governed town in the State of its size. One by one the policemen have been dropped from the force until only three remain, beside the City Marshal. The three patrolman are on night duty and during the day Marshal Bennett is the only officer on the streets. There are few cities of 12,000 population that can parallel this.

George Carll, aged 24, of Warren, employed at an oil well in the south part of the county, was killed by an accident. The large bull wheel, which is used in raising and lowering the casing into the well, came to a stop on the center and Carll stepped on one of the spokes to give it a start. The wheel started suddenly, and a rope which was attached to it flew up and caught him around the legs, drawing him under the wheel and mangling him. He lived but a short time.

Winnie Osborn, the girl from Oakland City, who ran away from her home about ten days ago, after stealing $530 from her father, is in the Tombs. She was committed by Magistrate Kudlich. Charles H. Osborn, an uncle of the girl, arrived in New York to take her home to her parents, but she refused to go back with him. She was committed to await the arrival of extradition papers, when she will be taken back by force. She said as she was being locked up that she would kill herself at the first opportunity.

A magistrate at Kokomo has established a precedent of interest to bicycle riders. If the new construction of the law stands the test of the higher courts the public will be afforded some protection against reckless scorching. Elmer Crume, a dairyman, while riding a bicycle accidentally collided with M. E. Myers, who filed an affidavit against Crume for assault and battery, he having been knocked down and painfully injured by the wheel. Justice De Haven, before whom the case was tried, found the defendant guilty as charged and fined him $12, which was paid.

The grasshoppers are destroying the growing corn and oats west of Goshen. Several farmers report that they will not cultivate their cornfields, as the grasshoppers have made almost a clean sweep, in many cases eating off the corn to the ground. The oatsfields have also been seriously damaged.

Arthur Hilliars of Caseyville, was taken from his home at that place by a crowd of indignant citizens, in the guise of whitecaps, and unmercifully whipped, after which he was ordered out of town. He went to Brazil to have his wounds dressed after which he will leave the country. It is alleged that Hilliars abused his family.

John Kelley, a groceryman of Fort Wayne, was cleaning his gun, preparatory to a squirrel hunt, when his hand slipped upon the lock. The heavy charge of buckshot passed through two rooms and took effect in the body of his wife, who was seated at the supper table. Mrs. Kelley was badly injured, but will probably recover.

Elmer Wills, aged 19, and residing six miles north of Lebanon, committed suicide. About a year ago he was hypnotized by a traveling doctor, and since that time he had never been free from the hypnotic influence. His mind became deranged. Early in March he was arrested, charged with arson, but released a few days ago as a case of insanity.

THE SILENT SHORE.

By John Bloundelle Burton.

CHAPTER IV.

Two people went away from Lady Chesterton's ball with anything but happiness at their hearts—Ida Raughton and Walter Cundall.

She was able to tell herself, as she sat in her dressing room after her maid had left her, that she had, after all, become engaged to the man whom she really loved; but she had also to acknowledge that, for that other one, her compassion was very great.

She had never loved him, nor did she until this night believe the rumors of society that reached her ears, to the effect that he loved her; but she had liked him very much, and his society had always been agreeable to her.

And, for she was always frank even to herself, she acknowledged that he was a man whom she regarded with some kind of awe; a man whose knowledge of the world was as much above hers as his wealth was above her father's wealth.

Yes, she reflected, he was so much above her that she did not think, in any circumstances, love could have come into her heart for him.

As for him, he hardly knew what to do on that night. He walked back to his house in Grosvenor place (he was too uneasy to sit in his carriage), and, letting himself in, went to his library, where he passed some hours pacing up and down it.

Afterwards, when he was calmer, he went to a large escritoire, and, unlocking it, took out a bundle of papers and read them.

They were a collection of several old letters, a tress of hair in an envelope, which he kissed softly, and two slips of paper which he seemed to read particularly carefully. Then he put them away and said to himself:

"It must be done, there is no help for it. My happiness is gone forever, and I would not wreck the happiness of others; but, in this case, my sin would be beyond recall if I hesitated."

And, again, after a pause, he said to himself: "It must be done."

He rose in the morning at his usual time, though it was nearly six before he flung himself wearily on his bed to snatch some troubled rest, and when he went down stairs to his breakfast he found his secretary, Mr. Stuart, waiting for him.

"West told me that I should find you looking better than ever, Mr. Cundall," he said, "but I cannot honestly say that I do. You look pale and worn."

"I am perfectly well, nevertheless. But I went to a ball last night, and, what with that and traveling all day, I am rather knocked out, but it is nothing. Now, let us get to work on the correspondence, and then we must go into the city."

They began on the different piles of letters, Mr. Cundall throwing over to Stuart all those the handwriting of which he did not recognize, and opening those which he did know himself.

They went to the city together later on, and then they separated; but before they did so, Cundall asked Stuart if he knew what club Lord Penlyn belonged to.

"'Black's,' I fancy, and the 'Voyagers,' but we can see in the directory." And he turned to the court department of that useful work, and found that he was right.

In the evening of two days later Cundall called at "Black's" and learned that Lord Penlyn was in that institution.

All through those two days he had been nerving himself for the interview that was now about to take place, and had at last strung himself up to it.

He had prayed that there might be no cruelty in what he was about to do; but he was afraid!

"How are you, Cundall?" Lord Penlyn said, coming down the stairs behind the porter, and greeting him with cordiality. "I have never had the pleasure of seeing you here before."

Then he looked at his visitor and saw that he was ghastly pale, and he noticed that his hand was cold and damp.

"Oh, I say!" he exclaimed, "aren't you well? Come upstairs and have something."

"I am well, but I have something very serious to say to you, and——"

"Ida is not ill?" the other asked apprehensively, his first thoughts flying to the woman he loved. And the familiar name upon his lips struck to the other's heart.

"She is well, as far as I know. But it is of her that I have come to speak. This club seems full of members; will you come for a stroll in the park? It is close at hand."

"Yes, yes!" Penlyn said, calling to the porter for his hat and stick. "But what can you have to say to me about her?"

Then, as they went down St. James' street, and past Marlborough House into the park, there did come back suddenly to his memory some words he had once overheard about Cundall being in love with the woman who was now his affianced wife.

"Now tell me, Mr. Cundall," he said, "what you have to say to me about my future wife."

"I have come to tell you first," Cundall answered, "that, three nights ago, I asked Ida Raughton to be my wife."

"What!" the other exclaimed, "you asked my future——"

"One moment," Cundall said quietly; "I did not know then that she was to be your future wife. If you will remember, I had only returned to London on that day."

"And you did not know of our engagement?"

"I knew nothing. Let me proceed. In proposing to her and in gaining her love—for she told me that she had consented to be your wife—you deprived me of the only thing in this world I prize, the only thing I wanted. I came back to England with one fixed idea, the idea that she loved me, and that, when I asked her, she would accept me for her husband."

He paused a moment, and Lord Penlyn said:

"While I cannot regret the cause of your disappointment, seeing what happiness it brings me, I am still very sorry to see you suffering so."

Cundall took no notice of this remark, though his soft, dark eyes were fixed upon the younger man as he uttered it. Then he continued:

"Are you a strong man? Do you think you can bear a sudden shock?"

"I do not know what you mean, nor what you are driving at!" Lord Penlyn said, beginning to lose his temper at these strange hints and questions. "I am sorry for your disappointment, in one way, but it is not in your power, nor in that of any one else, to come between the love Miss Raughton and I bear to each other."

"Unfortunately it is in my power and I must do it—temporarily, at least. At present you cannot marry Miss Raughton."

"What! Why not, sir? For what reason, pray?"

"Do not excite yourself! Because she and her father imagine that she is engaged to Lord Penlyn, and you are not Lord Penlyn!"

"It is a lie!" the other said, springing at him in the dusk that had now set in, "and I will kill you for it." But Cundall caught him in a grasp of iron and pushed him back, as he said hoarsely: "It is the truth. Your father had another wife, who died before he married your mother, and he left a son by her. That man is Lord Penlyn."

Gervase Occleve took a step back and reeled on to a seat in the walk.

In a moment there came back to his mind the inn at Le Vocq, in which he had seen that strange entry, and the landlord's tale.

So that woman was his wife and that son a lawful one, instead of the outcast and nameless creature he had pictured him in his mind! But—was this story true?

He stood before Cundall and said:

"I do not know how you are capable of substantiating this extraordinary statement; but you will have to do so, and before witnesses."

"I am fully prepared," Cundall said.

"Then I would suggest, Mr. Cundall, that you should call at my house to-morrow and tell this remarkable tale in full. There will be at least one witness, my friend, Mr. Smerdon."

"I will be there at midday, if you will receive me. And believe me, if it had not been that I could not see Miss Raughton married illegally, and assuming a title to which she had no right, I would have held my peace."

Lord Penlyn had turned away before the last words were spoken, but on hearing them, he turned back again and said:

"Is this secret in your hands only, then, and does it depend upon you alone for the telling? Pray, may I ask who this mysterious Lord Penlyn is whom you have so suddenly sprung upon me?"

"I am he!" the other answered.

"You!" with an incredulous stare.

"You!"

"Yes, I."

CHAPTER V.

"I have heard it said that he is worth from two to three millions," Philip Smerdon said to his friend the next morning, when Penlyn had, for the sixth or seventh time, repeated the whole of the conversation between him and Cundall. "A man of that wealth would scarcely try to steal another man's title. Yet he must either be mistaken or mad."

"He may be mistaken—I must hope he is—but he is certainly not mad. His calmness last night was something extraordinary, and I am convinced that, provided this story is true, he has told it against his will."

"You mean that he only told it to prevent Miss Raughton from being illegally married, or rather, for the marriage would be perfectly legal since no deception was meant, to prevent her from assuming a title to which she had no claim?"

"Yes."

"You do not think that he hopes by divulging this secret—always assuming it to be true—to cause your marriage to be broken off, so that he might have a chance of obtaining Miss Raughton himself? If his story is true, he can still make her Lady Penlyn."

His friend hesitated. "I do not know," he said. "He bears the character of being one of the most honorable men in London. Supposing his story true, I imagine he was right to tell it."

The young man expressed his opinion and spoke as he thought, but he also spoke in a voice broken with sorrow. If what Cundall had told him was the actual case, not only was he not Lord Penlyn, but he was a beggar.

And then Ida Raughton could never be his wife. Even though she might be willing to take him, stripped as he would be of his title and possessions, it was certain that Sir Paul would not allow her to do so.

He began to feel a bitter hatred rising up in his heart. It had been full of pity for that unknown and unnamed brother, whom he had imagined to be in existence somewhere in the world; for this man, who was now to come forward armed with all lawful rights to deprive him of what he had so long been allowed blindly to enjoy, he experienced nothing but the blackest hate.

At twelve o'clock he and Smerdon were ready to receive the new claimant to all he had imagined his, and at twelve o'clock he arrived.

"Before I make any statement," he said, "look at these," and he produced two letters worn with time and with the ink faded. The other took them, and noted they they were addressed to, "My own dear wife," and signed, "Your loving husband, Gervase Occleve." And one of them was headed, "Le Vocq, Auberge Belle-Vue."

"Are they in your father's handwriting?" he asked, and Gervase answered "Yes."

"It was in 1852," Cundall said, "that he met my mother. She was staying in Paris with a distant relative of hers, and they were in the habit of constantly meeting. I bear his memory in no respect—he was a cold-hearted, selfish man. He won her love, but told her that his uncle, whose heir he was, wished him to make a brilliant match. For her sake he was willing to forego it, if she also was willing to make the sacrifice of a private marriage, of living entirely out of the world, of never being presented to any of his friends. They were married in that year in London."

"At what church?" Gervase asked.

"At 'St. Jude's, Marylebone.' Here is the certificate."

Gervase took it, glanced at it, and returned it to him.

"They lived a wandering kind of life, but, in those days, a not altogether unhappy one. But at last he wearied of it—wearied of living in continental towns to which no one of their own country ever came, where they passed under an assumed name, that which had been her maiden name—Cundall. At my birth he became more genial for a year or so, and again he relapsed into his moody and morose state. He began to see that the secret could not be kept forever, now that he had a son; that some day, if I lived, I must be Lord Penlyn. And he did not disguise his forebodings from her, nor attempt to throw off his gloom. She bore with him patiently for a long while—bore his repinings and taunts; but at last she told him that, after all, there was no such great necessity for secrecy, that she was a lady by birth, a wife of whom he need not be ashamed. Then—then he cursed her; and on the next occasion of their dispute he told her that they had better live apart. She took him at his word, and when he woke the next morning she was gone, taking me with her. He never saw her nor me again, and when he heard that she was dead he believed that I was dead also."

"Then he was the deceived, and not the deceiver?" Gervase exclaimed. "He thought that I was really his son and heir."

"Yes, he thought so. My mother's only other relative in the world was her brother, a merchant in Honduras, who was fast amassing a stupendous fortune—the one I now possess. She wrote to him telling him that she had married, that her husband had treated her badly, and that she had left him and resumed her maiden name. His name she never would reveal. My uncle wrote to say that in such circumstances, and being an unmarried man, he would adopt me as his own child, and that I should eventually be his heir. Then he sent money over for my schooling and bringing up."

He paused again, and again he went on; and it seemed as if he was mustering himself for a final effort.

"When I was little over four years old she died. On her deathbed her heart relented, and she thought that she would do for him what appeared to be the greatest service in her power. She wrote to tell him she was dying, and that he would, in a few days, receive confirmation of her death from a sure hand. And she told him that I had died two months before. Poor thing! she meant well, but she was a simple, unworldly woman, and she had no idea of what she was doing."

"Is that all?"

"With the exception of this: When I was twenty-one this letter of my mother's, which no other eyes but mine have ever seen before, was put into my hand. I was then in Honduras, and it had been left in my uncle's care. I came to England shortly afterwards, and there was in my mind some idea of putting in a claim to my birthright. But, on my arrival, I found that another—you—had taken possession of it; and, as I saw you young and happy, and heard you well spoken of, I put away from me, forever, all thoughts of ever taking away from you what you—through no fault of your own—had wrongfully become possessed of."

"Yet now you will do so, because I have gained Ida's love."

"No, no, no!" he answered. Then he said, with a sadness that should have gone to their hearts: "I have been Esau to your Jacob all my life. It is natural you should supplant me now in a woman's love."

"What then do you mean to do, Lord Penlyn?" Gervase asked bitterly. The other started, and said:

"Never call me by that name again. I have given it to you."

"Perhaps," Smerdon said, with a bitter sneer, "because you are not quite sure yet of your own right to it. You would have to prove that there was a male child of this marriage, and then that you were he. That would not be so easy, I imagine."

"There is nothing would be more easy. I have every proof of my birth and my identity."

"And you intend to use them to break off my marriage with Ida Raughton," Gervase Occleve said.

A LAKE THAT TURNS RED.

It Is in Switzerland and It Has a Curious Legend.

Lake Morat, in Switzerland, has a queer habit of turning red about two or three times every ten years. It is a pretty lake, like most of the sheets of water in that picturesque country, and its peculiar freak is attributed to a disposition to celebrate the slaughter of the Burgundians under Charles the Bold on June 21, 1476. But the French say it blushes for the conduct of the Swiss, who in that battle gave the Burgundians no quarter. This year it was redder than ever and had a sinister appearance when the setting sun illuminated its waves.

This phenomenon, of course, has its legend. The old fishermen of the lake, who catch enormous fish called silures, that weigh between twenty-five and forty kilograms, say, when they see the waters of the lake reddening, that it is the blood of the Burgundians. As a matter of fact, some of the bodies of the Burgundians killed in the battle were thrown into the lake, while others were tossed into a grave filled with quicklime. This historical recollection angered the Burgundian soldiers of the victorious armies of the republic in 1798 so much that they destroyed the monument raised in honor of their compatriots who fell heroically in that battle, and Henri Martin very justly reproached them for that piece of vandalism.

It would hardly to do attribute the reddening of the waters of the lake to the blood of the soldiers of Charles the Bold. The coloring is due simply to the presence in large quantities of little aquatic plants called by naturalists oscillatoria rubescens. The curious thing about it is that Lake Morat is the only lake in which this curious growth is developed, and this peculiarity is beginning to interest scientific men.

Well Met.

James Edward Oglethorpe founded the colony of Georgia in 1733, and the houses erected by him formed the beginning of Savannah. After founding the colony he returned to England and received promotion in the army, in which, at the time of his death, he held a commission as general. When a young man General Oglethorpe served in the Austrian army under Prince Eugene.

During this period he was one day sitting at table with a Prince of Wurtemberg. The prince took up a glass of wine, and by a fillip made some of it fly in Oglethorpe's face.

Here was a sore dilemma. To have challenged the insolent prince on the spot might have fixed a quarrelsome character on the young soldier; to have taken no notice of it might have been considered as cowardice. Oglethorpe, therefore, keeping his eye upon the prince, and smiling all the time, as if he took what his highness had done in jest, said:

"Mon prince, that's a good joke, but we do it much better in England," and threw a whole glass of wine in the prince's face.

The prince half rose from his chair, hot with anger; but an old general who sat by checked him and said: "Il a bien fait, mon prince, vous l'avez commencee." (He has done right, my prince; you began it.)

The prince, thus admonished, recovered himself and smiled, and so what might have ended in a tragedy terminated in good humor and an added respect for young Oglethorpe.

Dennis Cannot Be Found.

A letter mailed at West Point, Ind., is now in the Lafayette postoffice addressed thus: "What though the snow be high as any mountain; what though the sleet and rain in torrents pour, so much that earth would seem like one vast fountain. No matter. With this letter swiftly soar to Mr. Garnbaldi D. McGinnis, whom Rumor whispers dwells on Burwell place. As 'D.' implies, his middle name is Dennis; this pointer use his whereabouts to trace."—Indianapolis Sun.

POLITICS OF THE DAY

HEAPING UP EXPENDITURES.

Mr. Cannon, chairman of the House appropriation committee, and Mr. Sayers, the leading Democratic member of the committee, have made their statements regarding expenditures during the session just ended. The total amount appropriated, including permanent annual appropriations, was $515,759,820. This total, which does not include authorized contracts, exceeds that of any previous session, although the present Congress has not had to provide for heavy increase of expenditures on account of pensions, as the fifty-first Congress had.

In a desperate effort to make a respectable showing for his party Mr. Cannon says that $262,315,400 has been added to the interest-bearing debt during the present administration, entailing an additional interest and sinking fund charge, whereas "during the administration of Mr. Harrison the principal of the interest-bearing debt was reduced $258,192,900 and the annual interest charge $10,327,716."

But Mr. Cannon is very careful not to state that during Mr. Cleveland's first administration the principal of the interest-bearing debt was reduced $363,206,960, or $108,104,060, or over 40 per cent., more than during the Harrison administration, while the interest charge was reduced $13,261,779, or $2,934,063, or nearly 30 per cent., more than during the Harrison administration. He is also careful not to state that during the last year of Harrison's administration both the principal of the interest-bearing debt and the interest charge were increased.

Had Mr. Cannon stated these things he would have attracted attention to the fact that Republicans are trying to keep concealed from the public that Republican legislation made it necessary for the present administration to increase the interest-bearing debt.

A Republican Congress reduced the revenues and increased the expenditures until the latter exceeded the former during the last six months of Harrison's administration and created a rapidly increasing deficit. That was one thing. For another and even worse thing that same Republican Congress passed and Harrison signed a silver bill which reduced the gold reserve more than $87,000,000 during the last three years of Harrison's administration, bringing it down close to the $100,000,000 line, and produced the panic of 1893.

These were the Republican acts which converted a large surplus into an increasing deficit, which brought about a persistent run on the treasury gold, which undermined confidence at home and abroad and brought on the panic, which reduced the revenues to a panic basis and which made it necessary to sell bonds not only to sustain the public credit, but also to meet current expenditures.

The fact that Republicans in responsible posts—such men as Cannon—are at so much pains to suppress and dodge the facts above stated proves beyond question that they know their own party is wholly to blame for the disappearance of the gold reserve, for the panic, for the great deficit and consequently for the increase in the interest-bearing debt.—Chicago Chronicle.

Where Is the Flood?

In rebuttal of the oft-repeated statement that this country under the operation of the present tariff is being "flooded with foreign goods," it may be noted that the Treasury statistics show that the value of the importations during 1895, both of free and dutiable goods, was less than the average annual value during the four years 1891-'94, inclusive. That the alleged "flood" will be found very much lower when the statistics for the fiscal year which ends on this coming June 30 are made up is certified by the figures already made public.

Th most noteworthy feature about the decline is as it affects dry goods, and in this respect in the figures for recent months the falling off is still further emphasized. Our usual weekly figures printed last Saturday show that during the current calendar year the dry goods entered at this port amounted in value to $56,179,794, against $66,182,240 during the corresponding period of 1895, a decrease of nearly $13,000,000, or something like 20 per cent. On no class of goods is the decline so marked as in importations of woolens, which have shown constant falling off during the present calendar year.

This falling off in imports is causing serious anxiety to the Treasury officials, since to it is due in a large degree the unexpected increase in the nation's deficit. Had the importations kept up to the level of last year the duties collected would have gone a long way toward balancing the Treasury's income and outgo, but dull trade and conservatism on the part of buyers have prevented this happy consummation. It may be noted here that, although our importations of woolen goods show so heavy a decline, our takings of foreign wools show a large and steadily growing increase, indicating certainly that domestic manufacturers are very far from wholly idle, and probably that they are taking advantage of the demand for fabrics composed in a greater or less proportion of the luster wools now so favored by fashion.—Dry Goods Economist.

How Will McKinleyism Help You?

If McKinley is elected President tariff taxes will be increased. How will that help you?

Higher taxes on imports will make dearer goods of all kinds. How will that help you?

With more protection against foreign competition trusts and monopolies will be able to charge higher prices for their products and make greater fortunes. How will that help you?

The manufacturers who have put up large bribery funds to elect McKinley will get their money back through legislative favors. How will that help you?

When the McKinley tariff is restored raw materials now on the free list will be taxed. This will injure important American industries. How will it help you?

McKinleyism was thoroughly tested from September, 1890, to August, 1894. During half of that period the country suffered from the worst panic in its history; trade and industry were at a standstill, factories and mills were closed, and millions of workers and farmers brought almost to ruin. It is fair to assume that the effect of protection in the future will be the same as in the past. If so, how will it help you?

Protection is a scheme devised to make a few persons rich at the expense of the masses. If you are one of the common people, think these things over and ask yourself: "How will higher taxes and restricted trade help me?"

Courage!

There are some weak-kneed Democrats who regard the coming Presidential contest with misgiving. They point to the reverses of recent years and to the dissension on the currency question as indications that the Democratic party is doomed to defeat.

We do not underrate the gravity of these matters, but we do not deem them decisive. In 1872 the party was so hopeless of success that it accepted the liberal Republican candidate as its own. Four years later, under the leadership of Tilden, the Democracy rallied with renewed courage at the polls and defeated the Republican party, then in the plenitude of its power—having enjoyed the spoils of office for over thirty years.

In 1880 the party should have renominated Tilden despite his own objections. It would have marched to victory with no other watchword than a public demand that the treason and fraud which deprived Tilden of the Presidency in 1872 should be openly and emphatically rebuked. Many Republicans who felt a sense of shame at the great larceny would have joined in the overwhelming condemnation which the crime would have received at the hands of the American people.

Although routed and disappointed, the irrepressible Democracy re-formed its ranks, and won in 1884 the memorable victory which made Cleveland President and prepared the way for the second decisive triumph in 1892.

These disasters and successes teach the eloquent lesson that the Democratic party is unconquerable. It is as immortal as the republic itself. It is based upon principles which the American people will never surrender. It is associated with glorious eras in our history. It has given the country statesmen of masterly ability and ardent patriotism. It is permeated with wise conservatism, and at the same time is in the full vigor of immortal youth. It represents—more than any other party—the plain people, the hard-working wage-earners, the toiling farmers, the enterprising employers who have no hand in unlawful trusts or combinations.

This noble Democratic party needs only to unfurl the banner of popular rights and honest government in order to win another great victory. It can, by firm resolution, stem the senseless, shallow cry for a change in administration and retain, with the public approval, the guidance of the ship of state.—New York News.

Fake Bycycle Stories Reported.

Persons intending to take up bicycling will do well not to wait for those twelve-dollar wheels which were promised some time ago from Japan. Word has already reached us in newspaper correspondence that the Japanese themselves, when they use bicycles, prefer those of American manufacture, and now United States Minister Dun, home from Japan on a vacation, says the Japanese bicycle at $12 is a myth. The Japs make a sort of wheel, as they make a great many things, but the finest skill in Japan is utterly unequal to a bicycle as we have it here. Practically all the wheels in use in the Flowery Kingdom are made in the United States or Europe. Industrially, we have nothing to fear from Japan.—New York Advertiser (Rep.).

Why Do They Give Their Money?

Hundreds of thousands of dollars were contributed by Mark Hanna and other millionaires to the fund which Senator William E. Chandler and other eminent Republicans asserted was to be used to buy McKinley's nomination. Millions of dollars will now be fried out of the manufacturers and monopolists in order to corrupt the voters and elect the agent of the trusts President of the United States. Will the Republican farmer or workingman, who thinks of voting for McKinley because he is the party candidate, explain what the men who give their money to buy votes expect to get in return? If it is legislation to benefit manufacturers by making higher prices, how will that affect the people who buy things?

No False Pretenses.

Every vote for McKinley will count in favor of more taxes in time of peace; of high tariff walls against foreign commerce; of duties on raw materials now free for our factories, and of dearer necessities and comforts for the masses of the American people. Humbug promises of prosperity should blind no voter to the real issue in the coming campaign.

Queer Conditions of a Will.

A Russian merchant prince recently died leaving a legacy of about £160,000 to his four nieces. But, being impressed with the saying that pride goeth before destruction it was stipulated in the will that before receiving her legacy each niece should have worked continuously for fifteen months either as chambermaid, washerwoman or farm servant. The three executors of the will are enjoined to see that the condition is scrupulously respected. The four legatees have, therefore, gone to work as farm hands and servants. But though the conditions are hard, 863 offers of marriage have already come in, and seedy noblemen in all directions are ready to put up titles at the lowest market prices.

GOWNS AND GOWNING

WOMEN GIVE MUCH ATTENTION TO WHAT THEY WEAR.

Brief Glances at Fancies Feminine, Frivolous, Mayhap, and Yet Offered in the Hope that the Reading Prove Restful to Wearied Womankind.

Gossip from Gay Gotham.

REPARATIONS are being made for a return to fashionableness of the tight dress sleeve. Just at present the bishop sleeve is in great favor on fancy and shirt waists, and summer dresses generally show no signs of lessening fullness, but remember that summer would not be chosen as the time for such a change, and prepare for a quick shift in the autumn. The designers are busily making ready for it, and some of their models are certainly inviting. Those shown in the accompanying illustrations will be incorporated in gowns for late summer and fall, and it then remains for women to indorse or refuse them. Recalling how long large sleeves of one sort or another have been stylish, it is safe to guess that tight ones will soon come in one shape or another.

Naturally the first attempts in this direction do not constitute a startling change, but are more in the nature of a compromise, still some of them are pronounced departures. Sleeves are seen that fit tightly from wrist to shoulder. Over the shoulder, rather as part of the neck finish than as an addition to the sleeve, a little frill may hang, or there may be a slight draping—as if a lace edged handkerchief were folded cornerwise, the point under the arm, the ends tied on the top of the shoulder and the edge of the handkerchief draping the sides of the arm a bit at the top. Such fullness or drapery as there is is positively away up at the top of the arm, and frequently at the sides of the top, so that the line of the arm from wrist up over the shoulder is unbroken. Evening gowns are made with the arm exposed and undraped from the wrist to the tiny line of shoulder strap on top, while an arrangement of puffs set on the bodice under the arm spreads to either side of the arm at the top. Another daring change is shown in the first picture. Here is a dress of biscuit-colored silk, its sleeve fitting tightly from wrist to shoulder seam and armhole. A frill is then set in the armhole, which falls over the top of the arm. The frill has a little heading of pleated mauve satin that stands up smartly on the top of the shoulder. In many cases this frill is slit, and that makes more apparent the tight fit of the sleeve beneath. Such a sleeve seems to add much to a woman's height, and she who has nice arms is sure to hail the return of a close fit for them as a good thing.

A SOP TO THE ADMIRERS OF PUFFS.

For her who cannot all at once give up her beloved puffs, there is a sleeve that fits closely from wrist to shoulder, and then is reinforced by a puff perched very high up on the arm and frequently divided on the very top of the arm, so that the tight fit shows. Such a sleeve is very dressy, and when the puff is made of light and gauzy stuff that appears nowhere else about the dress, one realizes that its removal will not interfere with the harmony of the gown and will leave it with an entirely undraped sleeve. In the example sketched for the second picture, the sleeve puff was organdie, and the tight sleeve and bodice were of linon, over which came embroidered linon.

In the next picture is presented an ingenious compromise, a sleeve that at the first seems to be only the drooping-puff-top and close-fit-below sleeve that has been so generally worn, but it is really a sleeve that fits closely all the way up, and the puff, its outlines carefully following those of the long popular sleeve, is set on at the back of the arm where it gives the usual outline to the whole bodice, but at the same time does not interfere with the lines of the arm itself. When the puff is made of a material contrasting with the rest of the sleeve the arm, as it shows close fitted, becomes the more conspicuous, but as a rule this transition sleeve endeavors to make itself inconspicuous by the use of one material. But one fabric was employed in this gown, tan cloth, which was simply trimmed with ecru embroidery. Even greater concession to the tendency to cling to a fashion once adopted is accomplished when the tight-fitting part, though it follows, the outlines of the arm, still wrinkles and does not look too plain. The objection to this "dreadful plainness" is chiefly made by possessors of arms that are just a little too thin.

A HALF-WAY COMPROMISE.

EVEN ELBOW SLEEVES TURN PROPHETIC

The leg-o'-mutton sleeve that a little while ago seemed to hold its characteristics so rigidly now would not be able to recognize any summons to "return to our mutton," for it is pushed and squeezed out of all resemblance, except a general one, to itself. The loose portion is now pushed up very high on the arm and inflated in bulges that are planned carefully not to interfere with the general contour of the arm, except in so arbitrary a way that the natural outline is emphasized. Sometimes the swell takes the shape of a pair of blown-up puffs that extends straight out from the shoulder and at right angles to the top of the arm; at other times the inflations are at right angles to the sides of the arm. This last effect is gained by gathering the fullness into a series of puckerings on the top of the arm, and often from these puckerings a roll of ribbon will extend in epaulette fashion along the top of the shoulder, finishing with a little bow at the side of the neck band, thus adding to the slant of the shoulder. Other tight sleeves are so deftly draped with lace at the top along the sides and under the arm above the elbow that an effect of plumpness is suggested, though really the outline of the arm is masked.

The elbow puff is too dressy and too becoming to the woman whose fore arm and elbow are pretty to be dispensed with at once, but it is significant that its new designs, too, point the way to tight sleeves. As shown in the fifth of these sketches, the puff is pushed up high and the sleeve is brought to the elbow by a close fitting band or cuff finished with a fall of lace that hangs behind the elbow. In a little while the cuff will be all there is of the elbow sleeve, and will have extended over the shoulder, while the lace at the elbow will constitute the only elaboration of the sleeve, except the pretty curves of the arm itself. This upper puff is not only subject to being rolled up on the arm so far that it is hardly a puff at all, but it is slit lengthwise and then pushed toward the back of the arm, exposing at the front a tight fitting effect, while at the back the sleeve has still the look of the tight lower sleeve finished with the puff top. This treatment is displayed in the final picture, where blue, green and red striped silk gives the sleeves, and green silk the remainder. In the preceding gown the fabric was white silk striped with pale blue, the plastron being richly appliqued white satin.

PUFFS THAT ARE PRESENT BY SUFFERANCE.

Objectors to a return of tight sleeves declare that padding of the arms will be resorted to by women whose arms are not big enough to stand the test. They'd better take to exercising. Rub the arm round and round, clasping the arm with thumb and finger and then twisting this ring about the arm from wrist to shoulder, making the ring so close that the twisting is not easy. Remember that to rub up and down—that is, from the wrist to the shoulder, is to reduce the flesh on the arm, while the round and round motion increases the size and adds to the muscles. Nothing but patient kneading and rubbing with oil will help bony or sharp elbows, and no padding can be successfully applied to them. Remember, too, that a sleeve too tight stops the circulation, makes the hands red and tends to attenuate the arm. A sleeve may be made very tight at the wrist and very long, and without bagging it may be rather loose above the elbow. This will give an effect of taper to the arm. It seems a pity that the fashion of slipping down the fullness or the elaboration from the shoulder to whenever it is most becoming to the arm seems not to be longer countenanced. As for the woman with pretty arms, and she is usually a girl that is pretty generally, when you suggest tight sleeves to her she responds with a smile of welcome that will make the coming change progress rapidly.

OFFICIAL PAPER OF DeKALB COUNTY

JAMES A. BARNS, Editor.

Registered at the Auburn, Indiana, office as second-class matter.

THURSDAY,.....JUNE 25, 1896.

Notice

Notice is hereby given that the County board of Review will meet at the office of the county commissioners, in the court house in the town of Auburn, DeKalb county, Indiana, on Monday July 6, 1896, and remain in session not to exceed twenty days, for the assessment review and equalization of personal property for the various towns and townships in said county.

F. A. Borst,
Auditor.

Off For Indianapolis

The west-bound Wabash train this morning carried numerous passengers to Indianapolis where the Democratic State Convention is in session. They all go there with the expectation of having an interesting time as the money question will be one of the great importance. Among those who took the train at Auburn we noticed, John Robbins, C. M. Brown, Dr. Nusbaum, D. D. Metcalf, C. C. Shaffer, John Hoffelder, G. I. Patterson, Silas Nugen Editor J. A. Barns and wife, F. A. Borst, Henry Boozer of Waterloo, and Jake Hook, M. E. Gardner C. P. Urie, and John Sawvel, of Butler, and Mahlon Baker, of St. Joe, were also on the train.

Convention Notes.

Funny things happen in a big convention. Chairman Barney got mixed up on names, and insisted on announcing "W. B. Brown" as the nominee for representative. "W. B." had to explain that he was not the lucky Brown.

Newville got stuck on Coroner, and voted "Huges 1; Comesky, 1; Blank, 3." But that's all right, Newville has a coroner of her own now, if he did forget to qualify for the first half year.

Some one got so excited that he wore off another man's coat, and it took him half an hour to find it. It was to 1—that many sizes too big for him.

Smithfield divided its vote by a common divisor" the size of which was determined by the number of candidates. Smithfield's eye is fixed on the future, with a strong gaze that nothing can draw aside.

Several ladies attended, and smoking was stopped out of deference to them. That is right, more ladies ought to come, and would come, if they found out they would not be strangled with tobacco smoke.

Dan. Leas, chairman of Grant, found 16 votes for, Dannells and 1 for Christoffel, when he passed the hat in his delegation. It was a coincidence that tickled the crowd.

Obituary

Levi Shutt was born in Springfield township, Summit Co. Ohio, November 10, 1834. Died near Spencerville Ind., June 14, 1896, age 61 years, 7 months and 4 days.

In 1848 with his widowed mother and brothers he moved to and settled in De Kalb county, near the village of Spencerville. In December 1865, he was united in marriage to Miss Louisa Clemmer. To this union was born two daughters who with the widow survive him. He was the youngest of a family of ten children, five of them having preceded him to the grave. He was an affectionate husband, an indulgent father, a kind neighbor and a steadfast friend. For two years he was confined to a chair and bore his affliction without complaint.

The funeral was held in the M. E. church in Spencerville, Rev. E. W. Erick of the Ev. Lutheran church officiating.

The Motor-Cycle.

The combined management of the Great John Robinson and Franklin Brothers' Enormous Shows Combined attended the recent speed contest of "Horseless Carriages," at Chicago, and wisely concluded to secure the most thouroughly finished and speedy of the numerous new vehicles there tested. Other circus managers were also there, and all bid for the "winner." The well-known courage and unlimited financial resources of John Robinson and Franklin Brothers, together with that resolute determination to at all times secure the best in all branches, prompted these well-known managers to outbid all others and they did secure the most wonderful achievement in science, the "Motocycle"—the mode of conveyance in the twentieth century—a mechanical contrivance that can run 60 miles an hour over ordinary country roads. It can cover 100 miles an hour on a speed course, and the cost of running this wonderful "Horseless Carriage" 100 miles but sixty cents (60c.). It will be seen daily in the Free Parade of these great shows, and during the afternoon and evening performances will be put to trial tests of speed on the immence hippodrome track. Of course this is but one of the many features of these combined great shows that will be seen daily in the magnificent double parade, which by the way is more than a mile in length. Auburn July 1.

Death of Jacob Becker.

Jacob J. Becker, one of Garrett's early and most respected citizens died on Sunday, June 14, 1896, aged 79 years and 10 days.

He was born in Stark county, Ohio, June 4, 1817, and married to Elizabeth Bair, September 17, 1855, who still survives him. To this union no children were born.

In his early manhood he followed the carpenters' and also the shoemakers' trade till in 1864, he went to farming on the place he purchased in Richland townsaip, which on account of feeble health he left and went to Garrett.

On Tuesday of last week he was buried. The first services was held at the home and conducted by Rev. Wm. P. Pearce of the Baptist church, who read choice selections of scripture and prayer. Then the procession of carriages wended their way to "Union church" The services were conducted by Rev Brosy, of Auburn, English Lutheran, and Rev. Engelman of the German Lutheran churches.

—J. C. St. Clair is able to walk out a little now and then though still rather feeble.

—Mrs. Robbins, step mother of our townsman Albert Robbins, died this morning. She will be buried Saturday.

—Jacob Souder of Leo, was here today and paid his COURIER a year ahead. So also did Mike Whetsell, both have thanks for promptness.

—Mr. Ashley is putting down a new sidewalk in front of his residence property on south Jackson street, now occupied by Henry Lockwood.

—Charlie Speer of Waterloo was over here to-day. He is still employed on the great lakes, being now a cook on the Bulgaria. He is home on a short visit.

—It would be hard to convince a man suffering from bilious colic that his agony is due to a microbe with an unpronounceble name. But one dose of DeWitt's Colic & Cholera Cure will convince him of its power to afford instant relief. It kills pain. Davenport, the druggist.

A telegram was received here at about 11 o'clock to-day announcing the death of William Craig at Cantdellville, Kentucky. He was living there with his son Sherman and brother Joseph. His remains will be shipped to Summit for burial to-morrow.

—Rev. J. K. Walts, John Richards, Ralph Robbins and Carl Brown returned last evening from Bluffton where they were attending the Epworth League convention. They all report a good time. Two receptions were tendered the convention. One in the afternoon by the Baptist young people and the other in the evening by the home chapter. The meeting was very interesting throughout.

—Eli Hill, Lumber City, Pa., writes: "I have been suffering from piles for twenty-five years and thought my case incurable. DeWitt's Witch Hazel Salve was recommended to me as a pile cure, so I bought a box and it performed a permanent cure." This is only one of thousands of similar cases. Eczema, sores and skin diseases yield quickly when it is used. Davenport, the druggist.

—Bishop & Lackey's show window has in a fine display of musin. An appropriate display is a large picture of McKinley in front of which is several bolts of muslin bearing the label of the White House. At the top of the label and the lower corners are the portraits of Washington, Grant and Lincoln and in the center is a fine view of the White House. McKinley has his eyes on it, and will probably land there. Bishop & Lackey have long been striving to please the people with genuine bargains, and they are getting there.

—The COURIER is pleased to announce the arrival of a new seven pound boy at the home of Mr. and Mrs. F. L. Welsheimer on West Ninth street. The little stranger arrived at 9 a. m. Dr. Vesta Swarts was in attendance.

—Home enterprise should be encouraged. Yesterday the little DAILY in Auburn, gave the dispatches from St. Louis up to the time of going to press at 4.30 just before the nominations. All city dailies gave us the same news the next forenoon.

—Dr. Baxter is paying special attention to Diseases of Children also Diseases of the Liver, Stomach and Nervous system. tf —Persons who have a coughing spell every night on account of a tickling sensation in the throat, may overcome it at once by a dose of One minute Cough Cure. Davenport, the druggist.

—"Invitations are out" for the dedication of the Garrett Electric Light and Water Works Plant, on Tuesday, June 30. A good program is arranged.

—We are anxious to do a little good in this world and can think of no pleasanter or better way to do it by recommending One Minute Cough Cure as a preventative of pneumonia, consumption and other serious lung troubles that follow neglected colds. Davenport, the druggist.

—It will interest Auburn people to know that McKinley's wife was Miss Ida Saxton, a cousin of T. J. Saxton of this place. If by any chance, McKinley becomes president, we shall insist that our friend T. J. shall get a cabinet position.

—When we consid r that the intestin es are about five times as large as the body, we can realize the intense suffering experienced when they become inflamed. DeWitt's Colic and Cholera Cure subdues inflammation at once and completely removes the difficulty. Davenport, the druggist.

—Mothers will find Chamberlain's Cough Remedy especially valuable for croup and whooping cough It gives prompt relief and is safe and pleasant. We have sold it for several years and it has never failed to give the most perfect satisfaction. G. W. Richards, Duquesne Pa. Sold by Davenport the Druggist 26

—Mr. James Perdue, an old soldier residing at Monroe, Mich., was severely afflicted with rheumatism but received prompt releif from pain by using Chamberlain's Pain Balm. He says: "At times my back would ache so badly that I could hardly raise up. If I had not gotten relief I would not be here to write these few lines. Chamberlain's Pain Balm has done me a great deal of good and I feel very thankful for it." For sale by Davenport the Druggist. 26

—There is nothing that causes women greater discomfort and misery than the constantly recurring Headache. Men suffer less with Headache. "My wife's health was very indifferent, having Headache continually, and just two packages of Simmons Liver Regulator released her from all Headache and gave tone and vigor to her whole system. I have never regretted its use." —M. B. DeBord, Mt. Vernon, Ky.

Saturday's Daily.

—"Wake up Jacob, day is breaking!" So said DeWitt's Little Early Risers' to the man who had taken them to arouse his sluggish liver. Davenport, the druggist.

—Joseph Gerig who lives near Collingswood on the Allen county line died yesterday. His funeral will be held to-morrow afternoon.

—Small in size, but great in results DeWitt's Little Early Risers act gently but thoroughly, curing indigestion, dyspepsia and constipation. Small pill, safe pill, best pill. Davenport the druggist.

—While the Democrats were nomintating a ticket at the opera house this afternoon to be elected this fall, the Auburn Military Band was giving an open air concert to nearly as large a crowd, in the court house park.

—Frank Borst returned this morning from Canton, Ohio, where he had been on business. He says the crowds that keep coming to pay their respects to McKinley, are simply enormous. Before one crowd leaves another comes. It will be a good think for the hotels, restaurants, saloons etc. there for about six months.

—Wm. Carr and the COURIER senior, are almost twins, he being only five days the older. We compared notes the other day, and then he pulled out two silver coins, each bearing the lucky date of 1832, and now each old fellow has a pocket piece of free silver, and it is 16 to 1 that each will hang onto his piece.

—James Reed's aunt, Mrs. Jerome Galloway, of Chippewa Falls, Wisc., reached here yesterday, and will make a short visit with the friends and relatives. She is the youngest sister, Margaret, of the late Mrs. Elizabeth Reed.

—John Treesh is working at Garrett, putting down cement walks, and has been so engaged for some time. Our Garrett friends should know that he is a boss hand at this. His walks never rust, rot, chip, crack, peal or die. They are like the everlasting hill, only much more level.

Is SIMMONS LIVER REGULATOR—don't forget to take it. The Liver gets sluggish during the Winter, just like all nature, and the system becomes choked up by the accumulated waste, which brings on Malaria, Fever and Ague and Rheumatism. You want to wake up your Liver now, but be sure you take SIMMONS LIVER REGULATOR to do it. It also regulates the Liver—keeps it properly at work, when your system will be free from poison and the whole body invigorated.

You get THE BEST BLOOD when your system is in A1 condition, and that will only be when the Liver is kept active. Try a Liver Remedy once and note the difference. But take only SIMMONS LIVER REGULATOR—it is SIMMONS LIVER REGULATOR which makes the difference. Take it in powder or in liquid already prepared, or make a tea of the powder; but take SIMMONS LIVER REGULATOR. You'll find the RED Z on every package. Look for it.

—The children's meeting at the Lutheran church was a decided success. Every available seat in the church was occupied. There were speeches by a dozen or more of the little boys and girls. Also several songs which were all well rendered. A dialogue by the little Misses Neva Beaty and Sidney Farmer deserves special mention. Each had their dollies. Miss Beaty acted the good, kind mother, and Miss Farmer was directly the opposite, and was "kinder out of fix." They won loud applause.

WATERLOO.

Saturday evening the members of the L. A. L. of the M. E. and Christian churches served cake and ice cream on Boozer's platform until a late hour.

Wednesday afternoon sixteen of Rev. Yager's converts of last winter were baptized at the creek. Miss Blanche Gette was sprinkled; most, if not all of the others were immersed.

Miss Phebe Walker is again spending her vacation in Waterloo.

The housekeepers of Waterloo are generally very much exercised on account of the much to be dreaded Buffalo moth They have taken up their quarters in most houses and commenced their ravages. The ladies of the various denominations are calling meetings to clean the churches and prevent the carpets from being ruined if possible. Mrs. Barr had two dresses ruined. Carpets are being taken up for the second time this spring. The new moth seems expressly fond of silk, next to it, being wool.

Saturday noon Judge R. R. Sloane took his sister, Mrs. J. U. Winslow, completely by surprise by walking into her home as if it were an every day habit. He had written the week before that he would visit her the next week if convenient, but owing to carpets being up in most rooms, and furniture, books, etc., stacked in the others, waiting for masons, carpenters and others, she could only regret and postpone the visit until the house was completed. Judge and Mrs. Sloane, Miss Mary Sloane, Mr. F. M. Sloane, wife and two children and Mr. John Ford and wife were on their way to Wawasee, invited guests of Col. Lily and wife, when Mr. Slane found he could come over on the noon train and leave on the 2:55 train south. Tongues flew, and both enjoyed the brief visit.

Republican National Convention in St. Louis.

PARTY HOSTS THERE.

Perfect Sea of Faces Confronts the Speaker.

C. W. Fairbanks, of Indiana, the Temporary Chairman—Permanent Organization Quickly Made with Senator Thurston, of Nebraska, as Presiding Officer—The Great Auditorium Filled to the Roof—Early Sessions Are Short—Convention Scenes and Incidents.

On Tuesday at noon the biggest national convention that has been held by the Republican party since its organization in 1856, when Fremont was nominated, was called to order in the flag-festooned hall which the people of St. Louis erected for its accommodation. It was a great procession that toiled up to the convention hall under the noonday sun. Nine hundred and nine delegates, a like number of alternates and thousands of spectators were admitted to the auditorium. Tickets were in high demand, and all St. Louis—that is, all St. Louis which had a pull on the big sergeant-at-arms—strained a point to be present.

The following table shows the number of delegates each State and territory sent to the convention:

Alabama	22	Montana	6
Alaska	2	Nebraska	16
Arizona	2	Nevada	6
Arkansas	16	New Hampshire	8
California	18	New Jersey	20
Colorado	8	New Mexico	6
Connecticut	12	New York	72
Delaware	6	North Carolina	22

Total, 909. Necessary for a choice, 455.

Of this total there were no less than 138 contested seats, distributed as follows: Alabama 20, California 4, Delaware 6, Florida 8, Georgia 10, Kentucky 2, Louisiana 12, Mississippi 18, New York 12, North Carolina 2, Pennsylvania 2, South Carolina 18, Tennessee 4, Texas 30, Virginia 4 and Arizona 6.

In order to facilitate the distribution of the tickets Col. Byrnes had them tied in bundles—one for each member of the national committee, one for Col. Byrnes' chief assistant, one containing thirteen tickets for the members of the National Republican League, one for the Woman's League, one for Col. Byrnes' personal use, one for the Woman's Republican Association, one for the College League and individual tickets for the distinguished guests. The fifty-one members of the national Republican committee adopted their own methods of distributing the tickets given to them. Most of them handed them out to their friends and political allies from their rooms or their State headquarters in the various hotels.

Arrangement of Seats.

There were 500 seats on the platform, all of which were taken up by the distinguished guests. The fifty-one members of the national committee sat immediately in the rear of the speaker's stand, while to either side of it were the 550 representatives of the press, including the Associated and United Press. The delegates were seated by States directly in front of the speaker's stand in the very center of the hall, while the alternates were seated on either side. Surrounding these were the thousands of seats for the spectators, with as many more in the gallery that completely encircled the big hall. There was no lack of conveniences in the great hall. Half a dozen long-distance telephones connected it with every important city east of the Mississippi river, and not less than 200 telegraph wires placed San Francisco, Winnipeg, Montreal, Boston, New York, Philadelphia, Washington, Baltimore, Jacksonville, New Orleans, Galveston and all intermediate towns and cities in direct communication with the convention. For the especial use of the representatives of McKinley, Reed, Allison and other presidential candidates, sound proof boxes containing long-distance telephones were placed at the foot of the stairs in the rear of the speaker's stand. From these it was possible for the friends of the candidates to talk directly to them and consult them on every important move that was made or contemplated in the convention hall.

Crowd Begins to Gather.

At 10 o'clock the band of forty pieces took its place in the gallery above the speaker's stand, and at 10:20 struck up the rousing air, "Black America." Soon after the spectators began to stream through the entrances which opened into the lower gallery. Hundreds of assistant sergeants-at-arms and ushers were scattered about the hall and galleries. Just before 11 o'clock the thunder of arriving clubs outside the hall was heard, and the Alabama delegation appeared at the main entrance and marched to their seats in the pit. The contesting delegations from the State of Delaware, both in full force, the one headed by ex-Senator Higgins and the other by Mr. Addicks, were among the first to arrive.

At 11:20 Senator Carter, chairman of the national committee, who was to call the convention to order, arrived and gave his final instructions to the secretaries and reading clerks. Within a few minutes the delegations began crowding into their places. The arrival of the notables, however, was not attended by any demonstrations. The most famous of the Republican leaders seemed to be unrecognized from the galleries, but were warmly greeted by their friends on the floor. Senator Lodge, who is at the head of Reed's New England delegation, and who was the general of the radical politicians, was besieged on every hand as he walked down the aisle. The venerable "Dick" Thompson, of Indiana, who participated in the Clay-Jackson campaign of 1832 and has been a conspicuous figure at every Republican convention since the organization of the party, attracted much attention. He bears his 87 years sturdily and looked full of vigor. The Ohio delegation, headed by the dashing Foraker and doughty Hanna, who as McKinley's manager has made himself famous within a few months in the world of politics, passed down to their places, directly in front of the speaker's stand, without a demonstration of any kind. All was confusion on the floor in the final moments preceding the calling of the convention to order.

Shoulder to shoulder in a compact square a thousand men sat and faced the speaker's stand. Backed up in tiers that touched the very girders of the hall roof a sea of faces, eager and expectant, reflected the grim earnestness of the chief actors in the arena below. Overhead a white banner, bearing a design of an eagle carrying a ribbon inscribed "Republican Prosperity," furnished a standard and battle cry for the assembled warriors. Upon the hearts of the champions, as upon the hearts of their alternates, glittering badges bespoke the purpose for which the multitude had assembled, and, as in the tournaments sturdy yeomen prided themselves in disporting the colors of their leaders, so, even to the topmost ring of the surrounding amphitheater of faces, ribbons innumerable peeked out between the shoulders of spectators to bear witness of the enthusiasm that thrilled like a discharge of electricity the entire gathering.

When the big hall was filled with people, when the banners designating the location of the States were set in place, the bands began to play, and the great speakers and statesmen and politicians were assembled there, it was a sight unrivaled by any national gathering of a political party ever held on American soil. The chairman of the convention looked down upon a spectacle not exceeded in human interest by any previous gathering in the political history of the country. The hall formed a fitting environment. The decorations were simple, but as striking as a repetition of flags and portraits could be made. Red, white and blue bunting covered the huge trusses, and the walls were relieved by huge panels bearing pictures of great Americans—Washington, Lincoln, Grant, Sherman, Farragut, Garfield. Interspersed were shields in the national colors, flags and gaudy lanterns.

The hands of the clock were at 12:30 when Chairman Carter of Montana unwaistcoated and with widespreading shirt bosom, stepped forward and with three fierce cracks of his gavel, by way of preliminary, sought to make his voice pierce the general rustle. The attempt was a futile one, however. He was exhorting the supernumeraries who crowded the aisles between delegates' seats to "please retire." These gentlemen failed to hear him, but his injunction was rapidly carried into effect by hustling badged officials, who swept down the aisles with more vigor than ceremony. Then there was an interval of comparative quiet, while Mr. Carter announced the prayer by Rabbi Sale. The thousands struggled up to their feet when they caught the significance of the rabbi's outstretched hands and stood for three minutes with bowed heads. The rabbi prayed with open eyes, and applause followed his prayer.

MARCUS A. HANNA.

Chairman Fairbanks' Speech.

The first real demonstration of the convention came when Chairman Carter introduced Charles W. Fairbanks of Indiana as the temporary presiding officer. William H. Sutherland of the New York delegation seconded Mr. Fairbanks' nomination, and his selection was indorsed by the unanimous vote of the delegates. As Mr. Fairbanks stepped forward to deliver his speech a wave of applause ran around the galleries. He spoke from memory, with an occasional reference to a pad he half concealed in his left hand. His allusion to the protective tariff elicited an outburst of McKinley enthusiasm, which was repeated when he reached that portion of his speech enunciating the Republican doctrine of currency, and the demonstration reached its climax when he announced the unalterable opposition of the party to a "50-cent dollar." As he closed with a declaration that the issue was protection and honest money, against free trade and free silver, the convention heartily cheered.

Mr. Fairbanks then assumed the gavel and the real work of the convention began. William Lamb of Virginia moved the adoption of the rules of the last convention to govern this, pending further action, and for the roll-call of States, in response to which the various State chairmen were to announce their delegates. At the suggestion of Gen. Grosvenor, the lists were handed up to the platform to be read by the clerk.

The announcement of Henry M. Teller to be Colorado's man on the resolutions committee gave the silver men their first chance to make their presence known, and they improved it by shrill cheers which had their center in the Colorado section. There were more cheers for Senator Dubois of Idaho, the young silver leader; for Gen. Lew Wallace, the author-politician and friend of ex-President Harrison; for Henry Cabot Lodge, whose name brought a flutter of flags which the Bay

State men had tied to their canes, and for Merriam of Minnesota. When New York was reached John Raines was complimented and Edward Lauterbach got a volley. Gen. Grosvenor's name was applauded, and Foraker received a quick burst of sharp cheering.

At 1:50 Grosvenor moved that the convention adjourn until Wednesday morning at 10. The motion was carried, and there was a confused rush for the entrances.

WEDNESDAY MORNING.

Convention Permanently Organized with Thurston as Chairman.

The gavel was wielded Wednesday morning by Temporary Chairman Fairbanks, who was obliged to hammer vigorously when, at 11:40 o'clock, he attempted to quell the tumult into working order. On the platform at his left stood the portly form of Mark Hanna, and beside him, with a friendly hand on his shoulder and pouring some confidences into Mr. Hanna's ear, was Thomas Carter of Montana, the retiring chairman of the national committee. For five minutes Mr. Fairbanks rested on his oars while the ushers perspired in futile attempts to persuade or compel compliance with the chairman's request. The convention was in comparative order upon the introduction of Dr. Wilbur G. Williams, pastor of the Union Methodist Episcopal Church of St. Louis, who made the prayer. As he lifted his head at the conclusion of the prayer the crowd sank back in their seats and the convention was again under way.

Senator Lodge, of Massachusetts, rose to ask for the committee on resolutions the privilege of sitting during the progress of the convention, reporting that the sub-committee had completed the platform, and that it was being considered by the full committee. Minor matters were brought to the attention of the convention by Powell Clayton, of Arkansas, and by a colored delegate from Alabama.

The chairman's call for the report of the committee on credentials met no response and that committee was passed. The report of the committee on permanent organization was received and adopted 'mid loud protestations from some of the dissenters.

When the reading clerk, who intoned the committee's report to the house, announced the name of John M. Thurston of Nebraska to be permanent chairman there was an eruption of flags and cheers from the delegates.

The other permanent officers elected were:

Secretary—Colonel Charles W. Johnson, of Minnesota.

Assistant secretaries—W. E. Riley, of Kentucky; H. H. Smith, of Michigan; A. E. Humphrey, of New York; and A. W. Mahlor, of Maryland.

Official stenographer—Francis E. Burke, of Pittsburg.

Sergeant-at-arms—Timothy E. Byrnes, of Minnesota.

Assistants to the sergeant-at-arms—W. P. Huxford, of Washington; Charles E. Stone, of Illinois; and G. D. Smith, of Oklahoma.

Reading clerks—J. H. Stone, of Michigan; F. H. Wilson, of Missouri; John R. Maller, of Ohio; J. S. Hatch, of Indiana; and J. R. Bean, of New Jersey.

Also one vice president from each State.

Senator Sewell, of New Jersey, and Congressman Sereno Paine, of New York, were designated to escort the permanent chairman to the platform. They marched down the main aisle, while the delegates jumped to their feet fluttering flags and handkerchiefs and cheering shrilly. Mr. Fairbanks met the trio as it ascended the steps, and grasped the Nebraska Senator by the hand. Thurston faced the arena with his hands clasped behind him and began to speak. He said:

Gentlemen of the Convention: The happy memory of your kindness and confidence will abide in my grateful heart forever. My sole ambition is to meet your expectations and I pledge myself to exercise the important powers of this high office with absolute justice and impartiality. I bespeak your cordial co-operation and support to the end that our proceedings may be orderly and dignified, as before this have been all the deliberations of the supreme council of the Republican party.

Eight years ago I had the distinguished honor to preside over the convention which nominated the last Republican President of the United States. To-day I have the further distinguished honor to preside over the convention which is to nominate the next President of the United States. This generation has had its object lesson, and the doom of the Democratic party is already pronounced. The American people will return the Republican party to power because they know that its administration will mean:

The supremacy of the Constitution of the United States; the maintenance of law and order; the protection of every American citizen in his right to live, to labor, and to vote; a vigorous foreign policy; the enforcement of the Monroe doctrine; the restoration of our merchant marine; safety under the stars and stripes on every sea, in every port; a revenue for all governmental expenditures and the gradual extinguishment of the national debt; a currency "as sound as the government and as untarnished as its honor," whose dollars, whether of gold, silver or paper, shall have equal purchasing and debt-paying power with the best dollars of the civilized world; a protective tariff which protects, coupled with reciprocity which reciprocates, thereby securing the best market for American products and opening American factories to the free coinage of American muscle; a pension policy just and generous to our living heroes and to the widows and orphans of their dead comrades; the governmental supervision and control of transportation lines and rates; the protection of the people from all unlawful combinations and unjust exactions of aggregated capital and corporate power; an American welcome to every God-fearing, liberty-loving, Constitution-respecting, law-abiding, labor-seeking, decent man; the exclusion of all whose birth, whose blood, whose condition, whose practices would menace the permanency of free institutions, endanger the safety of American society or lessen the opportunities of American labor; the abolition of sectionalism—every star in the American flag shining for the honor and welfare and happiness of every commonwealth and of all the people; a deathless loyalty to all that is true and American, and a patriotism as eternal as the stars.

The punctuation of almost every sentence of the address was a period of yells, rounded off with a fringe of applause and stamping, and the delegates rose and waved their hats, flags and handkerchiefs with a prolonged cheer when Mr. Thurston finished.

As the demonstration ceased a letter was read from J. Henry Fort, chairman of the committee on credentials, announcing that the committee would be unable to report until afternoon. Thereupon Gov. Bushnell of Ohio moved that the convention take a recess until 2 o'clock. The motion was carried with a roar, and at 11:23 Chairman Thurston declared the convention in recess.

Proceedings in the Afternoon.

The people returned to the hall after the recess, hoping that the candidates would be nominated during the day and knowing that at any rate the hostilities would begin. As soon as the convention came to order, Mr. Fort of New Jersey moved to the fore with the report of the committee on credentials and the war was on. He reported that the Addicks people were unseated in Delaware and the Cuney people in Texas and as for the other contestants the committee on credentials had accepted the report of the national committee. Congressman Hepburn of Iowa was alongside to stand for the minority. No sooner had he completed reading the minority report, which recommended the seating of the Addicks and Cuney delegations in Delaware and Texas, and the recommittal of all other contests, than Mr. Fort demanded the previous question on the adoption of the majority report. Mr. Hepburn moved to substitute the minority report.

There was a general breaking up of benches and girding up of loins. The Pennsylvania delegation was in an uproar. Platt dodged along the line of the New York delegation jotting down figures on a slip of paper. The leaders from the Southern States wrestled with the negro delegates. In Missouri corner Major Warner and Chauncey I. Filley glared at each other. The galleries sent down a confused sound of eager voices, and then, as the chairman's gavel fell, the hall became as quiet as if every man and woman of the 12,000 people had ceased breathing, and the roll call proceeded. When the roll call of States was completed there was a minute of anxiety while the clerks footed up the totals. When Chairman Thurston announced the result, 568½ for ordering the previous question and 330½ against it, the McKinleyites howled themselves hoarse. The report of the committee was declared adopted, and the convention adjourned, with the crowd still cheering and laughing, after a day of burning interest.

THE REPUBLICAN NATIONAL CONVENTION IN SESSION.

M'KINLEY THE MAN.

Nominated by Republicans for President.

HOBART IS SECOND.

Both Candidates Nominated on First Ballot.

Nominations Are Made Unanimous and Delegates and Spectators Go Wild with Enthusiasm—Platform Adopted Advocating the Single Gold Standard—Free-Coinage Delegates Sever Their Connection with Former Associates—Detailed Description of Closing Scenes of the Convention.

The Republican national convention completed its work Thursday night. William McKinley, of Ohio, was nominated for President and Garret A. Hobart, of New Jersey, for Vice-President on a platform that declares for a protective tariff and the single gold standard. The total vote cast for McKinley was 661½. Reed received 84½, Quay 60½, Morton 58, Allison 35½ and Cameron 1. No sooner had the chairman announced the result than Senator Cabot Lodge of Massachusetts moved to make the nomination unanimous. Among the first to second this were Gen. Hastings of Pennsylvania and Thomas Platt of New York. Gen. Henderson of Iowa followed. Amid a storm of howls, tooting of fish horns, waving of banners and the playing of the band the motion was put and carried. The pandemonium was so great that the chairman could not be heard.

When Senator Foraker, as chairman of the Ohio delegation, arose and cast 46 votes for the Buckeye man, the ballot stood 467½ for McKinley. Instantly the convention burst into a storm of enthusiasm. The roll call was continued, but it was only a matter of form. There was a moment of suspense until the vote had been announced, and then the vast assemblage burst into cheers and shouts of the wildest enthusiasm.

The first ballot was completed at 5:40,

WILLIAM M'KINLEY,

and it was 6 o'clock before the chairman was able to gain order and to recognize Senator Lodge, who moved that the nomination of McKinley be made unanimous. This served to bring forth another uproarous outburst.

After McKinley's nomination had been made unanimous and the chair had so declared, the convention proceeded to name a candidate for Vice-President. The names of G. A. Hobart of New Jersey, H. Clay Evans of Tennessee, Lippitt of Rhode Island, Walker of Virginia and Bulkeley of Connecticut were placed in nomination. The nomination of Hobart, like that of McKinley, was decided on the first ballot, and afterward made unanimous.

The third day's session of the Republican national convention was called to order by Chairman Thurston at 10:30 o'clock Thursday forenoon. Five thousand people stood outside the convention hall clamoring for admission and quarreling with doorkeepers. Inside the hall there was a restless activity among the delegates and visitors and an eager desire to see the wheels move.

Chairman Thurston without any preliminaries plunged into business by announcing that the first thing on the program was the report of the committee on resolutions. Senator-elect Joseph B. Foraker, of Ohio, crowded to the front, climbed the steps and presented the platform, while the audience and delegates followed the reading with intense interest.

At the conclusion of the reading Senator Teller presented a silver substitute for the gold plank in the platform, and made a strong speech in defense of the bimetallic views of the white metal men. After he had spoken to the resolution Foraker moved to lay it on the table. The gold men voted 518½ to a total silver representation of 105½. Foraker then moved the previous question on the adoption of the platform, and the platform was adopted, a separate vote being taken on the financial plank, resulting: Yeas, 812½; nays, 110½.

GARRET A. HOBART,
Of New Jersey.

As soon as the platform with the gold plank was adopted the silver men from Colorado, Idaho, Montana and Utah, headed by their leaders, arose and marched out of the convention hall, renouncing the Republican party and its declaration of principles.

Skill of Needle Makers.

An expert workman in one of the great needle factories, in a recent test of skill, performed one of the most delicate feats imaginable. He took a common sewing needle of medium size, one and five-eighth inches in length, and drilled a hole through its entire length, from eye to point, the opening being just large enough to permit the passage of a very fine hair.

ANNA IVOR'S REQUEST.

Personal letters reach Mrs. Pinkham by thousands; some asking advice, and others, like the following, telling of what Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has done and will ever continue to do in eradicating those fearful female complaints so little understood by physicians.

All womb and ovarian troubles, irregularities, whites, bearing-down pains, displacements, tendency to cancer and tumor are cured permanently.

"I feel as if I owed my life to your Vegetable Compound. After the birth of my babe I was very miserable. I had a drawing pain in the lower part of my bowels, no strength, and a terrible backache. Every day I failed. My husband said if I would try a bottle of your Vegetable Compound, he would get it for me. The change was wonderful. After I had taken the first half bottle I began to have great faith in it. When I had taken three bottles, I was well and growing stout. It is a pleasure for me to write this to you. I only ask women in any way afflicted with female troubles to try it."—MRS. ANNA IVOR, Pittsford Mills, Rutland Co., Vt.

PHENOMENAL SPRINTER.

Hawkeye People Think Their Man Rush Will Be Another Crum.

If the young sprinter from the Grinnell College does not prove to be another John V. Crum in the athletic world he will sadly disappoint an entire State. Iowans are sure the handsome fellow who created such a sensation before one of the biggest crowds ever assembled in Marshalltown will prove to be one of the fastest sprinters America has ever produced. There seems to be good ground for the confident expectations reposed in the boy from Waterloo. At the State championship meeting at Marshalltown he performed with great credit to himself, winning the four sprinting events handily in time that stamps the new man as having a brilliant future on the cinder path. He ran fifty yards in 0:05 2-5, 100 in 0:10, 200 in 0:20 3-5, 220 in 0:22 3-5, and closed the day by romping away from his field in the quarter mile event in 0:53. That is a day's work that even the wonderful Wefers might well be proud of. Rush has been in training for running less than one year, and the events mentioned were the first big games he ever attended as a competitor. He is the son of a prominent traveling man of Waterloo, and is the ideal athlete in appearance. He is 5 feet 10 inches tall and weighs about 150 pounds in good condition. He has a perfect style, which comes natural to him, and in action on the track looks like a runner who has been in the sport for years. This is all the more remarkable from the fact that he has never had the advantage of being handled by a trainer of experience, who could advise the young man of his faults. He is exactly 21 years old, and what he knows about sprinting he picked up by seeing others perform.

J. HARLAND RUSH.

PLAYED HE WAS A STATUE.

Hungry John Doe Envied the Lot of the Bronze Figure in the Park.

Poor, hungry John Doe sat on a bench in the New York City Hall park ruminating over the vicissitudes of life. It was parching hot, and John had just removed his outer garments, so that he sat in his red undershirt and trousers, gazing up vacantly at the bronze statue of the martyr Nathan Hale.

"What a soft snap that feller's got, anyhow," he presently remarked, "standin' there all day long, wid the trees a shadin' him, nothin' to do, no cop to make him move on, nothin' to eat, nothin' to drink"—there the chain of thought suddenly ceased—"nothin' to drink! I'd be a statue myself if it wasn't for that. What a snap it would be."

And then speculation ripened into action, John proceeded over to the base of the pedestal. "I'll try it," he said. "My other engagements can wait." A fat broker mopping the perspiration from his chubby cheeks hurried along up Broadway. He glanced from right to left and his eyes rested complacently on the leafy greenery of the park. Suddenly he halted.

"Shades of Abe Lincoln," he gasped, awe-stricken. On the bronze pedestal whence Hale, the martyr, had looked down over the passing show was perched a figure—a figure grotesque in its simplicity. Nothing more strange, indeed, than poor, addle-headed John Doe, his arms folded heroically across his red undershirt. And yet, he was attracting the rapt attention of a throng. So he played the statue faithfully, until a park policeman yanked him down by the foot and took him off to the station.

Treatment for an Electric Shock.

Dr. D'Arsonville, of Paris, who has made a special study of methods of treating persons injured by electric shocks, proposes the following formula: The person so disabled should be treated like one drowned; in other words, he should be laid on his back and artificial respiration performed in the way that is ordinarily prescribed. Some further practical advice, however, is given to those who are called at once to the scene of the accident, and at the time when the person is perhaps still in contact with the wires. Of course, the first thing to be done is to stop the current or break the contact. In doing the latter one should not touch the victim on the face or hands, or any naked part of the body. It is better to lift him by the coat tails or to throw a blanket over him and pull him by this. Nothing that is wet should be thrown upon him, and if his clothes are wet the hands should not be put in contact wth them. A piece of dry wood can be placed under the body, and he can then be lifted. The further treatment of the case is the familiar one applied in attempting to restore the drowned. The arms are worked and the tongue is kept drawn out; the body may sometimes be rubbed thoroughly with a cloth or the brush in order to increase the circulation of the blood. Oxygen and perhaps a stimulant may be employed.

USE OF THE SENSES.

Habit and Experience Play a Part in Seeing and Hearing.

If we ask ourselves just how it is that we see, hear and receive impressions from the senses, we shall soon discover two things. The first is that the explanation 'we see with our eyes," "we hear with our ears," etc., is not quite satisfactory. It is easy enough to explain how certain rays of light impinge on the retina of the eye, and certain waves of air on the drum of the ear; but how these purely physical things are converted into purely psychical things of sight and hearing no one can explain.

Our second discovery will be that it is not by the eye alone that we see, or by the ear alone that we hear. Memory, or, rather, experience or habit, plays a great part in all sensations, though we do not often notice it, unless our attention is drawn to the fact by some circumstance that puts experience at fault, and thus produces a sense-illusion.

Have you ever noticed, for instance, how experience helps you to recognize the position of sounds? If one made a noise at a little distance from you, you could instantly tell from what direction it came, because experience has taught you to judge of this matter through the very slight difference in the intensity of sound in your two ears. An experiment will readily prove this.

Stop up the left ear firmly with cotton-wool, and go into a dark room with someone else who carries a bell. Let the other person strike the bell in different parts of the room, yourself remaining still. No matter where the bell is, it will always seem to you to sound on your right side, even though it may actually be near the left ear. Persons deaf in one ear can never tell whence a sound comes. It takes two ears to do this.

DEFENDER OF BULUWAYO.

Capt. John S. Nicholson Who Commands the British Forces.

Capt. John Sanctuary Nicholson is the officer now in command of the British forces at Buluwayo, beleaguered by the rebels. He joined the Seventh Hussars twelve years ago, and attained the rank of captain in 1891. When Gen. Goodenough was the commander at the CAPTAIN NICHOLSON.

Cape he appointed Nicholson successor to Col. H. C. O. Plummer, the first commissioner sent to take charge of the forces of the Chartered Company. The regiment in which Nicholson is an officer was formerly stationed in India. The rising of the Matabeles has given his position a gravity and responsibility that were not anticipated.

Introduced Himself.

Absent-minded readers will know how to sympathize with a gentleman whose tale of misery we borrow from the New York Times. He begins by describing his first meeting with Gen. Miles, now at the head of the United States army. This was in a hotel office in Pasadena, Cal. Then he goes on:

There was a fire in the great fireplace, perhaps as much for cheerfulness's sake as anything else, and the big room was decidedly a pleasant place. Gen. Miles, Maj. Truman and myself sat there until 11 o'clock. The General talked freely and most interestingly, and to me it was a very enjoyable evening. I had always had the heartiest admiration for Gen. Miles—I had been a soldier myself—and I thought I should always remember that evening with gratification.

The next morning, while going out of the Hotel Nadeau in Los Angeles, I met a gentleman who said, "Good morning!" I stopped and talked, but I could not possibly recall him. Presently he said, "You don't remember me."

I said no, I did not.

"My name is Miles," he said.

"Well, I wished that the Hotel Nadeau had been getting in coal, and that there had been a convenient coal-hole open for me to slide into; but there wasn't, and I did the best I could under the circumstances, which, I guess, was poor enough; but the General was perfectly good-humored about it, for which I was profoundly thankful.

Seeing the General in a different light, or amid totally different surroundings and when I had least expected to meet him, coupled perhaps with some degree of natural absent-mindedness on my own part, had brought this discomfiture upon me; and chagrin over this second encounter with Gen. Miles has always materially lessened my enjoyment of the first.

Byles on Bills.

Among the humorous memories connected with English judges is one of Justice Byles and his horse. This eminent jurist was well known in his profession for his work on "Bills," and as this gave a fine opportunity for alliteration, his associates were accustomed to bestow the name on the horse, which was but a sorry steed.

"There goes Byles on Bills," they took pleasure in saying, and as the Judge rode out every afternoon, they indulged daily in their little joke. But the truth was that the horse had another name known only to the master and his man; and when a too-curious client inquired as to the Judge's whereabouts, he was told by the servant, with a clear conscience, "that master was out on Business."

A man never looks so well as he does after he has been dead three or four years, and you see him in his photograph.

The Grace of God.—Every man needs the grace of God, and therefore every man ought to pray, and ought to go to church to do so.—Rev. F. J. Watersteck, Catholic, Philadelphia, Pa.

Inheritance.—The memory of a father's character, the remembrance of a mother's Christlike life are the sweetest, strongest, surest inheritances that we can leave to our children.—Rev. Dr. Williamson, Christian Church, Atlanta, Ga.

True to Self.—You can never be true to truth, you can never be true to another till you are true to yourself.—Rev. Anna Shaw, at San Francisco, Cal.

Liberty.—No one has a right to demean or denounce any man's religion or their Bible, or throw away the Bibles of the world because they don't know their meaning—maybe because they never read them.—Rev. Dr. Astor, Spiritualist, San Antonio, Texas.

Love.—Nothing was ever settled by violence, and nothing ever will be. We must become great enough to love, and then will come the universal reign of peace. Love is hope to the hopeless and help to the helpless.—Rev. C. L. Hyde, Congregationalist, Toledo, Ohio.

Peace.—The forces that keep England and America from crossing swords are not commercial, but moral. The moral sense has grown so strong under the development of the English and American Constitutions as forever to preclude war between the two nations.—Rev. Dr. Hartman, Baptist, Cleveland, Ohio.

Heathen Religion.—Buddhism only recognizes a salvation that any man can gain for himself in this world. Mohammedanism has no atonement. Heathen religions have no high motives and lofty ideas. There is nothing to exalt hope when a personal God is denied.—Rev. C. B. Galloway, Presbyterian, Nashville, Tenn.

Real Religion.—All forms may be stripped from religion and Christianity remain intact, for it dwells in the heart. It is moral and spiritual truth and not churches, altar and music. It is the acceptance of truth and making it the rule of life.—Rev. Dr. Marlatt, Methodist, Tacoma, Wash.

Preaching.—A good preacher can do much to add to the pleasure and satisfaction of our lives by discoursing in an intelligent, graceful way. There is an art in preaching which all of us have seen at times, and the right kind of preaching does much to make the world brighter, happier and better, and makes us all better satisfied with ourselves, but preaching is a vain and futile thing unless it can succeed in establishing belief in the resurrection of the Christ.—Rev. M. B. Wharton, Baptist, Norfolk, Va.

Wild Oats.—It is a matter of common observation that people of ordinary intellect in other matters will have a mouthful of apologies for the vices and excesses of youth. Fathers sleep peacefully while their sons go to the devil, all under the spell that present nastiness is a fit preparation for future purity of manhood.—Rev. George Clark Peck, Methodist, Brooklyn, N. Y.

The Ideal Man.—The ideal man is on the way, but not yet arrived. Nature has not been toiling 1,000,000 years or so to produce a Vanderbilt, a Gould, a Rockefeller. Pushed by unseen forces man has reached the height called material power and enterprise, and before his opening vision rises the height still more sublime—spiritual culture.—Rev. G. A. White, Universalist, Chicago, Ill.

Obedience.—A child that grows up to manhood or womanhood without having learned the duty of obedience, and without having acquired a keen sense of personal responsibility for its conduct and accountability for it, is fertile soil in which the devil may sow his seeds of anarchy and lawlessness, with every reason to expect a rich harvest.—Rev. L. A. Banks, Methodist, Brooklyn, N. Y.

Life's School.—Wherever we go we have much to learn, and thus all time and eternity are but the various schools, primary, secondary and college, in which mankind are being unfolded into larger thought and deeper faith. No church has reached the final truth; no creed is surely the closing up of the case between man and God, but there is always new revelations awaiting the honest, inquiring soul.—Rev. George A. Thayer, Unitarian, Cincinnati, Ohio.

Sunday Bicycling.—Do not think that I discountenance wholly the use of the wheel on Sunday. If a spin in the early morning will bring the color to your cheeks and will stimulate your brain, then it is not only your right, but your duty to take it, for the body is the temple of the soul and it is your duty to preserve it. Don't confound license with liberty. Let the bicycle be your servant, not your master.—Rev. C. J. Greenwood, Baptist, New York.

Curious Wedding Present.

A curious wedding present has just been forwarded to Schloss Langenburg from the Palais Edinburg in Coburg. It consists of a large photograph of Prince and Princess Ernst of Hohenlohe-Langenburg, set in a handsome frame composed, not of wood, but marzipan and chocolate. At each corner very natural bunches of pink roses with delicate foliage, also made of marzipan, prove what wonders patience and practiced fingers can achieve in the confectionery art.

Dreaded by Elephants.

There exists a small reptile of which elephants have a very peculiar dread; and against which neither their sagacity for prowess can defend them. This liminutive creature gets into the trunk of the elephant, and pursues its course until it finally fixes in its head, and by keeping him in constant agony torments the stupendous animal to death.

The big sleeves the girls wear are very becoming if they can eat dinner in them without getting them in the butter.

The people wouldn't mind the fact that the women are in the saddle, if they were not riding man-fashion.

Under the Curb.

Doctor Weir Mitchell, lecturing to a school of nurses lately upon the necessity of self-control in emergencies, told the following incident:

One of his patients, while in a low, nervous condition, swallowed by mistake a dose from the wrong bottle. She shrieked out that she was poisoned. One of the nurses screamed, "Aconite!" and began to cry hysterically. The other nurse, seeing that the patient was going into convulsions from terror, when relief would be impossible, said coolly:

"Don't be frightened. Look here," taking a mouthful of the dose herself.

She then went outside to rid her mouth of it, procured an emetic, and sent for a doctor and a stomach pump. Her calmness saved the life of the patient.

A fire occurred in a crowded theater in a Southern city last winter. A paper scene in the flies ignited and blazed up in sight of the audience, who began to shriek wildly, and to rush to the doors. A woman behind the curtain seized a sheet of music, and coming forward, bowed calmly, smiled, and began to sing.

Her steady voice and smiling face convinced the panic-stricken mob that there was no danger as no words could have done. They stopped and settled down quietly into their seats. A fatal panic was checked by a cool stroke of ready wit.

Now self-control is not to be acquired in a moment of danger by a strong desire for it, any more than we can command skill in the use of a sword when attacked. It comes through training.

The woman who coolly sang with a fire behind her and a frantic mob before was accustomed to control her feelings in the presence of a crowd.

Doctor Mitchell in the same lecture stated that he was once on a steamer during a frightful collision. Passengers and crew were uncontrollable with terror. The only persons who remained calm were two educated American gentlewomen. They were probably no wiser, no more courageous, nor devout than the others; but they belonged to a class taught from childhood to repress emotion in public.

If you wish to be a hero in a great emergency, practice heroism in self-control every day.—Youth's Companion.

Smallest Country in the World.

The smallest country in the world is said to be the territory of Moresnet, which lies between Belgium and Germany. Its 2,000 inhabitants are mostly occupied in tin mining, although agriculture is also engaged in. Military service and election days are unknown. The senate of ten members is appointed by the mayor, who is chosen by two delegates, one from Belgium and one from Germany. The police force consists of one man, whose salary is provided by the annual revenue (about 1,200 francs), which also maintains the roads and schools. The territory was declared independent in 1815, to settle the dispute when the boundary was fixed between Germany and Belgium, both countries wanting its tin mines. It contains only two and one-half square miles.—Public Opinion.

Theosophical School.

"A school for the revival of the lost mysteries of antiquity" is the title of the new enterprise which the Theosophists of this country now have on hand. The matter has been in mind for some time, but was formally launched at the late convention in New York. It has not been decided yet in what city it will be built, but it is thought that Boston stands a good show. The plans are embryotic, but the building will be a continuous open house for all interested in Theosophy.

Russia Is After China.

Another proof—though none is now needed—of the entente cordiale between Russia and China has come to light. It is learned that Russia has induced the Flowery Kingdom to make all her railroads now building in the northern part of the country 4 feet 11 inches wide, the width of all roads in Russia. In the future, therefore, engines and trains of the great Siberian Railway can be run on the Chinese lines—a concession the advantages of which are apparent.

The Right Sort of Stuff.

"Do you think you have self-possession and nerve enough to be a reporter?" asked the managing editor of an applicant.

"I think so, sir."

"And what makes you think so?"

"I'm only 20," was the reply, "but I have proposed to five different girls."

He was taken on.—Exchange.

The Inevitable.

"You seem to me a very stupid person," observed the heroine of the society novel.

"And you," rejoined the hero, "likewise seem to me stupid."

"Then we shall be dramatized."

"Presumably."

At that they yawned. — Detroit Tribune.

Gladness Comes

With a better understanding of the transient nature of the many physical ills, which vanish before proper efforts—gentle efforts—pleasant efforts—rightly directed. There is comfort in the knowledge, that so many forms of sickness are not due to any actual disease, but simply to a constipated condition of the system, which the pleasant family laxative, Syrup of Figs, promptly removes. That is why it is the only remedy with millions of families, and is everywhere esteemed so highly by all who value good health. Its beneficial effects are due to the fact, that it is the one remedy which promotes internal cleanliness without debilitating the organs on which it acts. It is therefore all important, in order to get its beneficial effects, to note when you purchase, that you have the genuine article, which is manufactured by the California Fig Syrup Co. only and sold by all reputable druggists.

If in the enjoyment of good health, and the system is regular, laxatives or other remedies are then not needed. If afflicted with any actual disease, one may be commended to the most skillful physicians, but if in need of a laxative, one should have the best, and with the well-informed everywhere, Syrup of Figs stands highest and is most largely used and gives most general satisfaction.

BIG AND GOOD.

BattleAx PLUG

Sometimes quality is sacrificed in the effort to give big quantity for little money.
No doubt about that.
But once in a while it isn't.
For instance, there's "BATTLE AX."
The piece is bigger than you ever saw before for 5 cents. And the quality is, as many a man has said, "mighty good."
There's no guess work in this statement.
It is just a plain fact.
You can prove it by investing 5 cents in "BATTLE AX."

DEMOCRATIC

CONVENTION MET TODAY AND NOMINATED A TICKET.

Charles Yotter of Angola The Choice For Prosecutor.

FREE SILVER RESOLUTIONS ARE UNANIMOUSLY PASSED.

Below is the Ticket to be Voted This Fall.

Saturday's Daily.

Charles A. Yotter	Prosecutor
Charles M. Brown	Representative
W. A. Dannells	Commissioners, S. E.
Cal. Grube	Commissioner, S. W.
Fred Schultheiss	County Assessor.
J. W. Hughes	Coroner
G. C. Ralston	Sheriff
Henry Hines	Treasurer
J. H. W. Krontz	Surveyer

At ten a. m. the convention was called to order in the Opera House, by Chairman Frederick. Each delegation was seated near its own township card, which besides the name, had the number of delegates to which the township was entitled.

CONVENTION.

On calling them to order, Mr. Frederick, made a brief speech on the political outlook, and alluded to the McKinley platform adopted at St. Louis. He said that platform, if carried out, would divide our people into two great adverse camps, the classes against the masses. He asked that no matter who is nominated to-day, go out without bitterness and work hand in hand for the ticket. On motion of Moody, Sol. Barney, of Concord, was named for permanent chairman. Mr. Barney took the stand and spoke briefly. He thanked them, and asked the co-operation in making the convention pleasant and secure good support for the ticket that may be nominated. One suggestion was made, that seats be placed on the stage. On motion of Moody, D. M. Link, Milo Thomas and W. H. Leas be the secretaries. Carried. The call was then read by secretary Leas. Frederick then explained that he had changed the order of nominations, but with no intention to wrong any one. His arrangement was allowed to stand. John Robbins sent in a resolution which was read and on motion of T. J. Baxter was adopted. It reads:

RESOLVED, That we are in favor of sound money—the soundest money the world ever had or ever can have. This sound money should consist of the free and unlimited coinage of both gold and silvet at the ratio of 16 to 1, with equal purchasing and equal debt paying power, at the option of the purchaser or the payer, with full legal tender functions; the only method by which the parity of two metals has been continuously and successfully maintained. The immediate and complete restoration of the true bi-metallic system of money which existed from 1792 to 1873 is, in our opinion, demanded by the interests of commerce, manufacture and agriculture, which are alike suffering from the continuous fall of prices and the consequent embarrassment of bankruptcy of those engaged therein.

RESOLVED Further, That it is the sense of this convention that delegates to the State convention to be held in Indianapolis on June 24, be and are hereby instructed to vote first, last and all the time for the free and unlimited coinage of silver at the ratio of 16 parts of silver to 1 part of gold, ant that such delegates to the State convention use their best endeavor in choosing delegates to the national democratic convention who will vote only for a free silver platform and free silver candidates, and urge upon those candidates the necessity of the immediate restoration of free coinage of silver without waiting the pleasure of foreign countries.

Nominations were declared next in order. C. M. Brown was moved by W. H. McIntyre, and C. Curie announced Christian Smith. F. W. Brant, of Keyser, was also named, but was withdrawn. W. H. Leas named Eli Walker, of Smithfield.

COMMISSIONER, S. E.

Jacob Christoffel and Samuel Miller both of Stafford; B. A. Woodcox, of Concord, and Willis Dannells, of Wilmington were announced.

COMMISSIONER, S. W.

Curie named R. S. S. Reed, and G. Patterson announced Cal. Grube. Milford Clark, of Butler was also named.

COUNTY ASSESSOR.

Fred Schultheiss, of Keyser, and Gilbert Patterson, of Richland, was named for this.

CORONER.

L. J. Miller announced C. Comesky, of Jackson, Plum, named J. W. Hughes, of Grant.

TREASURER

Walter announced in a neat speech, named Henry Hines; Milo Thomas in a brief speech. named M. F. Franks; T. J. Baxter spoke well and eloquently for John Hoffelder, Dr. Nusbaum arose and said he was instructed by Mr. Franks to withdraw his name. (A great deal of cheering greeted all the announcements.)

SHERIFF.

W. B. Brown, in a dignified, clear speech, nominated George C. Ralston, of Union. Frank Barney announced Geo. Bleeks, of Newville.

SURVEYOR.

McMorgan announced John Krontz, of Wilmington. C. P. Hamman, of Franklin township, was announced. Judge McClellan announced Cal. VanAuken in a neat forcible speech.

Adjourned to 1 p. m.

JUDICIAL CONVENTION.

The convention met when the county convention adjourned for dinner. Mr. Fredericks called to order, as the Steuben chairman was not present. He was then made chairman and Editor Sheffer, of the Angola Herald made secretary. Chas. A. Yotter was put in nomination for prosecutor by Chas. Kelley. H. H. Cupp announced L. J. Gingler, but later withdrew it. Mr. Moody and Mr. Sheffer made speeches complimentary of Mr. Yotter, and he was then nominated by acclamation, and the convention adjourned.

At 1:30 the convention again convened and proceeded to ballot for representative. The vote stood, Brown 844, Smith 47 and Walker 48. Mr. Brown was called and made a neat speech of thanks.

your doctor. The doctors approve of Scott's Emulsion. For whom? For men and women who are weak, when they should be strong; for babies and children who are thin, when they should be fat; for all who get no nourishment from their food. Poor blood is starved blood. Consumption and Scrofula never come without this starvation. And nothing is better for starved blood than cod-liver oil. Scott's Emulsion is cod-liver oil with the fish-fat taste taken out.

SCOTT'S EMULSION has been endorsed by the medical profession for twenty years. (Ask your doctor.) This is because it is always palatable—always uniform—always contains the purest Norwegian Cod-liver Oil and Hypophosphites.

Lake Shore Wreck.

Last night at about 11 o'clock there occurred quite a wreck on the main line of the Lake Shore near Swanton west of Toledo. East bound freight No. 74 was to side track at that place but for some couse, west bound passenger No. 22 ran into the engine of the freight. Both engines were smashed, blocking the double track so as that all other trains were compelled to run into Toledo over the old line. Fortunely no lives were lost.

John Coder Dead.

Special to the COURIER.—

ST. JOE, IND., JUNE 17, 1896.

The tolling of the bell this morning at an early hour announced the death of John Coder, which occurred at his home last night at about one o'clock. Grandfather Coder was one of the pioneers and was aged 76 years at the time of his death. He leaves a family of five children: Mrs. M. E. Olds, of this place; Mrs. E. Zimmerman, of Auburn; Eli, of Cleveland, O.; Frank, of Norville, Michigan, and Joseph, of Pennsylvania, his wife having preceded him a few years ago. The funeral will be probably be held Friday at 10 o'clock.

Friday's Daily.

As noted yesterday in a brief dispatch to the DAILY, Dr. Norman Teal, of Kendallville, was nominated by the democrats for joint representative for the three counties of Elkhart, Noble, and DeKalb. He is the last member who represented the district, while we were under the law of 1885 before, and was a very satisfactory member. It had been conceded that this year the office should go to Elkhart or DeKalb, but neither had a candidate, there being but one man, Capt. Wm. Barney, from Elkhart. DeKalb County had about a dozen representatives present. Among them we remember C B Walter and Dr. W L Hines, Concord, Edward Kelham sr. and F. M. Merica of Keyser W. H. Leas, of Waterloo, J. P. Crimmins, J. A. Barns of Auburn, John Moore and George Moore of Moores, Milford Clark and perhaps others we cannot remember. The convention that nominated Dr. Teal, was called to order immediately after the close of the county convention, which was held there that afternoon. The nominating speech was made by W. H. Leas. Mr. Leas himself was first put in nomination by O. H. Downey, but declined.

The first work in the convention line, that was done that afternoon, was in the judicial convention. Judge Adair was unanimously renominated and S. E. Alvoid chosen to make the race for prosecutor for the circuit of Whitley and Noble. That meeting then adjourned and at once the county convention assembled and began work. Rufus L. Myers was chosen for representative, E. G. Thomas for treasurer, he having made the race against the landslide of two years ago. Elroy Shauck, was chosen for sheriff; John W Miller, brother of L. J. Miller of this place, was renominated for recorder, an office he is now holding; O. H. Downey editor of the Democrat for surveyor; F. R. Banghman, for assessor; Dr. J. W. Morr, a DeKalb man for coroner; Jacob Hontz for commissioner of south district and E. B. Gerber renominated in spite of his objections as commissioner of the north district. A resolution for free silver passed unanimously.

By Dr. Miles' Heart Cure.

Fainting, Weak or Hungry Spells, Irregular or Intermittent Pulse, Fluttering or Palpitation, Choking Sensation, Shortness of Breath, Swelling of Feet and Ankles, are symptoms of a diseased or Weak Heart.

MRS. N. C. MILLER.

Of Fort Wayne, Ind., writes on Nov. 29, 1894: "I was afflicted for forty years with heart trouble and suffered untold agony. I had weak, hungry spells, and my heart would palpitate so hard, the pain would be so acute and torturing, that I became so weak and nervous I could not sleep. I was treated by several physicians without relief and gave up ever being well again. About two years ago I commenced using Dr. Miles' Remedies. One bottle of the Heart Cure stopped all heart troubles and the Restorative Nervine did the rest, and now I sleep soundly and attend to my household and social duties without any trouble.

MANY ARE Receiving Treatment.

There is no reason why the people of Auburn and vicinity should longer remain victims of disease. There is a means by which all can be cured in a pleasing manner. One of the most pleasant things in Prof. E. Louis' practice is that the patients needs

No More Medicine.

Several of our most highly respected citizens called on the doctor last Thursday and will hereafter receive treatment from him. In fitting glasses he has no equal. If you have an afflicted friend whom others have failed to cure, have them consult

The State Convention

Friday's Daily.

The work was so slow yesterday, at the state convention that we could telegraph nothing worth while. To-day, we are able to give all the candidates.

THE TICKET.

Governor—B. F. Shively, South Bend.

Lieutenant Governor—John Lawler, Salem.

Appellate Judges—E. A. Taylor, Evansville; F. E. Gavin, Greensburg; Theodore P. Davis, Noblesville; O. J. Lotz, Muncie; George E. Ross, Logansport.

Secretary of State—S. M. Ralston, Lebanon.

Auditor—Joseph T. Fanning, Indianapolis.

Treasurer—Morgan Chandler, Greenfield.

Attorney General—J. G. McNutt, Terre Haute.

Reporter of the Supreme Court—Henry Warrum, Indianapolis.

Superintendent of Instruction—W. B. Sinclair, Knox.

State Statistician—O. H. Downey, Albion.

NATIONAL DELEGATES.

Delegates at Large—D. W. Voorhees, Terre Haute; David Turpel, Indianapolis. G. V. Menzies, Mount Vernon; James McCabe Williamsport.

ELECTORS AT LARGE.

John B. Stoll, of South Bend, and Jason B. Brown, of Seymour.

NOTES OF THE CONVENTION.

Those who attended from DeKalb are: D. D. Metcalf, Mahlon Baker, M. E. Gardner, J. Sawvel, Dr. Nusbaum, John Robbins, G. I. Patterson, C. Bruce, W. J. Frederick, E. P. Fitzgerald. F. A. Borst, Peter Bishop, C. M. Brown, C. P. Uric, Silas Nugen, C. C. Shaffer, John Hoffelder and J. A. Barns.

Frank B. VanAuken, of Pleasant Lake, got one of the best plums in the district, he being the presidential elector.

R. C. Bell, of Ft. Wayne was permanent chairman. We wish we could say he was a success in that position, but we are like G. Washington—in one respect only. He was too weak for so big and noisy a crowd, and too slow if the crowd had been ever so quiet. It made one wish for the strong yet gentle hand of Ex-Gov. Hendricks for about ten minutes.

They made the old mistake of springing the "previous question" on the convention. This brought on a prolonged row, and made one think of our own experience at Judge Lowry's third nomination—only more so. Now, DeKalb county democrats, don't allow anyone to call the "previous question." It is good democracy to let every man be heard, then if you don't believe as he does, vote him down.

Of course all the delegates to Chicago will support Gov. Mathews for president. We, for our part, believe him the strongest man in the United States, so far mentioned.

Of course everybody was for free silver, with very few exceptions, and strong resolutions to that effect, were adopted.

Did You Ever.

Try Electric Bitters as a remedy for your troubles? If not, get a bottle now and get relief. This Medicine has been found to be peculiarly adapted to the relief and cure of all female complaints, exerting a wonderful direct influence in giving strength and tone to the organs. If you have loss of appetite, constipation, headache, fainting spells, or are nervous, sleepless, excitable, melancholy or troubled with dizzy spells, Electric Bitters is the medicine you need. Health and strength are guaranteed by its use. Large bottles only fifty cents at Robbins & McCord's. 3

Summer Complaint.

Last summer one of our grand children was sick with a severe bowel trouble. Our doctor's remedies had failed, then we tried Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhœa Remedy, which gave very speedy relief. We regard it as the best remedy ever put on the market for bowel complaints.—Mrs. E. G. Gregory, Frederickstown, Mo. This certainly is the best remedy ever put on the market for dysentary, summer complaint, colic and cholera infantum in children. It never fails to give prompt relief when used in reasonable time and the plain printed directions are followed. Many mothers have expressed their sincere gratitude for the cures it has effected. For sale by Davenport, the druggist. 2731

Half Settled

Saturday's Daily.

Judge Adair came over yesterday to settle the issues in the case of Jackson township against Joseph Walter ex-trustee of said township.

The judge holds that a township trustee who purchases such articles for his township as the law authorizes him to purchase and exercises his honest judgment as to the necessity of the purchases and price to be paid, he is not liable on his bond, although he may have made a mistake, and this certainly must be the law as it would hardly do to say that an officer could be held liable in damages for a mistake honestly made in his judgment in a matter where he was compelled by law to exercise that judgment. The judge sustained a demurrer to thirty-four of the paragraphs of the complaint, holding that they did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action against Walter. The case was continued until the 3d Monday of October. There are thirty-eight more points to settle

The judge also granted a new trial and set aside the verdict of the jury rendered last term against Mrs. Anna S. Keller in the case of Gaskell vs Keller. It will be remembered in this case the jury returned a verdict in favor of young Gaskell for $2450, for damages it was alleged he sustained by reason of an injury received by him while working in the factory of the Keller Dental Company, at Fort Wayne. The case was tried here once before, and was reversed by the supreme court.

Got The Medal

It will be remembered that the Waterloo schools, made an especially good exhibit of written school work at the world's fair and were awarded a medal They have lately received it, and the Angola Magnet last week says:

Prof. H. H. Keep, Supt. of the Waterloo schools, recently received a massive bronze medal, which was awarded his school for its exhibit at the World's Fair. It is enclosed in an elegant plush lined aluminum case, and accompanying it is an engraved certificate which says that the medal was awarded the Waterloo school for "specific merit on its exhibit of written class work, good teaching and results." It is something of which Prof. Keep, his school and the people of Waterloo may be pardonably proud, for no other school in Northern Indiana receives like distiction. It has been a commissioned school for many years, and stands away ahead of most of the schools in this corner of the state.

B. & O. Excursions.

On July 3 and 4, the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad will sell excursion tickets to Denver, Colo., at rate of one fare for the round trip, plus $2.00, account Retail Clerks' National Protective Association and Music Teachers' National Association.

Condensed Testimony.

Chas. B. Hood, Brooker and Manufacturer's Agents, Columbus, Ohio, certifies that Dr. King's New Discovery has no equal as a Cough remedy. J. D. Brown, Prop. St. James Hotel, Fort Wayne, Ind., testifies that he was cured of a Cough of two years standing, caused by LaGrippe, by Dr. King's New Discovery. B. F. Merrill, Baldwinville, Mass., says that he has used and recommended it and never knew it to fail and would rather have it than any doctor, because it cures. Mrs. Hemming, 222 E. 25th St., Chicago, always keeps it at hand and has no fear of Croup, because it instantly relieves. Free Trial Bottles at Robbins & McCord's Drug Store. 3

Nearly Right.

The Waterloo Press, which is generally a thick-and-thin party paper, last week talks like this:

"Publishing a newspaper nowadays is a trial. One-half the readers think there is too much politics, and the political portion are so divided in their views that no one could please them. Some are for gold standard, some for bimetalism, some for free and unlimited coinage, others are for protection and still others hold to the doctrine of free trade. Party lines don't amount to much in the present state of affairs. The masses say they have no interest in the offices, and this is due to the fact that they have no voice in selecting candidates. Self-government, as now conducted, is little less than a farce. The candidate for office "packs the caucus," or from personal influences secures the delegates. and then we say his selection is the voice of the people, when in fact it is but the voice of the candidate. There is no fairer way to select officers than by a primary election, and The Press for years has advocated this theory. Under the past and present methods, candidates who are disposed to put themselves forward, secure the nominations without regard to fitness or merit. The taxpayers have been trifled with so long that the methods of government rest very heavy upon them, and the time is near at hand, if no better plans are devised, when revolution will overtake this country. The situation is a grave one and demands the best energy and endeavor of all thinking men.

Home Again.

Miss Estella Merica returned home from Chicago Saturday, where she has been in attendance at the Chicago Conservatory of Music. During the three years that she has been there she has pursued two special lines of musical study, the violin and musical science. She has completed the course in musical science and received her diploma, but will spend several years more in post graduate work and the study of her favorite instrument, the violin. The Chicago Conservatory is without doubt the most thorough and complete musical school in the west, and its faculty is not excelled in any institution in this country. The same rigid examinations must be passed that are required in the leading schools of Germany. Miss Merica was the only one out of a class of about thirty pupils that began with her three years ago, who has succeeded in passing all the examinations satisfactorily, and consequently was the only one to receive a diploma. We learn that her work all through has been highly satisfactory to the institution, and of course is most gratifying to the many friends interested in her welfare.

To the Afflicted.

In this day of active progress in the Arts and Sciences I am glad to note that the medical profession is keeping well abreast with times in its triumphs in medicine and surgery. This is notably true in its recent achievements in the cure of Hernia by the new and scientific process known as the Fidelity Method which has proved satisfactory safe and certain. It surprises physicians as well as patients to know what severe cases can now be so readily cured. For further particulars call on me at the office of Drs. Matheny and Stamets, Auburn, where I can be found on Saturday forenoons when in this locality. I will devote the entire day there next Saturday July 4, I will offer free consultation. Special attention to all who may wish to consult me about any form of rupture. I am devoting my whole time to this work. Please come early

CASTORIA

Castoria is Dr. Samuel Pitcher's prescription for Infants and Children. It contains neither Opium, Morphine nor other Narcotic substance. It is a harmless substitute for Paregoric, Drops, Soothing Syrups, and Castor Oil. It is Pleasant. Its guarantee is thirty years' use by Millions of Mothers. Castoria destroys Worms and allays feverishness. Castoria prevents vomiting Sour Curd, cures Diarrhœa and Wind Colic. Castoria relieves teething troubles, cures constipation and flatulency. Castoria assimilates the food, regulates the stomach and bowels, giving healthy and natural sleep. Castoria is the Children's Panacea—the Mother's Friend.

Castoria.

"Castoria is an excellent medicine for children. Mothers have repeatedly told me of its good effect upon their children."
Dr. G. C. Osgood, Lowell, Mass.

"Castoria is the best remedy for children of which I am acquainted. I hope the day is not far distant when mothers will consider the real interest of their children, and use Castoria instead of the various quack nostrums which are destroying their loved ones, by forcing opium, morphine, soothing syrup and other hurtful agents down their throats, thereby sending them to premature graves."
Dr. J. F. Kincheloe, Conway, Ark.

Castoria.

"Castoria is so well adapted to children that I recommend it as superior to any prescription known to me."
H. A. Archer, M. D., 111 So. Oxford St., Brooklyn, N. Y.

"Our physicians in the children's department have spoken highly of their experience in their outside practice with Castoria, and although we only have among our medical supplies what is known as regular products, yet we are free to confess that the merits of Castoria has won us to look with favor upon it."
United Hospital and Dispensary, Boston, Mass.

WIVES AND WILLS.

More of Them Turn Up in the Fair Estate Contest in San Francisco.

San Francisco special: The celebrated Fair will case has taken another sensational turn. In Judge Black's court room, Mrs. Nettie R. Craven testified under oath that she was legally married by contract to the late Senator Fair on the night of Sept. 2, 1892, and that they lived together as man and wife at her residence on Sutter street thereafter. The witness stated that her husband was anxious that the fact of their marriage should not become known to his children. According to Mrs. Craven, the late millionaire executed seven wills in her favor, only one of which she has offered for probate. The marriage contract, together with sundry deeds to property executed by Senator Fair will be produced in court and more sensations are expected.

CUSTER MASSACRE.

Six Thousand Sioux Celebrate the Blood Tragedy.

Omaha (Neb.) special: Six thousand Sioux, the remnant of the most powerful fighters of the American Indians, celebrated the great event in their history, the twentieth anniversary of the annihilation of Custer's command on the Little Big Horn, June 26, 1876. They gathered at the scene of the terrible massacre, and, though peaceable, are indulging in all the fantastic dances and ceremonies incident to their tradition. There will be another big celebration July 4.

Another Negro Lynched.

A special from Montgomery, Ala., says: Bill Westmoreland, a negro, was lynched in Lowndes County. Westmoreland had killed a well-to-do farmer, John Gilchrist, who lived near Fort Deposit. Posses were at once organized, and every house in the county was closed, and almost every citizen, rich or poor, black or white, joined in the chase. Westmoreland was captured and the officers started with him for Fort Deposit. They were met by 500 armed men, who wrested the prisoner from them, dragged him in to some woods near by and strung him up. Five hundred shots were fired into his body.

Over His Father's Grave.

Lloyd Bell, a saddler and harnessmaker of Oakland, Md., was found hanging in the Odd Fellows' Cemetery, near there, he having tied a rope to a limb of a tree, fastened it around his neck and jumped into space. His neck was broken. The suicide was committed immediately over the grave of his father, who was buried a few days ago. A note left by the dead man gave no reason for the deed.

Boy Train Wreckers.

At Chattanooga, Tenn., the police arrested ten young negroes, on the charge of train wrecking. They are charged with having caused several wrecks in the local yards of the N., C. & St. L. railway. The boys are said to have accomplished their work by throwing the switch, and serious damage has resulted. Ned Wedlock, one of the boy train wreckers, was shot while trying to escape from the police.

Ex-Consul Williams.

Washington special: Ramon O Williams, formerly Consul General of the United States at Havana, was at the State Department the other day attending the settlement of his consular accounts. He begged to be excused from discussing the Cuban situation and expressed himself as gratified that Gen. Fitz Hugh Lee did not write the letter alleged to have been sent by him to a relative.

Fatal Wreck.

A dispatch from Ottumwa, Iowa, says: The Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul meat train while running at the rate of eighty miles an hour down Hayesville Hill, jumped the track. Ed Lidquiest was killed and Will Kauffman fatally injured. Both men lived in Ottumwa. Thirteen cars were totally destroyed. None of the trainmen were injured.

Cornell Won the Race.

The Harvard, Cornell, Columbia and Pennsylvania four mile straightway boat race on the Hudson River was won by Cornell's eight in the phenomenal time of 19 minutes and 29 seconds; Harvard, second; Pennsylvania, third, and Columbia fourth. The race was a hard one for two miles, but after that Cornell had it easy.

Triple Execution.

Canon City (Colo.) special: A triple execution took place in the State Penitentiary. The men who were hung were Thomas Colt, Elbert Noble and Dominica Romero, who killed Policeman John Solomon in Trinidad.

Double Tragedy.

Lewis Roseland of Pullman, Ill., ended his own life and that of his 3-year-old daughter by poison. When his wife went to his room to call him, she found his dead body in bed. By his side lay the little girl's corpse. Roseland was employed in the Pullman Car Works.

Murderer Kills Himself.

Milton B. Wells, the murderer of Jennie Walters, was found dead in his cell at the county jail at Elkhart, Ind. He had made a rope from his bed clothing and hung himself some time during the night.

Baby Murdered by a Playmate.

Ora, the 2-year-old child of Frank Ganshaw, Delphos, Ohio, was instantly killed by William Bryan, aged 13 years. While playing among the children Bryan found a shotgun, and pointing it at the baby, drew the trigger, blowing off the side of its head.

Demand a Reduction of Wages.

The steel sheet manufacturers and workers' committee held a conference at Pittsburg on the wage scale. The manufacturers demanded an reduction of 12 per cent on wages of shearmen, rollers and heaters. The workmen offered to compromise.

HORRORS OF CRETAN WAR.

Turkish Troops Resort to Atrocities Which Should Call for Interference.

A dispatch from Beyrout, Syria, says that during the recent fighting between the Turks and the insurgent Druses in the Hauran districts the former lost 500 men killed. Information received in New York direct from the scene of the Cretan revolution against Turkey, by Solon Vlasta, editor of the Greek newspaper, Atlantis, shows that the Turkish troops are resorting to atrocities which equal in point of bloodiness their terrible barbarities in the Armenian war. According to these advices the Cretan revolutionists, who now number about 15,000 men, all well equipped, are daily gaining in strength, and with the aid they are receiving from Greece, the probabilities are that the Cretans will gain independence. The last massacre occurred May 22, in Canea, the principal city of Crete. In this fanatical crusade against Christianity, an attache of the Russian Consulate and another of the Greek Consulate, were murdered by the Turks, although they were in no way connected with the war. The massacre began about noon, when a false rumor was spread by the Turks that a Turkish family had been murdered by the Cretans. The rumor caused a panic and the Christians closed their shops and ran home for safety. Then firing could be heard outside of the town. The gates of the town were closed to prevent the escape of the inhabitants and a military patrol was at once established by the Turks and in the massacre which followed it is estimated 1,000 persons fell.

GOOD YIELD AT LAST.

After Three Years of Failure Kansas Has an Enormous Wheat Crop.

After many vicissitudes during the period of growth the State of Kansas has produced an eminently satisfactory crop of wheat. From returns furnished from every county in the State, the total yield is 43,000,000 bushels. That is almost double the quantity produced in the same State the year previous. It also exceeds the average yield of the last five years, which include the phenomenally heavy crop of 1892. It is 9,000,000 bushels more than the season of 1894-95 at the four principal winter wheat markets and 16,000,000 bushels in excess of the quantity reported at the same four principal winter wheat markets since last July to the present date. The production of wheat in Kansas, as officially estimated in the appended table, was as follows: 1891, 54,866,000 bu.; 1892, 70,831,000 bu.; 1893, 23,252,000 bu.; 1894, 35,315,000 bu.; 1895, 22,920,000 bu.

COUNTY RECORDS ARE BURNED.

Courthouse at Foxie, Kan., Reduced to Ashes by Incendiaries.

The court house of Sheridan County, Kansas, was burned to the ground and all of the records of the Register of Deeds and County Treasurer destroyed. The safes had been both opened and the records taken out and piled on the floor, opened up, some on their faces, others on their backs, and some on edge, placed in such a manner that they would be sure to be destroyed. There was $800 in the Treasurer's safe, which is gone, all of June 19 and 20 taxes. The County Clerk's safe was not touched and his records were saved. It will cost Sheridan County about $20,000 to repair the loss and put the records where they were. No clew has been found to the perpetrators of the deed.

THIRTY THOUSAND KILLED.

Secretary Herod's Estimate of Deaths by Japanese Earthquake.

The first official report that has reached Washington of the great Japanese earthquake and tidal wave came to the State Department from Mr. Herod, Secretary of our Legation at Tokio, in the following brief cablegram, which, however, makes the calamity out to be much worse than heretofore reported: "Deaths caused by tidal wave estimated at over 30,000 in reports up to date. No mortality among Americans."

Liberals in Canada Win.

In the Canadian elections returns show that the government is badly beaten, and Laurier will have a majority in every province in the dominion, except New Brunswick. His working majority in the new house over all parties will exceed thirty. In New Brunswick Finance Minister Foster has been defeated and Minister of Justice Dickey is also behind. The latest returns from the province of Quebec show that that province will stand: Liberals, 50; conservatives, 15. The Catholic vote, upon which the ministry relied, has utterly failed to go conservative. Quebec, which in the last election gave the liberals a majority of only five votes, and which, on the strength of the remedial legislation to which the government is pledged, was expected to go strongly conservative, has wheeled around and given the liberals from 20 to 25 majority. In Toronto the fight was a straight one as regards the separate schools issue, and the antis carried all four seats by large majorities. Great interest was taken in the fight in Winnipeg City between Joseph Martin (liberal), author of the bill abolishing separate schools in Manitoba, and Hugh John Macdonald, son of Canada's former premier, Sir John A. Macdonald. Macdonald won, his personal popularity carrying him through.

Jockey Killed at Forsyth.

Little "Bobby" Hathersall, one of the best lightweight jockeys in the country and a general favorite on the Indiana tracks, was killed in the first race at Forsyth Monday afternoon. The accident by which the little fellow lost his life happened just at the turn from the back stretch. Big Strive and Frank Jaubert were in the lead down the stretch, with Hathersall on Little Jimmie, just behind them. As the leaders reached the turn Jaubert, on the outside, pulled out, and as he did so Hathersall moved his horse up between the two leaders. At the same time Jaubert swung in again and jostled Little Jimmie hard enough to cause him to stumble and fall to his knees. As he went down Hathersall was thrown over his head out into the middle of the track. He struck with such force that his left arm was broken and his skull fractured. Drs. Johnson and Hayes attended the boy, but it was apparent his injuries would prove fatal. He was sent at once to the Baptist hospital, where he died a half-hour later.

Steel Workers Still Hold Out.

The steel sheet manufacturers and workers' committees held a conference at Pittsburg on the wage scale, but adjourned without having reached an agreement. The manufacturers demanded a reduction of 12 per cent on wages of shearmen, rollers and heaters. The workmen offered to compromise by a cut in the day men's wages, but refused to agree to a reduction in the skilled labor scale.

She Gets a Divorce and Money.

At Cleveland, Ohio, Jennie E. Flynn recently sued Frank J. Flynn for divorce and alimony on the ground of desertion. Since then Flynn has fallen heir to $40,000. The Common Pleas Court gave Mrs. Flynn her divorce and awarded her $10,000 alimony.

Both Parties Alert.

A Washington correspondent says: It is the intention of the Republican Congressional Campaign Committee to make the campaign for the election of Republican candidates for Congress this year the most vigorous in years. Congressional headquarters have been opened at the Hotel Normandie by Chairman Babcock and other members of the committee who are in the city, and a corps of assistants is at work preparing Republican campaign literature to send out. Mr. Babcock says that nothing will be left undone that will contribute to success in Congressional elections and that every Congressional district in the country will be invaded. Of course, he says, especial effort will be directed in the interest of Republican candidates in doubtful districts, but it is the purpose to fortify those which are regarded as surely Republican. A strong effort will be made to carry for the party districts in the West and South which may be expected to supplant the sitting Republican members with silver men, the idea being to prevent, if possible, any accessions to the silver strength in the House. Democratic Congressional headquarters have been established in the Wormsley Hotel annex, the old headquarters in Fifteenth street, and Secretary Lawrence Gardner of the committee is in charge. Senator Faulkner is chairman. He is not in Washington, but he is expected next week, when he will take charge. Secretary Gardner said that but little work would be done until after the Chicago convention, when the issues which the Democracy will present will be supported by the Campaign Committee in its efforts to elect Democratic candidates to Congress. Mr. Gardner said that it was the intention of the committee to make a strong fight.

COSTS SPAIN A PRETTY PENNY.

Continuation of the Cuban War Likely to Bankrupt the Home Government.

The failure of Spain to conquer the Cuban patriots, besides being proved by the continuous defeats of the troops in the field of battle, the lack of money in her treasury, and the poor credit she enjoys, is also plainly seen by the supreme effort made in sending money, men, and war material to Cuba since the beginning of the struggle with such poor success. In March, 1895, Spain sent to Cuba $500,000; in April, $400,000; in May, $1,521,000; in June, $1,800,000; in July, $700,000; in August, $1,600,000; in September, $1,400,000; in October, $700,000; in November, $1,700,000; in December, $4,000,000; in January, 1896, $2,000,000; in February, $3,000,000; a total of $19,321,000. From March, 1895, to April 10, 1896, Spain has sent to Cuba 40 generals, 562 chiefs, 4,768 captains and lieutenants, 3,396 sub-lieutenants, 112,560 corporals and soldiers, 143 cannon, 150,111 rifles, 5,000 bayonets, 23,124 cases of canister shot, 61,878,368 cartridges, and 72,326 kilograms of powder. These figures are taken from El Liberal, one of the first newspapers of Madrid.

KRUGER SHOWS HIS TEETH.

He Demands that Rhodes, Beit and Dr. Harris Be Tried.

The Secretary of State for the Transvaal has telegraphed to the British high commissioner at Cape Town, saying that, having in view the welfare and peace of South Africa, the Transvaal Government is convinced that the proofs in its possession and which are at the disposal of Great Britain now completely justify and compel bringing to trial Cecil Rhodes, Alfred Beit and Dr. Harris, all of the British South Africa Company and connected with the raid into the Transvaal. The secretary adds that the Transvaal republic is obliged to press this step on Great Britain, and also to urge that all control of the British Chartered South Africa Company be transferred to Great Britain.

ARBITRATION NEGOTIATIONS.

Great Britain and the United States to Publish Correspondence.

The London St. James' Gazette says that Great Britain and the United States have agreed to publish simultaneously, within a fortnight, all the arbitration correspondence exchanged between the governments of the two countries. The publication of this matter, it appears, has been delayed while awaiting the arrival in London of Secretary Olney's latest communication, which was handed to Sir Julian Pauncefote, the British ambassador at Washington, early in the week, and which is in Mr. Olney's incisive style and forms one of the most important documents of the series.

Mr. Fairbank Must Pay $16,000.

After an exhaustive trial lasting over three weeks a New York jury Tuesday declared that N. K. Fairbank, of Chicago, owed David Belasco, dramatist and stage manager, $16,000, with 5 per cent. interest from 1890, for making an actress out of Mrs. Leslie Carter. This verdict gives Mr. Belasco over $20,000 in reality, and is in the nature of a vindication for him and his witnesses, as well as a reward for his services.

Smelting Company Collapses.

It will be a surprise to the business world to learn that the New York Smelting and Refining Company is in financial difficulties, and that there has been a defalcation and several employes missing.

Order of Shriners Meet.

The twenty-second annual session of the Imperial Council of the Nobles of the Mystic Shrine opened in Cleveland. There were fully 4,000 shiners in town.

CANDIDATES GALORE.

HOT TIMES PROMISED AT THE CHICAGO CONVENTION.

Chances of Eastern Men for the Presidential Nomination Not Considered Good—Boies of Iowa a Slight Favorite Over the Others.

A Wide Open Race.

From present indications there will be more excitement to the square inch jammed into the Democratic convention at Chicago than ever before in the history of the party. It will be a mighty clash between the silver soldiers of the West and South against the golden warriors of the East. This will be one feature of the combat. Astute leaders on the other side of the fence acknowledge that the fight will be short and bitter, and that the silver legion will rule the roost. Statisticians have figured that the silver delegates will outnumber the others two to one.

The feature of the combat which will attract the gaze of the nation, and which will bring out every ounce of fighting stuff in each and every delegate, will be the free for all struggle for the nomination. No presidential convention in the history of the country was ever such an open affair as this promises to be. There are more candidates in the field than ever before, and the chance of one man is as good as the next. It would not be a surprising thing to those skilled in the way of politics if some man, the blackest kind of a dark horse, bobbed up at the eleventh hour and swept the convention like a cyclone. Many people expect this to happen. Chairman Harrity, of the national committee, is one of them.

That a Western man will gather in the nomination is practically conceded. The South has some hope, but the cooler heads among the Southern leaders say the time is not ripe for a man south of the Mason and Dixon line to head the Democratic ticket, particularly one who wears the Confederate button. But a sturdy fight will be put up for the second place on the ticket, and if the South succeeds in this the East will be shut out completely. The West has the bulk of the candidates in the field, as a glance at the following list shows:

A Long List.

Here are the names of the men who will be pushed by their respective friends for the nomination:

Claude Matthews (silver), Indiana.
James E. Campbell (the platform), Ohio.
John M. Schofield (the platform), Illinois.
Henry M. Teller (silver), Colorado.
David Bennett Hill (gold), New York.
William E. Russell (the platform), Massachusetts.
William Ralls Morrison (the platform), Illinois.
Horace Boies (silver), Iowa.
Robert E. Pattison (the platform), Pennsylvania.
Richard P. Bland (silver), Missouri.
J. C. S. Blackburn (silver), Kentucky.
Adlai E. Stevenson (the platform), Illinois.
John Griffen Carlisle (gold), Kentucky.
Richard Olney (gold), Massachusetts.
William C. Whitney (gold), New York.
John T. Morgan (silver), Alabama.

Many of those in the above list are considered not to have a ghost of a show. Secretary Carlisle's hopes were blasted by the defeat of the gold force in Kentucky, and the fact that the State delegation goes to the convention as a unit for Senator Blackburn. Of the latter it can be said that he does not take his candidacy too seriously. He is one of the leaders who say that the country is not ready to vote for a man wearing the Confederate button. He is a believer in Horace Boies, and at the present outlook the Kentuckians will get down to business for the Iowa man. If the second place on the ticket goes to a Southern man, Senator Blackburn is considered to stand as good a chance as any one. Senator Morgan of Alabama, whose position is much the same as that of the Kentucky statesman, will get a goodly slice of votes on the first ballot, but he is not banking heavily on the nomination.

The East's Poor Show.

Ex-Secretary William C. Whitney has refused to be a candidate, although a great many of the Eastern delegates would stand ready to fight for him at the drop of the hat. Senator David B. Hill has currency views which the silverites would never accept and the same can be said of Secretary of State Richard Olney of Massachusetts. The Bay State has a candidate in ex-Gov. William E. Russell, who leans toward gold, but who would probably accept the platform on the currency question.

Ex-Gov. Thomas E. Pattison of Pennsylvania, the candidate of William Harrity, chairman of the national committee, is a gold man, but would accept the platform. Harrity is for gold, but believes in standing by the platform first, last and all the time. His chances are believed to be better than those of any other Eastern man, but few of the leaders are betting on the East these days.

Campbell of Ohio, Boies of Iowa, Matthews of Indiana, Morrison of Illinois and Bland of Missouri are considered to have the best chance, with Boies a slight favorite over the others. Campbell says he is not out for the nomination, but, of course, will accept, if it comes his way. Bland, Matthews, Boies and Morrison acknowledge they are out for it and their adherents are preparing to make a gallant fight. These four are singularly alike in many ways, representing the sturdy, independent, aggressive, Western type of manhood.

CANDIDATES FOR THE DEMOCRATIC PRESIDENTIAL NOMINATION

SILVER AT CHICAGO.

Table Showing the Relative Strength of the Two Forces.

All the Democratic State conventions having been held, it is possible now to construct a table showing the relative strength of the two factions of the party at the Chicago convention. It is as follows:

	Free silver.	Gold.
Alabama	22	..
Arkansas	16	..
California	18	..
Colorado	8	..
Connecticut	..	12
Delaware	..	6
Florida	..	8
Georgia	26	..
Idaho	6	..
Illinois	48	..
Indiana	30	..
Iowa	26	..
Kansas	20	..
Kentucky	26	..
Louisiana	16	..
Maine	..	12
Maryland	..	16
Massachusetts	..	30
Michigan	..	28
Minnesota	..	18
Mississippi	18	..
Missouri	34	..
Montana	6	..
Nebraska	16	..
Nevada	6	..
New Hampshire	..	8
New Jersey	..	20
New York	..	72
North Carolina	22	..
North Dakota	6	..
Ohio	46	..
Oregon	8	..
Pennsylvania	..	64
Rhode Island	..	8
South Carolina	18	..
South Dakota	..	8
Tennessee	24	..
Texas	30	..
Utah	6	..
Vermont	..	8
Virginia	24	..
Washington	8	..
West Virginia	12	..
Wisconsin	..	24
Wyoming	6	..
Territories	12	..
Totals	564	342

The tables made up by different persons do not agree, for one reason because the vote in some States is divided between the two factions of the party. The foregoing table is compiled on the supposition that the unit rule will prevail in all the State delegations. Another source of disagreement in tables is the territories, all of which have elected six delegates each, although the call presupposes their having but two each. If six delegates shall be seated from each territory the strength of the silver vote in the convention will be increased by just so much. Even in that event, however, the free silver men will not have a two-thirds vote by which to nominate a free silver candidate for President, though they will not fall far short of it. Florida is placed in the gold column because free silver resolutions were voted down in the State convention. Claims are made, however, that the Florida delegates will vote with the silver wing of the party. There will be contests from Nebraska and Texas, but as the silver men will be in control of the convention it may be taken for granted that the silver delegations from these States will be seated.

CONDITION OF THE CROPS.

Winter Wheat Harvest About Ended and Corn Looking Well.

Reports as to the condition of the crops throughout the country and the general effect of the weather on the growth, cultivation and harvest of the same were received at Chicago as follows:

The favorable weather conditions of the previous week have continued, under which rapid progress has been made in the cultivation of crops, especially corn, and the harvesting of winter wheat, which is now well advanced in the more northerly districts, and is practically finished in southern sections. Corn has made good progress during the week, and the general condition of this crop is very satisfactory. It is now being laid by as far north as Missouri and Central Illinois. In the States of the Central Mississippi and Lower Mississippi Valleys, where during the first half of May cultivation was much delayed and the crop very grassy, the fields are now mostly free from weeds. In Texas, Louisiana, and portions of Arkansas and Mississippi corn has suffered from drought, particularly in Texas, where much of the crop is too far advanced to be relieved by rain. In Texas and Louisiana cotton continues to suffer from drought and complaints of injury from lice are numerous from the eastern portion of the cotton belt. A marked improvement is reported from Florida. In Arkansas the crop is making slow growth, but is clean and well cultivated. In Missouri it is looking well, but fields are very foul. Cotton is now in bloom over the northern portion of the cotton region. Tobacco planting is about completed and the reports indicate that this crop is in very satisfactory condition. Kentucky, Tennessee and Ohio report good growth during the week. In Southern Virginia tobacco is in bloom and some has been topped in North Carolina.

Telegraphic Brevities.

Col. Francis W. Rhodes, brother of Cecil Rhodes, has been escorted to the border of the South African republic by Boer officials.

The retrial of the case of Robert F. Kneebs, the American horseman accused of racing a mare under an assumed name has been set in Berlin.

Earl H. Siver, aged 7, and Thomas I. Melville, aged 12, of Russell, Ill., were drowned in Opaline creek while picking pond lilies for the celebration of Children's day.

SHOUT FOR SILVER.

INDIANA DEMOCRATS FOR THE WHITE METAL.

Delegates to the Chicago Convention Pledged to Vote for Matthews for President—Shively Nominated for Governor—Cleveland's Name Hissed.

Silver Is Their Slogan.

For Governor.....B. F. Shively
For Lieutenant Governor....John C. Lawler
For Appellate Judges—

Third District.....Theodore Davis
Fourth District.....A. J. Lotz
Fifth District.....G. E. Ross
For Secretary of State.....Samuel Ralston
For Auditor of State.....J. T. Fanning
For Treasurer of State...Morgan Chandler
For Attorney General.....J. G. McNutt
For Reporter Supreme Court.Henry Warrum
For Superintendent of Public Instruction.....W. B. St. Clair
Delegates-at-large—D. W. Voorhees, David Turple, James McCabe, G. V. Menzies.
Electors-at-large—James Brown, J. B. Stoll.

The Indiana Democratic convention met in Tomlinson Hall, Indianapolis, at 10 o'clock Wednesday morning. It was the largest political assemblage in the State in recent years and comprised 1,747 delegates. At least 75 per cent of these represented the ultra-free-silver wing of the party. Robert C. Bell, of Allen County, was unanimously chosen president of the convention. State Chairman Sterling Holt called the convention to order. Every county reported a full representation.

The names of Major G. V. Menzies of Mount Vernon and Gilbert Shanklin of Evansville were presented for delegates-at-large. Menzies is a gold advocate and Shanklin favors free silver. Shanklin made a speech of withdrawal. The committee on credentials reported in favor of the free silver contestants in the majority of cases. A minority report was filed by the gold advocates. The delegates-at-large and electors nominated in the report and confirmed by the convention are as follows: Senator D. W. Voorhees, Senator David Turpie, Judge James McCabe and George V. Menzies. Alternates, John E. Lamb, David F. Allen, J. C. Nelson and C. K. Tharp; electors for the State at large, James Brown and John B. Stoll; contingent electors, D. S. Gooding and W. C. Durbrow. The committee recommended Robert C. Bell of Allen County for permanent chairman of the convention and it was concurred in with the adoption of the report.

Permanent Chairman R. C. Bell thanked the convention for calling him to preside, and eulogized the Democratic State record and the illustrious Democrats of the State, including an elaborate and pleasant reference to Gov. Matthews in connection with the presidency. Chairman Bell concluded in part as follows:

Fellow-Democrats: To-day we are in the midst of a great crisis. You will be expected to give expression to your views on the financial question. You will help to determine whether, adhering to the time-honored principles and the repeated declarations of the Democratic party, we shall insist upon a financial system which favors the use of both silver and gold as standard money at the long-established ratio of 16 to 1; whether we are great and proud enough to direct our own affairs as a free and independent nation, or whether we must submit to the dictation of some foreign power; whether more than seventy millions of free people shall remain at the mercy of and in full subjection to a small coterie of so-called capitalists of this and other countries who can in a very few days "corner" all the gold in this country and reduce or fix the values of our property as they please.

I adjure you to speak in no uncertain terms. This issue overshadows all others. Let us sink all personal considerations and preferences in deference to the common good.

Other matters of importance will come before you. We seem to be called upon to make special effort to maintain the Democratic doctrine of President Monroe that we shall not tolerate any further encroachments of foreign powers upon the territory of this country by way of acquisition, no matter under what guise; that we are in favor of raising sufficient revenue by taxation for the support of the Government economically administered and no more; that a tax is never a blessing; that good character and good citizenship are the result and outgrowth of individual education and development, and that you cannot make men good by statutory or restrictive legislation, and that the Democratic party is in favor now, as it always has been, of the largest degree of personal liberty for the citizen consistent with good government and the safety of the public.

Contested Seats.

The next question to lead to a wrangle was the report of the committee on credentials on the Indianapolis contests. The report seated the gold men from the Sixth ward and divided the Fifth ward equally between the two elements, and then gave all the free silver contestants in the other wards, some forty in number, seats in the convention. The report recommended the adoption of a resolution ordering the seventh district convention to meet at once and report its selections of members of the various committees to the convention. Senator Kern offered a minority report from the committee on credentials, but the free silver people refused to recognize him and the report was only permitted to be filed without being read. In filing it, however, and getting it admitted as a part of the record of the convention, the honest money men claim that they have secured the basis of their contest before the national committee.

During the recess the seventh district held their convention, selecting Will E. English and Charles W. Cooper as delegates to the national convention. English was on both slates, the free silver men selecting him out of deference to the wishes of Gov. Matthews, and the gold men having done the same, because he is in sympathy with them in their fight against the white metal.

Immediately following the recess Cyrus McNutt, of Vigo, presented the platform committee's report to the convention. It was not a surprise to the gold men in its declaration for free silver, and its adoption under the operation of the previous question was carried with practical unanimity.

Ex-Congressman Bynum made an effort to present a minority report, but he was howled down, and much confusion followed. Finally he was permitted to address the convention for five minutes.

The chairman then ordered the convention to proceed to the ballot for Governor. James R. Seller of Montgomery County, B. F. Shively of St. Joseph, John G. Shanklin of Vanderburg, and George W. Cooper, the latter the only gold man in the list, were placed before the convention. Seller and Shanklin withdrew and the ballot resulted in the nomination of Shively by a vote of 1,644 to 103 for Cooper. By a curious coincidence the ballot lacked but four votes of 16 to 1 in favor of Shively.

The ticket was then completed, as follows: Lieutenant Governor, John C. Lawler, Tippecanoe County; Appellate Judge, first district, Edwin Taylor, Vanderburg; second district, Frank E. Gavin, Decatur; third district, Theodore Davis, Hamilton; fourth district, A. J. Lotz, Delaware; fifth district, G. E. Ross, Cass; Secretary of State, Samuel Ralston, Boone; Auditor of State, J. T. Fanning, Marion; Treasurer of State, Morgan Chandler, Hancock; Attorney General, J. G. McNutt, Vigo; reporter of the Supreme Court, Henry Warrum, Marion; superintendent of public instruction, W. B. St. Clair, Starke.

The delegates to Chicago met and organized by electing Senator David Turpie chairman, Myron D. King secretary and James Murdock treasurer. Ten members of the committee pledged themselves to go to Chicago and open headquarters and begin the campaign for Matthews from the convention city.

OHIO WANTS SILVER.

GOLD MEN ARE BURIED IN STATE CONVENTION.

Leaders of the Democratic Party Think One Plank Enough Upon Which to Win or Loose, but They Make that One Strong.

Buckeye Democrats.

Free silver won an easy victory in the Ohio State Democratic convention at Columbus. Before the work of the convention was two-thirds accomplished followers of the gold standard left their seats and sought freedom in the open air. They refused to be called holters, and said they would stand by the platform and ticket presented by the convention. The free silver leaders will at once attempt to patch up peace between the two wings of the party.

It was a singular convention in some respects. It had but one idol, free silver. All other issues were disregarded.

One plank was enough for the party to stand upon or fall from, was the dictum of the leaders. That plank and platform is the following uncompromising enunciation on the money question:

We, the Democrats of Ohio, in convention assembled, hold that the money question is the vital and paramount issue now before the people of this country, and that its early and correct settlement is necessary to the revival of business and the return of prosperity; therefore,

Resolved, That we are unalterably opposed to the single gold standard and demand an immediate return to the constitutional money of gold and silver by the restoration by this Government, independent of other nations, of the unrestricted coinage of both silver and gold into standard money at the ratio of 16 to 1, and upon the terms of exact equality existing prior to 1873; such silver coin to be a full legal tender, equally with gold coin, for all debts and dues, public and private.

Resolved, That the delegates-at-large, this day chosen by this convention, and the delegates to the National Convention, from the several Congressional districts, be, and they are hereby instructed to use all honorable means to secure the adoption of the principles contained in the foregoing resolution by the National Democratic Convention, to be held at Chicago, July 7, and to vote only for candidates for President and Vice President who are known to be in full accord therewith; and to accomplish these ends to cast the votes from the State of Ohio as a unit, as a majority may determine.

Other Planks Rejected.

The above resolutions were presented as the majority report of the committee on resolutions, and adopted by a vote of 542 yeas to 128 nays, a vote that revealed the strength of the silver and gold forces in the convention for the first time. The gold men tried to add a minority report which in nowise conflicted with the sentiment of the majority. The minority report simply reaffirmed the time-honored principles of the Democratic party in stereotyped language. It stood by the national Democratic platform of 1892 on the tariff question; demanded the submission of a constitutional amendment looking to the election of Senators by popular vote; favored the recognition of Cuba as an independent power; reaffirmed the party's devotion to the Monroe doctrine; opposed all legislation interfering with the personal liberty of American citizens, and finally denounced the last Republican Legislature of Ohio as extravagant and corrupt beyond measure.

The silver delegates raised commotion over this addition. To give it consideration would be granting the gold men the privilege of being heard, and the minority report was chucked beneath the table without ceremony. The gold men opposed the unit rule and asked to have the language modified slightly; they were again sat upon.

William A. Taylor, who was at the head of the Democratic State ticket as the candidate for Secretary of State in 1892, and came within less than a thousand votes of election, was the temporary chairman, and Gen. A. J. Warner, the free silver leader, was the permanent chairman. Both in their speeches dwelt upon the free coinage movement and vigorously upheld it.

After Col. Taylor had finished speaking Reuben Turney of Tuscarawas County threw the convention into a turmoil by saying: "Looking down upon this convention is that arch traitor, that Benedict Arnold of the Democratic party, Grover Cleveland." He wanted the portrait removed. Mr. Turney was hissed so that he could not proceed. A. W. Patrick, who presented the minority report on resolutions for silver last year, was invited to the stage and made a free coinage speech.

For the four delegates-at-large Messrs. McLean, Thurman, Holden and Finley were declared elected. As alternates W. E. Decker of Paulding, Casper T. V. Hopple of Cincinnati, Peter H. Degnan of Toledo and John W. Conwell of Cadiz were chosen.

For electors-at-large J. S. Fechheimer of Cincinnati and T. E. Powell of Columbus were nominated.

Nominees for State Offices.

For Secretary of State Chilton A. White of Georgetown was declared the nominee after much disorder.

E. J. Blandin of Cleveland was nominated for judge of the Supreme Court.

For food and dairy commissioner, Patrick McKeown of Cincinnati was declared the nominee.

William Beaumont of Newark, was nominated for member of the Board of Public Works, getting 265 votes to 258 for Joseph Franks. This completed the work of the convention.

The State central committee was reorganized with W. W. Durbin of Kenton as chairman and John A. Rule of Cincinnati as secretary, both original radical free silver men. This committee, as well as the other committees, stood 2 to 1 for free silver.

The third congressional district, the last in the State to select its delegates to the Chicago convention, elected its delegates at Columbus Wednesday evening. They are J. C. Patterson of Dayton

THE SILENT SHORE.

By John Strange Winter

CHAPTER V.—(Continued.)

"Do not misunderstand me!" Cundall answered. "I simply want you to tell her and her father all this, and be married as Gervase Occleve. I cannot be her husband—I have told you I shall never see her face again—all I wish is that she shall be under no delusion. As for the title, that would have no charms for me, and you cannot suppose that I, who have been given so much, should want to take your property away from you."

"You would have me live a beggar on your charity!—and that a charity which you may see fit to withdraw at any moment, as you have seen fit to suddenly disclose yourself at the most important crisis of my life." He spoke bitterly, almost brutally to the other, but he could not rouse him to anger. The elder brother simply said:

"Heaven forgive you for your thoughts of me!"

"And now," Gervase said, "perhaps you will tell me what you wish done. I shall of course inform Sir Paul Raughton that, in my altered circumstances, my marriage with his daughter must be abandoned."

"No, no!"

"Yes! I say. It will not take twenty-four hours to prove whether you are right in your claim, for if I see the certificate of your birth it will be enough——"

"It is here," Cundall said, producing it.

"Had you kept silence no harm could have been done."

"The worst possible harm would have been done."

"No one on earth but you knew this story until yesterday, and it was in your power to have let it remain in oblivion. But, though you have chosen to bring it forward, there is one consolation still left to me. In spite of your stepping into my shoes, in spite of your wealth, you will never have Ida Raughton's love. No trick can ever deprive me of that, though she may never be my wife."

"Your utterances of this morning at least prove you to be unworthy of it," Cundall answered, stung at last to anger. "You have insulted me grossly, not only in your sneers, but also by your behavior. And I have lost all compassion for you! I had intended to let you tell this story in your own way to Sir Paul Raughton and his daughter, but I have now changed my mind. When they return to town, after Ascot next week, I shall call upon Sir Paul and tell him everything. Even though you, yourself, shall have spoken first."

"So be it! I want nothing from you, not even your compassion. To-night I shall leave this house, so that I shall not be indebted to you for a roof."

"I am sorry you have taken it in this light," Cundall said, again calming himself, as he went to the door. "I would have given you the love of a brother, had you willed it."

"If you give me the feeling that I have for you, it is one of utter hatred and contempt! Even though you be my brother, I will never recognize you in this world, either by word or action, as anything but my bitterest foe."

Cundall looked fixedly at him for one moment, then he opened the door and went out.

Philip Smerdon had watched his friend carefully through the interview, and, although there was cause for his excitement, he was surprised at the transformation that had taken place in him.

He had always been gentle and kind to every one with whom he was brought into contact; now he seemed to have become a fury.

Even the loss of name, and lands, and love, seemed hardly sufficient to have brought about this violence of rage.

"It would almost have been better to have remained on friendly terms with him, I think," he said. "Perhaps he thought he was only doing his duty in disclosing himself."

"Perhaps so!" the other said. "But, as for being friendly with him—I wish he were dead!"

CHAPTER VI.

Sir Paul Raughton's Ascot party had been excellently arranged, every guest being specially chosen with a view to making an harmonious whole.

Belmont was a charming villa, lying almost on the borders of the two lovely counties of Berkshire and Surrey, and neither the beauties of Nature nor Art were wanting.

Yet, although Sir Paul's selection of guests had been admirable, disappointment had come to him and Ida, for two who would have been the most welcome, Mr. Cundall and Lord Penlyn, had written to say that they would not come. The former's letter had been very short, and the explanation given for his refusal was that he was again preparing to leave England, perhaps for a very long period.

And Lord Penlyn's had been to the effect that some business affairs connected with his property would prevent him from leaving town during the week.

Moreover, it was dated from a fashionable hotel in the West End and not from Occleve House.

When Ida read these letters she was sorely troubled, for she could not help imagining that there was something more than strange in the fact that the man who was engaged to her and the man who had proposed to her only a few nights ago should both have abstained from coming to spend the week with them.

At first she wondered if they could have met and quarreled—but then she reflected that that was not possible! Surely Mr. Cundall would not have told Gervase that he had proposed to her and been refused.

She went to her room that night tired and worried, but her night's rest was very broken.

In the early part the flashing of lightning and the roar of thunder (a storm having broken over the neighborhood) kept her awake, and when she slept she did so uneasily, waking often. Once she started up and listened tremblingly, as though hearing some unaccustomed sound, and even rose and opened her door and looked into the passage.

"Of what was she afraid?" she asked herself.

The house was full of visitors; it was, of all times, the least one likely for harm to come. Then she went back to bed and eventually slept again, though only to dream.

Her brain must have retained what she had read in Walter Cundall's letter that morning, for she dreamt that he was taking his farewell of her; only it seemed that they were back again in the conservatory attached to Lady Chesterton's ball room.

She was seated in the same place as she had been when he told her of his love; she could hear the dreamy strains of the very same waltz—nothing was changed, except that it seemed darker, much darker; and she could do little more than recognize his form and see his dark, sad eyes fixed on her.

Then he bent over and kissed her gently on the forehead—more as it seemed in her dream, with a brother's than a lover's kiss—and said: "Farewell, forever! In this world we two shall never meet again."

Then, as he turned to go, she saw behind him another form with its face shrouded, but with a figure that seemed wonderfully familiar to her, and, as he faced it, it sprang upon him.

And with a shriek she awoke—awoke to see the bright sun shining outside and to notice that the hands of the clock pointed to nearly eight.

And her first action was to kneel by the side of her bed and to thank heaven that it was only a dream.

Her disturbed rest made her, perhaps, a little paler than usual in the morning, but had thus only added a more delicate tinge to her loveliness. As she stood talking to young Montagu on the veranda, this youth began to wish that he was Lord Penlyn.

It was at this time that, to the different groups scattered about, there came a rumor that a horrible murder had been committed in London last night, or early that morning.

A few persons, who had come down by the last special train, had heard something about it, but they did not know anything of the details; and two or three copies of the first editions of the evening papers had arrived, but they told very little, except that undoubtedly a murder had taken place, and that the victim was, to all appearances, a gentleman.

"Get a paper, Montagu," the baronet said, "and let us see what it is."

He came back in a few moments, having succeeded in borrowing a second edition from a friend, and he read out to them the particulars, which were by no means full.

It appeared that, after the storm in London was over, which was about three o'clock in the morning, a policeman going on his walk down the Mall of St. James Park, had come across a gentleman lying by the railings that divide that part of it from the gardens, a gentleman whom he at first took to be overcome by drink.

On shaking him, however, he discovered him to be dead, and he then thought he must have been struck by lightning. A further glance showed that this was not the case, as he perceived that the dead man was stabbed in the region of the heart, that his watch and chain had been wrenched away (there being a broken piece of the chain left in the button hole), and, if he had any, his papers and pocket-book taken.

His umbrella, which was without any name or engraving, was by his side; his linen, which was extremely fine, was unmarked, and his clothes, although drenched with mud and rain, were of the best possible quality.

That, up to now, was all the information the paper possessed.

"How dreadful to think of a man being murdered in such a public place as that!" Ida said. "Surely the murderer cannot long escape!"

It was a glorious evening after a glorious day; and, some laughing and talking, some flirting, and some discussing the day's racing and speculating on that of the morrow, they soon forgot all about the tragedy.

Not one of them supposed that the murdered man was likely to be known to them, nor that the crime had broken up their Ascot week. But when they had gone to their rooms to dress for dinner, they learned that the dead man was known to them.

A telegram had come to Sir Paul from his butler in London, saying: "The gentleman murdered in St. James Park last night was Mr. Cundall. He has been identified by his butler and servants."

CHAPTER VII.

About the same time that Sir Paul Raughton received the telegram from London, and was taking counsel with one or two of his elder guests as to whether he should at once tell Ida the dreadful news or leave it till the morning, Lord Penlyn entered his hotel in town.

His face, which usually bore a good color, was ghastly pale, his eyes had great hollows and deep rings around them, and even his lips looked as if the blood had left them.

He had come from his club, where, since it had been discovered who the victim of last night's tragedy was, nothing else but the murder had been talked about, as was also the case in every club and public place in London, and he now mounted the steps of the hotel with the manner of a man who was either very weak or very weary.

Lord Penlyn entered his room and took up a letter that was lying on his table, and proceeded to open it, throwing himself at the same time wearily into an arm chair.

He read it carefully from beginning to end, and then dropped it on the floor as he put his hands up to his head and wailed:

"Murdered! Murdered! When he had written this letter only an hour before."

And then he wept long and bitterly.

The letter ran:

"My Brother—Since I saw you last Saturday I have been thinking deeply upon what passed between us, and I have come to the conclusion that, after all, it will be best for nothing to be said to any one on the subject of our father's first marriage, not even to Miss Raughton or her father.

"I suggest this, nay, I command you to do this, because of my love for her, a love which desires that her life may be without pain or sorrow. I shall not witness her happiness with you, not yet at least, for I do not think I could bear that; but, in some future years, it may be that time will have so tempered my sorrow to me that I shall be able to see you all in all to each other.

"Remember, therefore, what I, by my right as your elder brother—which I exert for the first and last time!—charge you to do. Retain your position, still be to the world what you have been, and devote your life to her.

"Let us forget the bitter words we each spoke in our interview. Our lives are bound up in one cause, and that, and our relationship, should prevent their ever being remembered. Your brother,

"WALTER."

When he was calmer, he picked the letter up again and read it through once more, having carefully locked the door before he did so, for he did not wish his valet to see his emotion.

But the re-reading of it brought him no peace, indeed seemed only to increase his anguish.

When the man servant knocked at his door he bade him go away for a time, as he was engaged and could not be disturbed; and then he passed an hour pacing up and down the room, muttering to himself, starting at the slightest sound, and nearly mad with his thoughts.

These thoughts he could not collect; he did not know what steps to take next. What was he to tell Ida or Sir Paul—or was he to tell them anything?

The dead man, the murdered brother, had enjoined on him, in what he could not have known was to be a dying request, that he was to keep the secret. Why, then, then should he say anything?

There was no need to do so! He was Lord Penlyn now, there was nothing to tell! No one but Philip, who was trustworthy, knew that he had ever been anything else. No one would ever know it. And he shuddered as he thought that, if the world did ever know that Walter Cundall had been his brother, then the world would believe him to be his murderer! No! it must never be known that he and that other were of the same blood.

He rang for his man and told him to pack up and pay the bill, and take his things round to Occleve House, and that he should arrive there late; and the man seemed surprised at his orders.

He was a quiet, discreet man, but as he packed his master's portmanteau he reflected a good deal on the occurrences of the past few days.

First of all, he remembered the visit of Mr. Cundall on Saturday to Occleve House, and that the footman had told him that he had heard some excited conversation going on as he had passed the room.

Was there any connecting link between Mr. Cundall's visit to his master, and his master leaving the house and giving up Ascot?

And was there any connection between all this and the murder of Mr. Cundall, and the visible agitation of Lord Penlyn?

He could not believe it, but still it did seem strange that this visit of Mr. Cundall's should have been followed by such an alteration of his master's plans, and by his own horrible death.

Lord Penlyn walked on to Pall Mall, going very slowly and in an almost dazed state, and surprised several whom he met by his behavior to them.

Looking very wan and miserable, he walked on to "Black's," and there he found the murder as much a subject of discussion as it was everywhere else.

THE CHANCE PASSAGE.

It Failed to Support the Scotchman in His Practice.

An old Scotchman had a roommate in New York who was not fond of early rising, and never stirred from his bed until the breakfast bell rang. The older man considered it his duty to warn the young man against the effects of indolence, and at the same to impart religious instruction to him.

Every morning the Scotchman arose at six o'clock, shaved himself, and when completely dressed shook his young friend and addressed him in this manner:

"Now, lad, you see what it is to gain time. Here I am, dressed and ready for breakfast, with half an hour in which to read a chapter in the Bible and to commit a verse to memory, which may serve a useful purpose during the day. Now I shall open the good book at random, and read any verse on which my eye chances to light; and I think it probable that the verse will have some special application for the events of the day. Meanwhile, there you are, with barely enough time to dress for breakfast, and not a minute to spare for good reflections."

For a week or more this address was repeated every morning with litle variation, and the chance passage read aloud. Then the young man gave the Scotchman a dose of his own medicine.

It was a cold morning, when the Scotchman, wearied by late hours the previous night, overslept. The younger roommate arose softly, dressed himself quickly and aroused him.

"Here I am," began the convert to the new gospel of early rising, "in complete order for breakfast and ready to turn to a verse in the good book which may serve me a useful turn during the day."

"Well dope," said the Scotchman, rubbing his hands.

"You know, too," continued the young man, without a smile on his face, "that one's hands may be directed by something that is not blind chance to a verse which may be highly significant."

"Certainly," said the Scotchman, pleased to perceive that his lesson had been aptly learned by the pupil. "Open the book and read the first passage which your eye catches."

The young man opened the book, and without a pause or a smile read the following verse from Proverbs:

"He that blesseth his friend with a loud voice, rising early in the morning, it shall be counted a curse to him."

The serious Scotchman was taken back so completely by the sentiment that he demanded the book and had to read the verse through his spectacles before he could believe that his companion was not deceiving him.

"Well, lad,' he remarked gravely, "I suppose it was meant for my benefit. I'll let you sleep another morning."

Shaving in All Ages.

The confessor of Francis II. of France refused him absolution until he had completely removed his beard.

An ancient German was, by tribal custom, not allowed to cut off his flowing beard until he had killed his first man in battle.

About the year 200 B. C. the Roman Emperor Scipio Africanus inaugurated the custom of shaving among the Roman nobles.

Henry I. of England wore a beard until a courageous preacher leveled his eloquence at him to such good purpose that he submitted to be shaved.

From the time of Julius Caesar until the advent of William the Conqueror the Britons wore mustaches, but the clergy, after the conversion of the islanders, were forced to shave by law.

One of the early Popes established the shaving of Roman Catholic priests to distinguish them from the patriots of Constantinople. The priests of the Greek church still wear beards.

Peter the Great of Russia laid a tax on beards, and delinquents were forced to have their faces shaved with a blunt razor or to have the hairs pulled out with pincers. So everybody shaved.

The first shaving was done by order of Alexander the Great, who forced the Greek warriors to cut off their beards, as he found them awkward impediments in the hand-to-hand contests at that time.—Mail and Express.

An Aged Jewess.

A Jewess named Caroline Levy, now in the Bethnal Green infirmary, proves in a curious way that she is 110 years old. She was born in 1786, and since 1848 has drawn a pension from Baroness Rothschild's aged widows' charity fund, which is strictly confined to widows over 60 years of age. Before granting pensions the trustees make careful investigations as to the age of the applicants, and on their books it is shown that Mrs. Levy proved to their satisfaction that she was 62 years old forty-eight years ago.

The Indiana Democratic convention met in Tomlinson Hall, Indianapolis, at 10 o'clock Wednesday morning. It was the largest political assemblage in the State in recent years and comprised 1,747 delegates. At least 75 per cent of these represented the ultra-free-silver wing of the party. Robert C. Bell, of Allen County, was unanimously chosen president of the convention. State Chairman Sterling Holt called the convention to order. Every county reported a full representation. Prayer was offered by Rev. Gustave Carstensen.

The names of Major G. V. Menzies of Mount Vernon and Gilbert Shanklin of Evansville were presented for delegates-at-large. Menzies is a gold advocate and Shanklin favors free silver. Shanklin made a speech of withdrawal. The committee on credentials reported in favor of the free silver contestants in the majority of cases. A minority report was filed by the gold advocates. The delegates-at-large and electors nominated in the report and confirmed by the convention are as follows: Senator D. W. Voorhees, Senator David Turpie, Judge James McCabe and George V. Menzies. Alternates, John E. Lamb, David F. Allen, J. C. Nelson and C. K. Tharp; electors for the State at large, James Brown and John B. Stoll; contingent electors, D. S. Gooding and W. C. Durbrow. The committee recommended Robert C. Bell of Allen County for permanent chairman of the convention and it was concurred in with the adoption of the report.

BENJAMIN F. SHIVELY,
Nominee for Governor of Indiana.

GOVERNOR CLAUDE MATTHEWS.
Choice of Indiana Democrats for President of the United States.

Permanent Chairman R. C. Bell thanked the convention for calling him to preside, and eulogized the Democratic State record and the illustrious Democrats of the State, including an elaborate and pleasant reference to Gov. Matthews in connection with the presidency. Chairman Bell concluded in part as follows:

Fellow-Democrats: To-day we are in the midst of a great crisis. You will be expected to give expression to your views on the financial question. You will help to determine whether, adhering to the time-honored principles and the repeated declarations of the Democratic party, we shall insist upon a financial system which favors the use of both silver and gold as standard money at the long-established ratio of 16 to 1; whether we are great and proud enough to direct our own affairs as a free and independent nation, or whether we must submit to the dictation of some foreign power; whether more than seventy millions of free people shall remain at the mercy of and in full subjection to a small coterie of so-called capitalists of this and other countries who can in a very few days "corner" all the gold in this country and reduce or fix the values of our property as they please.

I adjure you to speak in no uncertain terms. This issue overshadows all others. Let us sink all personal considerations and preferences in deference to the common good.

Other matters of importance will come before you. We seem to be called upon to make special effort to maintain the Democratic doctrine of President Monroe that we shall not tolerate any further encroachments of foreign powers upon the territory of this country by way of acquisition, no matter under what guise; that we are in favor of raising sufficient revenue by taxation for the support of the Government economically administered and no more; that a tax is never a blessing; that good character and good citizenship are the result and outgrowth of individual education and development, and that you cannot make men good by statutory or restrictive legislation, and that the Democratic party is in favor now, as it always has been, of the largest degree of personal liberty for the citizen consistent with good government and the safety of the public.

Contested Seats.

The next question to lead to a wrangle was the report of the committee on credentials on the Indianapolis contests. The report seated the gold men from the Sixth ward and divided the Fifth ward equally between the two elements, and then gave all the free silver contestants in the other wards, some forty in number, seats in the convention. The report recommended the adoption of a resolution ordering the seventh district convention to meet at once and report its selections of members of the various committees to the convention. Senator Kern offered a minority report from the committee on credentials, but the free silver people refused to recognize him and the report was only permitted to be filed without being read. In filing it, however, and getting it admitted as a part of the record of the convention, the honest money men claim that they have secured the basis of their contest before the national committee.

During the recess the seventh district held their convention, selecting Will E. English and Charles W. Cooper as delegates to the national convention. English was on both slates, the free silver men selecting him out of deference to the wishes of Gov. Matthews, and the gold men having done the same, because he is in sympathy with them in their fight against the white metal.

Immediately following the recess Cyrus McNutt, of Vigo, presented the platform committee's report to the convention. It was not a surprise to the gold men in its declaration for free silver, and its adoption under the operation of the previous question was carried with practical unanimity. It is as follows:

We reaffirm our adherence to the faithful Democratic doctrine of bimetallism, and therefore we demand the immediate restoration of bimetallism by the free and unrestricted coinage of both silver and gold as primary money at the ratio of 16 to 1, without waiting the co-operation of Great Britain or any other foreign power, all such coinage to be full legal tender in payment of all debts, public and private.

Resolved. That we believe the existing tariff laws will be fully equal to all demands for needed revenue for the expenses of the Government, economically administered, under the conditions which will arise from the restoration of bimetallism.

We are opposed to the redemption and final cancellation of United States notes (greenbacks) or any other notes or certificates issued by the United States to circulate as money, such redemption and cancellation necessarily involving an increase of the public debt, by the issue of bonds and the reduction of the currency. We demand a sufficient, stable volume of money, gold, silver and paper, to meet the requirements of our overgrowing population and the constant increase of our productive industries.

We protest against the increase of the public debt by the issue of interest-bearing bonds or otherwise in a time of peace, and if the redemption clause of the so-called Sherman resumption act of 1875 authorizes, as is claimed, the right of the Treasury Department to issue interest-bearing bonds without limit, without the express and definite authority of Congress as to each issue of such bonds, we demand that the provisions of such act be unconditionally repealed. The Democratic party has never believed that the public debt was a public blessing.

We demand that obligations of the Government of every form be paid and be redeemed in conformity with the laws under which they were issued in coin, gold and silver, at the option of the Government of the United States and not at the option of the creditor.

Resolved, That we have heretofore favored and enforced much legislation in our State friendly to labor; we continue to support and shall maintain a policy favorable to organized labor, with all its rightful orders and ordinances, and we specially commend the action of the United States Senate during its last session in passing an act providing for trial by jury in the Federal courts in cases of alleged contempt.

That we demand such legislation by the General Assembly of the State as shall provide for a just and equitable method of arbitration of all disputes and controversies arising between employers and employees.

To the gallant survivors of the army of the Union, to the widows and children of those deceased, we tender our steadfast regard and gratitude. We favor the prompt adjustment, the punctual and regular payment of all pensions as the same accrue.

We believe that the pension is a vested right. We heartily indorse the rule of Commissioner Murphy that no name shall be arbitrarily dropped from the rolls, and the fact of enlistment and service should be deemed conclusive evidence against prior disease and disability.

That we do most earnestly sympathize with the people of the island of Cuba in their gallant struggle against the Spanish monarchy for freedom and independence.

We believe that public war exists in Cuba and that the parties thereto ought to be accorded all the rights of belligerents.

We are in favor of the election of United States Senators by direct vote of the people of the several States.

The Democratic party is the faithful and consistent adherent of that great principle of popular government known as personal liberty of the citizen, and opposes intolerance of whatever character, and especially opposes any attempt to control the habits of the people where such habits are consistent with the public order and general welfare.

The comfort and convenience of all the inhabitants of the State require good roads. We are therefore in favor of such legislation as will serve to stimulate the enterprise of the people to the end that such roads may be constructed.

We are opposed to all subsidies or land grants to private corporations, believing that the remainder of the public domain ought to be subject to entry by actual settlers only.

PERMANENT CHAIRMAN BELL.

Resolved, That this convention fully and cordially indorses the course and action of Senators Voorhees and Turple in the Senate of the United States as having been at all times true and loyal to the interests of our State and country, and as having been distinguished by signal ability and success in the discharge of the duties of their high position, and we tender Daniel W. Voorhees that faithful and long-tried friend of the people, our sincere sympathies in the severe illness from which he has suffered and our heartfelt wishes for his early and complete recovery.

Resolved, That we indorse the administration of Claude Matthews, Governor of Indiana, as having been wise, prudent and patriotic, and that his practical ability, his executive genius and capacity for public affairs, as well as his high personal integrity and character and his popularity with the people, all show him to be well worthy of higher honors.

We earnestly commend Gov. Matthews, in full confidence of success at the election of the Democracy of the United States, as a candidate for the Presidency, and the delegates from Indiana to the National Convention are hereby instructed to cast their vote in his favor for President first, last and all the time, and to use all honorable efforts to secure his nomination.

The thirty delegates strictly to represent the Democracy of Indiana in the Chicago National Convention are instructed to vote as a unit upon all questions involving platform or candidate in the convention.

Ex-Congressman Bynum made an effort to present a minority report, but he was howled down, and much confusion followed. Finally he was permitted to address the convention for five minutes.

The chairman then ordered the convention to proceed to the ballot for Governor. James R. Seller of Montgomery County, B. F. Shively of St. Joseph, John G. Shanklin of Vanderburg, and George W. Cooper, the latter the only gold man in the list, were placed before the convention. Seller and Shanklin withdrew and the ballot resulted in the nomination of Shively by a vote of 1,644 to 103 for Cooper. By a curious coincidence the ballot lacked but four votes of 16 to 1 in favor of Shively. The nominee made a short speech, in which he won plaudits from both elements.

The ticket was then completed, as follows: Lieutenant Governor, John C. Lawler, Tippecanoe County; Appellate Judge, first district, Edwin Taylor, Vanderburg; second district, Frank E. Gavin, Decatur; third district, Theodore Davis, Hamilton; fourth district, A. J. Lotz, Delaware; fifth district, G. E. Ross, Cass; Secretary of State, Samuel Ralston, Boone; Auditor of State, J. T. Fanning, Marion; Treasurer of State, Morgan Chandler, Hancock; Attorney General, J. G. McNutt, Vigo; reporter of the Supreme Court, Henry Warrum, Marion; superintendent of public instruction, W. B. St. Clair, Starke.

The delegates to Chicago met and organized by electing Senator David Turpie chairman, Myron D. King secretary and James Murdock treasurer. Ten members of the committee pledged themselves to go to Chicago and open headquarters and begin the campaign for Matthews from the convention city.

Wire.

The finest wire in the country is made at Taunton, Mass. This metal cobweb of minute diameter is exactly the 1 500th part of an inch in thickness—much finer than human hair. Ordinary wire, even though of small diameter, is drawn through holes in steel plates, but, on account of the wear, such plates cannot be used in making the hair wire. The Taunton factory mentioned uses drilled diamonds for that purpose.

THIRTY MILES AN HOUR.

That Is the Record Made by Tom Linton, an English Bicyclist.

Tom Linton, who has just created a new cycle record for the hour by going thirty miles and 214 yards at the Velodrome de la Seine, in Paris, is an Englishman with a record. Many long-distance riders have been trying for some time to crowd thirty miles into one hour's riding, but Linton is the first to accomplish it. A. A. Chase was the next nearest, he having ridden twenty-nine miles and 300 yards within the hour at the Wood Green track in England on May 19. Linton's great effort was paced, of course, and by the celebrated English Gladiator team. It was timed by A. Moore and E. Girard, and was witnessed by such well-known cycling authorities as Leon Hamelle, President of the Union Cycliste; Paul Bernard, Spoke and Badnel, besides an army of enthusiasts. Linton went at his task in a most determined manner and began record-breaking almost at the start. At the seventh kilometer he had beaten Barden's record, and then fell the records of Bouhours and Chase. During all his ride he kept up a furious pace. His pacemakers could not go fast enough to keep out of his way, and he was ready for another hour's ride when his first hour was completed. Linton's ride all the way up to thirty miles was remarkable, and the record is interesting. He did his first five miles in 9:42, ten in 19:30 1-5, fifteen in 29:33 2-5, twenty in 39:29 2-5, twenty-five in 49:34 3-5, and thirty in 59:46 1-5. Chase, in his run at Wood Green, occupied 1:01:46 1-5 in going thirty miles, his record for the hour being twenty-nine miles and 300 yards.

TOM LINTON.

MAHATMA OF THEOSOPHY.

Mrs. Tingley of New York to Take Madam Blavatsky's Place.

Mrs. Katherine A. Tingley, the Theosophical mahatma, seems to be as remarkable a woman in many ways as was the great Blavatsky herself. Her identity was revealed through the talkativeness of a woman who knew the secret and who could not keep it. Mrs. Tingley, so the esotericists all says, is a great clairvoyant, who can roll back the centuries and see herself in all the various incarnations through which her soul has passed from the beginning. For instance, she knows that she and Mme. Blavatsky were bosom friends in Egypt 1,200 years before Christ, when they, together, mapped out the plans of the Theosophical Society. They knew each other in this life, too, although Blavatsky never mentioned Mrs. Tingley's name to any one. This was due to the fact that they conversed in "the astral" only.

THE NEW THEOSOPHICAL MAHATMA.

The new female mahatma resembles the Blavatsky, but is not an orator. She is, in this life, just plain Mrs. Tingley, of Brooklyn. Mr. Tingley, the mahatma's husband, is a clerk in the White Star Steamship Company's office in New York. He says he doesn't believe in theosophy himself, and for that reason will not talk about it to outsiders. Mrs. Tingley will lead an expedition of Theosophists around the world. The party will be gone one year.

A White Deer as a Mascot.

The citizens of Cook County are much put out on account of the slaying of a white deer which has been roaming over that section for a number of years, and which was looked upon as a sort of mascot, and which no one would harm, until a short time ago one Poindexter wantonly shot it. Such curios are very seldom found, but in story and in song for ages past occasionally references are made to a "milk-white" does or white deer, which is generally supposed to have been a mythical or legendary animal. This white deer of Cook County, however, was no myth, for its snowy hide is now in pickle in a taxidermist's shop in this city, and Game Protector McGuire is preparing at the request of the people of Cook County to make big trouble for Poindexter, who killed the animal about Feb. 1, during the season when it is not lawful to shoot deer of any color. There have been many stories about this celebrated white deer, one of which was that Barnum had offered $10,000 for the animal alone, and it is now said that Poindexter shot the animal to get $200 for its skin.—Portland Oregonian.

To Clean Utensils.

All sorts of vessels and utensils may be purified from long-retained smells of every kind in the easiest and most perfect manner, by rinsing them out well with charcoal powder after the grosser impurities have been scoured off with sand and water.

When the Lord made mankind, the devil added the tongue.

There is something pleasant in being innocently accused.

They Don't Care.

Those who drive a horse and buggy or ride a wheel on the public streets are not all of them careless of the rights of others. There is now and then one of either class who would deem it a piece of ill manners to plunge headlong into the crowds of people that throng central streets each evening. There is now and then a man in a buggy, who if he sees some one crossing the street ahead of him, would feel that he was doing an inpolite thing to dash rapidly along and make the foot passenger jump and run to get out of the way. He would realize that it was not very nice to make the pedestrian stop and wait until he drove by. If he were a man of unusual good breeding and had a desire to show he was only just as good as others, no better, no worse, he would himself, sometimes, slow up and save the foot man the need of stopping awhile on a public crossing where other teams or bicycles might run over him, or having to get across on a run that would be the envy of a base ball player.

We say there are now and then to be found, those who drive a spirited horse or rid and ambitious wheel, who have some such regard for the rights and safety of those who go afoot. But we are sorry to say, this is the exception rather than the rule. "The fastest pace in the most thronged place," is the motto. If any one doubts, let him walk out on our crowded streets these pleasant evenings and see a buggy come along at a high rate of speed and plunge into a dense line of four-abreast walking across from one side to the other. See the crowd jump and scatter like sheep when a dog suddenly pounces among them. The driver goes coolly on and never deigns to look back. The crowd continues to stream on over the crossing and in a minute later is struck "amidships" by a bicycle, and there is another combination of screams, jumps and scattering. And the cycler goes on with the appearance of a man who thinks these people are trespassers who had no right to get in his way. Only a few days ago we saw a child run down by a bicycle and the lad who was on the wheel never looked back. He didn't care. A man walking along the sidewalk is often compelled to get off to let a wheel by. Now, we are willing to let wheels go on the sidewalks. We are glad to see them on the streets. We are pleased that buggies are common and that people enjoy riding in them. But we must insist that they have no right to drive foot passengers off the streets, and to interfere with a proper share of street crossings and sidewalks. And to show we are not taking any unfair advantage, we hereby guarantee on the part of the great class of pedestrians, that we will run no foot races on our crowded thoroughfares, neither on sidewalks nor crossings, nor in the middle of the streets. We will not plunge into a crowd on a dead run and knock them right and left. We will not run into and knock over any vehicle, or any man, woman or child, and if we do, we will show sufficient respect for them to stop and look to their safety, and at the least, be polite enough to make an apology. Now let the wheelmen and drivers do as well, and soon it will be safe and even pleasant for our people to walk about the streets, and just as pleasant for those who ride and drive. If speed is absolutely essential to happiness, go into the less crowded parts of the city. And if we sprinters want to sprint, we will do the same.

GREAT RACES.

ELKHART'S, THE FASTEST HORSES IN THE WORLD.

We take pleasure in calling our readers' attention to the program of the races at Barney's Driving Park, Elkhart, Ind., July 7, 8, 9, 10 and 11th. Certainly no greater horses live than those whose names appear on the list of entries, and no association in the country so far this year has gathered together so many star performers. On Thursday July 9th comes the great free for all pace. A fortune, $3000, is hung up for this race, and as the management assures us there are no strings to this in any way, spectators are assured of a genuine horse race. Among the entries are Robert J., 2:01¼ the fastest harness horse on earth; Frank Agan 2:05¾ the Indiana product that defeated both Robert J. and John R. Gentry at Louisville last fall, John R. Gentry 2:03¾ the fastest stallion on earth; Badge 2:08 who has been winning hard fought races already this summer; Coleridge 2:05¾ the fastest horse in Indiana, and Afrite who has recently paced a mile in 1:01.

Scarcely less interest is manifested in the free for all trot which comes off Friday July 10th. Fantasy, Klamath, Lord Clinton, Onoqua and Dan Cupid all with exceeding low records will start for this money and phenomonal time is expected. A pamphlet showing full list of 218 entries can be had on application. The R. R's make a special excursion rate of one fare for the round trip good to return till July 13th and the Elkhart & Western R. R. will run trains from Hotel Bucklen to the grand stand which with the Electric Railway will furnish ample transportation. Ladies free opening day. Below is the daily program.

Committee.

Garrett Waterworks

Garrett celebrated the opening of her waterworks and new electric lighting plant to-day. The attendance was quite large, including a large number of Auburn citizens. The day was one of the most desirable we ever knew for an outdoor celebration. The town was gaily decorated, with flags, flowers, evergreens, banners, etc. Music was furnished by the Garrett City band, and the various orders of the town helped to swell the procession.

Wedded

Tuesday evening at 8 p. m. June 27, 1896, occurred the marriage of Mr. William J. Batdorf, of Ashley, to Miss Lula B. Swartz, of Waterloo, ceremony by the Rev. S. H. Yager. The wedding took place at the pleasant farm home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. William Swartz south of town. The bountiful repast, and the friendly greeting proved to those present that no pains was spared to make the marriage feast of their daughter a grand one. Mr. and Mrs. S. Baker, of Wauseon, Ohio, Mr. and Mrs. Cronninger, of Delta, Ohio, Ohio, Miss Ella Butdorf, of Auburn, and Mrs. B. Shook, of Wolcottville, with the near relatives of the bride and groom were present. Mr. Batdorf is one of the hustling firemen of the Wabash road, and with his bride one of Waterloo's best girls will make Ashley there future home. We all join in wishing Mr. and Mrs. Batdorf a long and happy life.

S. H. YAGER.

Married

On Tuesday evening, June 27, 1896, at 8 p. m. at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. J. C. Day on Union, street was performed a ceremony by the Rev. S. H. Yager, which united the hearts and hands for life of Mr. William Bassett and Miss Laura B. Nelson, both of Waterloo. A few invited guests and the immediate friends of the bride and groom were present to witness the ceremony. William Bassett is one of Waterloo's energetic young men and a skilled jeweler by trade. He truly is in a fair way to prosper. Miss Nelson has made her home with the family our popular hardware merchant, Mr. J. C. Day for a number of years and is a young lady highly esteemed. Mr. and Mrs. Day showed their love toward Laura by the grand wedding they gave, everything being first-class. The bountiful repast that was served and the cordial welcome given by the pages will long be remembered by all present. Billie took his bride at once to their new home on Elm street which he had prepared by furnishing it complete. Our entire city joins in wishing Mr. and Mrs. Bassett a long and happy life.

The children's exercises held here Sunday evening were largely attended. The pulpit was a profusion of flowers.

BUTLER.

M. L. Kiplinger left Butler last Sunday morning on his wheel for an extended trip through Ohio, visiting Defiance, Fostoria, Tiffin, Ashladn, Wooster and other places.

S. L. Hamlin, one of Butler's elderly business men has taken a wheel and rides like a stripling.

A new driving park will soon be completed here, where we can have base ball, wheel and horse races to our full satisfaction.

The races last Tuesday proved interesting and exciting. The ball game for the same day was immense.

Tom Rudd, of Goshen, visited Butler last Sunday.

Miss Lizzie Champion, of Angola, is visiting her sister Mrs. J. A. Campbell.

Mrs. Cozzens and daughter Sadie, are visiting with Mrs. R. C. Campbell.

Mrs. Minta Jones is on the sick list.

J. A. Campbell, wife and daughter Florence will spend the Fourth, visiting friends in Michigan.

Mrs. Oviatt Campbell is recovering from a serious illness.

The health of our place has scarcely ever been better than at this time.

Z. L. Kindig has removed from Butler to Ft. Wayne.

John Zeigler and two or three other men from Hamilton visited Toledo last Sunday. Their stay was very brief on account of their tickets not being good for only a few hours after they got there.

A Mr. Henning, who has tried his fortune in two or three other citites, will soon unfurl his banner to the tender breezes of Butler. He will swell the number engaged in the grocery trade. We wish him abundant success. He will occupy the Rudd meat market building.

JULY 4.

Be sure and attend one of the greatest attractions of the season. You will have plenty of time to see the sights on the street after looking over our immense collection of rich and rare novelties to entertain the men and boys. Women are always admitted, as there is nothing in the performance or exhibition that could possibly shock the modesty of a school ma'am or the unmarried females of 42. Remember we guarantee satisfaction or money refunded. Our price will be saving enough to you to allow you to attend all the other attractions of the day. We don't wear tights, but our pants are cut rather small, as we pretend to keep up with the styles. Come to us for a good entertainment at unheard-of prices.

"The Sidewalks of New York"

Are built out of no such Cement as the German Portland

HIGH GRADE "LAGERDORFER."

This Cement is absolutely uniform in color, making a pure, white, artificial stone sidewalk Works plastic under the trowel. Has no equal in sand carrying capacity, and measures ten per cent more cement to a barrel than other brands. It is the twin sister of the Alsen brands, manufactured of same material, and under the shadow of and between the two Alsen Kilns. There being no difference whatever between the Lagerdorfer and Alsen, with the single exception that the machinery by which the Largerdorfer is made is of more modern construction and that the cement is finer ground. The Lagerdorfer cement has been selected and used in the most important government works in Germany and other countries, and the United States in their large work on the Sault Ste. Marie Locks are using the Lagordorfer cement.

SPINAL weakness easily cured by Dr. Miles' Nerve Plasters

—Buy the Eckhart buggy of Brown, Culbertson & Boland.

—David Peters, of Helmer, Indiana, committed suicide Monday evening by shooting himself.

—Eckhart buggies are the best. Sold by Brown, Culbertson & Boland.

—Cory Shugers is making some extensive improvements in his lunch room; new marble top counters have been put in.

—Joseph Coder, of Ursina, Pa., was here the guest in the family of Elias Zimmerman. He left this morning for St. Joe.

—Notices to be inserted in the Weekly, must be brought in early as it goes to press Wednesday forenoon. Please remember.

—Mrs. P. D. West, who has been the guest of her parents at their beautiful home in Allen county, returned last evening.

—If you are suffering fram Catarrh or any disease of the nose, throat or lungs, Dr. Nusbaum's specific treatment will cure you. W. H. Nusbaum, M. D. tf.

—Allie, the little daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Rakestraw, of West Seventh Street, is visiting her cousin Hazel Rhorer at Milford, Ind.

—Mrs. John Hebel's mother, Mrs. Richmond, left this morning for a short visit with her son who lives in the eastern part of Michigan.

—Pass the good word along the line. Piles can be quickly cured without an operation by simply applying DeWitt's Witch Hazel Salve. Davenport, the druggist.

—If you want a good second hand Buggy, Binder, Mower or Bicycle, or wish to trade for a new Buggy, Binder or Mower, see Brown, Culbertson & Boland. They also have a good farm horse for sale.

—Clyde Willis, of the Waterloo Press, and Miss Mattie Gonser will be married at the bride's home at Waterloo to-night. Rev. Colvin, of Auburn will officiate.

—Frank Coder and wife returned yesterday to Garville, Mich. They were called to the county by the death of Mr. Coder, at St. Joe. While here they were the guests of Mr. and Mrs. E. Zimmerman.

—Buy an Eckhart buggy and get in it. They are easy riders and very durable. We are sole agents for DeKalb county. Come and see us. Brown, Culbertson & Boland, Auburn; M. F. Long & Co., Butler; W. O. Lake & Co., Spencerville, Ind.

—Bucklen's Arnica Salve.—The best salve in the world for cuts, bruises, sores, ulcers, salt rheum, fever sores tetter, chapped hands, chilblains, corns and all skin eruptions, and positively cures piles or no pay repuired. It is guaranteed to give perfect satisfaction, or money refunded. Price 25 cents per box. For sale by Robbins & McCord. tf

C. M. Merica was up in Smithfield township last night attending the commencement exercises. He reports a good meeting. He drove up and as he neared Waterloo discovered it had not rained there. The dust was flying. The shower that continued here all day yesterday and through the night only reached about three miles north of Auburn.

—The Twelfth district caucus held at Indianapolis last night resulted in the election as follows: O. L. Ballou, Lagrange county, district chairman; A. A. Adams, Whitley county, district secretary: Dr. Nusbaum, DeKalb, county, vice-president of convention; James A. Barns, DeKalb county, assistant secretary; A. S. Parker, Noble county, committee on organization; H. D. Boozer, DeKalb county, committee on credentials; Judge Edward S. O'Rourke, Allen county, committee on resolutions; Henry Colerick, Allen county, and James Washburn, Whitley county, national delegates: Charles Bruce, DeKalb, first alternate, and N. B. Newnam, Noble county, second alterate; Frank B. VanAuken, Steuben county, presidential elector; Edwin B. Fitzgerald, DeKelb county, contingent elector.

—It would be hard to convince a man suffering from bilious colic that his agony is due to a microbe with an unpronounceble name. But one dose of DeWitt's Colic & Cholera Cure will convince him of its power to afford instant relief. It kills pain. Davenport, the druggist.

—Eli Hill, Lumber City, Pa., writes: "I have been suffering from piles for twenty-five years and thought my case incurable. DeWitt's Witch Hazel Salve was recommended to me as a pile cure, so I bought a box and it performed a permanent cure." This is only one of thousands of similar cases. Eczema, sores and skin diseases yield quickly when it is used. Davenport, the druggist.

—The National Keeley League will hold its Sixth Annual Convention in the chamber of the House of Representatives at Indianapolis, August 18, 19 and 20. Information can be had of the secretary, Thomas E. Barry, 260 Clark St. Chicago.

—We are anxious to do a little good in this world and can think of no pleasanter or better way to do it by recommending One Minute Cough Cure as a preventative of pneumonia, consumption and other serious lung troubles that follow neglected colds. Davenport, the druggist.

—When we consid r that the intestines are about five times as large as the body, we can realize the intense suffering experienced when they become inflamed. DeWitt's Colic and Cholera Cure subdues inflammation at once and completely removes the difficulty. Davenport, the druggist.

—Black hollyhocks may be common to others, but to us they seem like an unusual thing. Miss Helen Ralston found one in the garden of her grandmother, Mrs. Barclay, that is decidedly black. It grew in the same locality where last year, were found only white ones. But it is a pretty flower, for all that, the dark rich leaves looking very much like black velvet.

—The editor and wife returned from Indianapolis this morning. While in the city, they were guests of Mr. and Mrs. C. P. Houser, and had a right old fashioned good visit. Both are well and doing well. Virgil is at home, Reba now Mrs. Davis is living in Chicago. Mrs. Houser is expected to be up here soon for a visit with her daughter Edna, now Mrs. Roy Garrett, and will of course remember her large circle of friends. We also had a short visit with Hon. Nich Ensley, and his two sons, Oscar and Marion, but did not get time to visit at the residence but learned the family were in ordinary health. We believe that Eva is improving.

Friday's Daily.

—Dr. Nusbaum reports a bouncing boy at Denny Johson's this morning.

—R. Sawvel is having a new walk put down south of his residence. John Treesh is doing the work.

—Trustee Madden and his good wife rejoice over a 7-pound girl baby, born this morning.

—Dr. Wood, of Angola, came down this morning, and in company with Dr. Stamets, went out to Mr. Smith's to see a patient.

—Thomas Bros are doing a big business in the line of baked goods. Ralph who is in charge of the wagon, informs us that it requires two loads of goods to supply all their trade each day.

—Frank Coulter, of the Hicksville Independent, made us a brief call this morning. He has been visiting his father up in Michigan a week and was on his way home. He visited A. Lewis and family while here.

—Miss Pearl Kelley came home last evening from Columbia City, where she had passed a week most agreeably, with the relatives, and with her young friend Miss Jo Adair. The latter returned with her and will make a visit with the COURIER family. Her father, Judge Adair, came up with them, as he is engaged in trying some cases in court here now.

The old, abandoned way of "passing" a county that was "not ready to vote" was permitted at the state convention. Cass county was passed twice and other counties did the same way, coming in with their vote after the others had been reported. This plan was long ago abandoned, and now, an ordinary county convention would not permit it.

—Fourteen Waterloo cyclers came over here last evening for a ride and to listen to the music by the band. They were headed by O. C. Dickinson and D. L. Leas, and the party included some ladies, among the latter being Allie Fisher. They went whirling by too fast for us to recognize them. But we halted Curt and Dan long enough to say, "Howdy."

DR. MILES' PAIN PILLS are guaranteed to stop Headache in 20 minutes. "One cent a dose."

—A good recommendation for Simmons Liver Regulator is, that it is purely vegetable and strongly tonic. Then too, it is better than pills because easier to take in liquid or powder and with no griping, while the relief from Constipation, Biliousness, Sick Headache and Dyspepsia is quick and sure. "I find Simmons Liver Regulator a very safe and valuable family medicine.—Rev. J. M. Rollins, Fairfield, Va.

—Political parties are getting rattled. Democrats are not the only ones who can not agree on the money question. Republicans are rapidly coming over to free silver, and one branch of the prohibitionists have done the same. Some leading democrats refuse to sustain free silver and will vote the republican ticket or stay at home. Leading populists are going to vote with the democrats on low tariff and free silver. And all these changes are going on so rapidly that it is hard to keep track of them.

Charlie Weaver, at the express office, received to-day, a crate containing a number of carrier pigeons. They were sent by parties in Pittsburg, Pa., with directions to release them to-morrow morning so they could fly home. They were very hungry when they reached here and he fed them well. They will be fed again this evening, but tomorrow morning they will have to start off on the long trip without any breakfast, as they would not fly home if given a full meal here. We suppose the object in sending them out here is to give them practice. They are lovely birds and seem as contented here as if at home.

—Misses Lena, Gertrude and Josephine Schiffli returned Saturday evening to Summit.

—Mr. and Mrs. L. J. Jowders of Mansfield, Ohio, are here the guests of Mr. and Mrs. J. Y. W. McClellan.

—Phil Gibson was up to Rome City on his wheel yesterday, and reports a splendid time.

—Everything is ready for the grand celebration at Auburn July 4th, you'll be sorry if you miss it. Entertainment from morning till night.

—We have been some time looking for a man who don't think he knows all about the money question. But the place is still vacant.

—Plenty of wheat was cut in this county last week, but the great bulk of it will be cut this week and next, some fields not ripening as fast as others.

Andrew Wolf, of Auburn, and Addie Zeigler, of Waterloo, were united in marriage by the Rev. J. K. Walts, in the study of the First M. E. church, Saturday evening.

—A wagon load of the A. O. U. W. go to Ashley this evening initiate a number of candidates at that place. Auburn is becoming the "head center" of the various orders.

—At Alton, Ill., Saturday evening, there were plain signs of snow fall. There was a drizzling rain, but in the air above the house tops, could be plainly seen the falling snowflakes. They melted before reaching the ground.

—The little child of Dr. Siver, that was reported hurt at Rome City, is their youngest child. One of its toes was crushed and had to be amputated, but the hurt is not dangerous, though serious.

—Dr. Chas. E. Miller, will again be at F. J. Yeshera's jewelry store Monday, July 6. Those needing glasses, and especially those who have had difficulty in getting glasses are invited to call.

—Waterloo Press: Raymond Eugene Willis, of this office, graduated at Wabash college last week, among the first in his class of twenty-three, and received first honors, that of Bachelor of Arts.

—Rev. J. D. Brosy now takes a vacation of two weeks, during which he and his wife will visit relatives over in Williams county, Ohio. So there will be no services next Sunday and the Sunday following. The DAILY hopes they may have a pleasant time.

—Our recent tarantula story is beaten by one from Cincinnati. On Saturday, they found in a bunch of bananas, received at that place, not only a big tarantula, but her brood of little ones, over 200 in all. They were given over to the society of natural history.

Carl. Brown and George Baxter went up to Kendallville on their wheels this forenoon. They started at 6 a. m. and got back here at 11:45, making a pretty quick run for lads of twelve. They went around by Lisbon, the distance that way being about fourteen miles.

—Dr. Swarts, now drives a double team to his outfit, a part of the time, and that called for a fine new double harness. Wm. Sheffer, the harness maker got them up a set that are lovely. The Doctors, for there are three of them, need not be ashamed of their fine turnout.

—F. D. Smith south of the Junction has the best variety of raspberies we have seen. It is the "Golden Censer" a yellow berry with an excellent flavor and very fine acid taste. The great objection to so many good kinds of red and yellow berries is their lack of taste. We do not know how good a bearer the Golden Censer is, as this is the first crop.

—The COURIER job department received an order Saturday for a job of printing from Attorneys Baxter & Brown, in which we will have 50,000 impressions to make. It is gratifying to us receive these jobs when they are submitted to other printers, the one doing the work the cheapest getting the job. We have repeatedly told our readers that we do job printing either in large or small quantities at the lowest price.

Dr. Henry Johnson was here to-day to close up the matter of putting a business building on the old Ralston lot, which he purchased some months ago. It is all settled now. The contract was given to our townsmen, Long & Brandon, they having made a better bid than the Kendallville parties. We think they should have had the preference anyway, for besides being good workmen, they are citizens and should be given the first choice. We are glad they have it. Work is to begin at once, and the building will be completed in about sixty days. Then we will have a fine, new business room in place of a vacant lot with a peanut stand.

SIMMONS LIVER REGULATOR

THE BEST

is SIMMONS LIVER REGULATOR—don't forget to take it. The Liver gets sluggish during the Winter, just like all nature, and the system becomes choked up by the accumulated waste, which brings on Malaria, Fever and Ague and Rheumatism. You want to wake up your Liver now, but be sure you take SIMMONS LIVER REGULATOR to do it. It also regulates the Liver—keeps it properly at work, when your system will be free from poison and the whole body invigorated.

You get THE BEST BLOOD when your system is in A1 condition, and that will only be when the Liver is kept active. Try a Liver Remedy once and note the difference. But take only SIMMONS LIVER REGULATOR—it is SIMMONS LIVER REGULATOR which makes the difference. Take it in powder or in liquid already prepared, or make a tea of the powder; but take SIMMONS LIVER REGULATOR. You'll find the RED Z on every package. Look for it.

Tuesday's Daily.

—DeKalb county celebrates the Glorious Fourth at Auburn.

—W. W. Norris and sister, of Albion, have been visiting S. S. Norris a few days.

—Rev. Henry Johnson and family returned to South Bend yesterday.

—Ora Snyder now rides a new Concord bicycle. He believes in riding an up-to-date wheel

—Mr. and Mrs. Frank Eckhart left this morning for French Lick Springs where they will spend a few weeks at that healthful resort.

—The German Soldiers in their German uniform, will be here July 4. They made the finest show of all, in the Garrett waterworks parade.

—Mrs. Clara McClellan left this morning over the Wabash for Wabash where she will have charge of L. T. Rice's gallery while Mr. Rice comes to Auburn on a visit.

Mrs. W. B. Brown and sons Carl and Ralph will leave tomorrow morning for North Dakota where they will spend the summer visiting Mrs. B's brother B. K. Rush.

—W. H. Palmer made us a business call last evening. He is the man who is keeping Evergreen Cemetery in such nice shape. He also showed us a specimen of the white bronze that is coming into use for monuments and the like. It is handsome material and will last for centuries.

The Opera House.

Henry's Opera House, everyone admitted was one of the most complete in the country. And they will be surprised to see how many improvements have been made on it. Mr. Henry together with Long & Brandon, has been for some time at work within and even without the building. We had already spoken of the new floor for the stage. This change was made necessary by the swelling and bulging of the boards, caused by their being laid down too dry. This has been provided against in the new floor. Below the stage the dressing rooms have bee enlarged and made more convenient and comfortable. The new room we spoke of in the basement is larger and better than we had supposed. It will be adapted to the use of the smaller gatherings than those held in the body of the Opera House, such as literary club, the musical club, and such gatherings as caucuses. It will come handy for many occasions. In the Opera House proper a great many seats have been added, in fact an entire row of opera chairs has been added to the dress circle, and a similar addition made to the balcony accommodations. On the outside, at the south, two stairs have been erected. The one near the east end, is made with heavy cleats instead of steps, and is to be used for the performing mule or horse, to get into the stage and adjoining rooms. The stairway nearer the street, is for exit in case case of fire. There is a large double door opening outward from the dress circle to this stair, and in case of fire these doors, would empty half the house in a short time. Mr. Henry is leaving out no item that would make his opera house the safest and best.

J. P. Court

A young man named Newton Wallace, was brought to jail last Friday for an attempted criminal assault on little Goldie Boren, the four year old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Boren, of Richland township. This morning he was arraigned before 'Squire Walter and as it was difficult to get at the facts, or the the extent of the crime, he was allowed to plead guilty to assault and fined $20, which with costs, amounts to $47. He is boarding it out at the jail. Several days ago, Wm. Dorthick was brough over from Waterloo on the old matter, of running into another man's wagon. To-day he was given thirty days in jail.

BIRTH OF THE NATION

OFT TOLD STORY OF AMERICA MADE FREE.

One Hundred and Twenty Years Ago the Gauntlet of Defiance Was Thrown to Britain and This New Republic Was Born.

Independence for All.

One hundred and twenty years ago, namely, on the Fourth of July, 1776, there was born in the western world a new nation—the Republic of the United States. Refusing to pay the taxation imposed upon them at the point of the bayonet by the British crown; failing to move the king and his ministers from their career of haughty and reckless obstinacy, the thirteen American colonies found themselves reduced to the alternative of abject submission or of armed resistance. Already there had flashed throughout the country the electric words of Patrick Henry: "We must fight! An appeal to arms and to the God of Hosts is all that is left us."

The sons of liberty shouted their responsive acclaim to this manly summons, and, like the sound of many waters, the spirit of national independence which thus possessed the people came upon the Continental Congress, then in session in the State House at Philadelphia, Pa. It was in this temple of freedom, wherein was sitting as noble and august a legislative body as the world ever saw, that Richard Henry Lee introduced a resolution, on the 7th of June, 1776, declaring "That the United Colonies are and ought to be free and independent States, and that their political connection with Great Britain is and ought to be dissolved."

Upon this resolution there sprang up at once an earnest and powerful debate. It was opposed, principally, on the ground that it was premature. Its further consideration was accordingly postponed until there was a prospect of greater unanimity. On the 11th of June, a committee was appointed to draft a formal Declaration. This committee consisted of Benjamin Franklin, John Adams, Thomas Jefferson, Roger Sherman and Robert R. Livingston. On the 28th of June the committee made their report, and presented the Declaration which they had drawn up. On the 2d day of July Congress proceeded to the serious consideration of this momentous paper, which lasted nearly three days, and was extremely earnest.

It was known throughout the city that the great event was to be determined, but the closed doors of Congress excluded the populace. From the hour when Congress came together in the forenoon all business was suspended throughout the city, and the old bellman steadily remained at his post in the steeple, prepared to sound forth to the waiting multitudes the expected glad tidings. The bell, manufactured in England, bore upon its ample curve the now prophetic inscription, "Proclaim liberty throughout all the land unto all the inhabitants thereof."

Hours passed on, and fear began to take the place of hope in many a heart; even the venerable and always cheerful bellman was overheard in his despondent soliloquy:

"They will never do it! they will never do it!"

Finally, at about 2 o'clock in the afternoon, the door of the mysterious hall swung open, and a voice exclaimed:

"Passed!—it has passed!"

The word was caught up by ten thousand glad mouths, and the watch-boy now clapped his hands and shouted, "Ring! Ring!" Seizing the iron tongue of the bell in which he had long felt such a professional pride, the electrified old patriot rung forth such a joyous peal as was never heard before, nor ceased to hurl it backward and forward till every voice joined in its notes of gladness and triumph. The roar of cannon, and illuminations from every house and hilltop, added to these demonstrations of universal rejoicing.

Washington hailed the declaration with joy, for it put an end to all those temporizing hopes of reconciliation which had clogged the military action of the country. On the 9th of July he caused it to be read at the head of each brigade of the army. The troops listened to the reading with eager attention, and at its close broke forth in tumultuous applause.

The excitable populace of New York were not content with the ringing of bells. There was a leaden equestrian statue of George the Third in Bowling Green, in front of the fort. Around this kingly effigy the excited multitude surged, and, pulling it down, broke it into fragments, which were afterward molded into bullets and made to do service against his majesty's troops.

In Boston, that citadel of radical insubordination to "his majesty," the public joy knew no bounds. The town clerk read the solemn declaration to the multitude, at the close of which a shout began in the hall and passed like an electric spark to the streets, which now rang with loud huzzas, the slow and measured boom of cannon and the rattle of musketry. The batteries on Fort Hill, Dorchester Neck, the castle, Nantasket and Long Island, each saluted with thirteen guns, the artillery in the town fired thirteen rounds, and the infantry scattered into thirteen divisions, poured forth thirteen volleys—all corresponding to the number of States which formed the Union.

The French Fourth of July.

Do you know anything about the French Fourth of July? It is on the 14th, and the French people celebrate their independence day, for it was on that day 103 years ago that the old Bastile, where all the political prisoners were kept, was torn down by the indignant people. The day in the city of Paris is a very bright and lively one, indeed. No carriages, stages or vehicles of any kind are allowed in the streets in the evening, and the avenues are lighted by thousands of gas jets, which are arranged in bands and strings, like the strands of a diamond necklace. At each square platforms, decorated with blue, white and red (the French colors) draperies, are erected, and here bands of musicians are installed, and they play for the merry dancers until late into the night. The palace of the Trocadero, which stands on a great hill overlooking the Seine, is ablaze with light and color, and directly opposite, on the other side of the river, is the great Eiffel tower, the tallest structure in the world. The revolving light in the dome sheds beautiful rays of color—blue, white and red—over the entire city, and can be seen for miles around the adjoining country. Of course there are fireworks, rockets and candles and pinwheels, just like we have, and the long, tree-lined avenues are decorated with lanterns and bunting and ribbons.

No one enjoys excitement and fun any more than the little French children, and they will sing and dance in the streets as if they were afraid of never doing their share of merrymaking on the glorious day.

WHEN, in the course of human events, it becomes necessary for one people to dissolve the political bands which have connected them with another, and to assume among the powers of the earth the separate and equal station to which the laws of nature and of nature's God entitle them, a decent respect to the opinions of mankind requires that they should declare the causes which impel them to the separation.

We hold these truths to be self-evident: That all men are created equal; that they are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable rights; that among these are life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness. That to secure these rights, governments are instituted among men, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed; that whenever any form of government becomes destructive of these ends, it is the right of the people to alter or to abolish it, and to institute a new government, laying its foundation on such principles, and organizing its powers in such form, as to them shall seem most likely to effect their safety and happiness. Prudence, indeed, will dictate that governments long established should not be changed for light and transient causes; and accordingly, all experience hath shown that mankind are more disposed to suffer, while evils are sufferable, than to right themselves by abolishing the forms to which they are accustomed. But when a long train of abuses and usurpations, pursuing invariably the same object, evinces a design to reduce them under absolute despotism, it is their right, it is their duty, to throw off such government, and to provide new guards for their future security. Such has been the patient sufferance of these colonies, and such is now the necessity which constrains them to alter their former systems of government. The history of the present king of Great Britain is a history of repeated injuries and usurpations, all having in direct object the establishment of an absolute tyranny over these states. To prove this, let facts be submitted to a candid world:

He has refused his assent to laws the most wholesome and necessary for the public good.

He has forbidden his governors to pass laws of immediate and pressing importance, unless suspended in their operation till his assent should be obtained; and, when so suspended, he has utterly neglected to attend to them.

He has refused to pass other laws for the accommodation of large districts of people, unless these people would relinquish the right of representation in the legislature; a right inestimable to them, and formidable to tyrants only.

He has called together legislative bodies at places unusual, uncomfortable, and distant from the depository of their public records, for the sole purpose of fatiguing them into compliance with his measures.

He has dissolved representative houses repeatedly for opposing with manly firmness his invasions on the rights of the people.

He has refused, for a long time after such dissolutions, to cause others to be elected; whereby the legislative powers, incapable of annihilation, have returned to the people at large for their exercise; the state remaining, in the meantime, exposed to all the danger of invasion from without and convulsions within.

He has endeavored to prevent the population of these states; for that purpose obstructing the laws for naturalization of foreigners, refusing to pass others to encourage their migration hither and raising the conditions of new appropriations of lands.

He has obstructed the administration of justice by refusing his assent to laws for establishing judiciary powers.

He has made judges dependent on his will alone for the tenure of their offices, and the amount and payment of their salaries.

He has erected a multitude of new offices, and sent hither swarms of officers to harass our people and eat out their substance.

He has kept among us, in times of peace, standing armies, without the consent of our legislatures.

He has affected to render the military independent of, and superior to, the civil power.

He has combined with others to subject us to a jurisdiction foreign to our constitution and unacknowledged by our laws, giving his assent to their acts of pretended legislation—

For quartering large bodies of armed troops among us;

For protecting them, by a mock trial, from punishment for any murders which they should commit on the inhabitants of these states;

For cutting off our trade with all parts of the world;

For imposing taxes on us without our consent;

For depriving us, in many cases, of the benefits of trial by jury;

For transporting us beyond seas to be tried for pretended offenses;

For abolishing the free system of English laws in a neighboring province, establishing therein an arbitrary government, and enlarging its boundaries so as to render it at once an example and fit instrument for introducing the same absolute rule into these colonies;

For taking away our charters, abolishing our most valuable laws, and altering, fundamentally, the powers of our governments;

For suspending our own legislatures, and declaring themselves invested with power to legislate for us in all cases whatsoever.

He has abdicated government here, by declaring us out of his protection and waging war against us.

He has plundered our seas, ravaged our coasts, burned our towns, and destroyed the lives of our people.

He is at this time transporting large armies of foreign mercenaries, to complete the work of death, desolation, and tyranny, already begun with circumstances of cruelty and perfidy scarcely paralleled in the most barbaric ages, and totally unworthy the head of a civilized nation.

He has constrained our fellow citizens, taken captive on the high seas, to bear arms against their country, to become the executioners of their friends and brethren, or to fall themselves by their hands.

He has excited domestic insurrections amongst us, and has endeavored to bring on the inhabitants of our frontiers the merciless Indian savages, whose known rule of warfare is an undistinguished destruction of all ages, sexes and conditions.

In every stage of these oppressions we have petitioned for redress in the most humble terms. Our repeated petitions have been answered only by repeated injury. A prince, whose character is thus marked by every act which may define a tyrant, is unfit to be the ruler of a free people.

Nor have we been wanting in attention to our British brethren. We have warned them from time to time, of attempts made by their legislature, to extend an unwarrantable jurisdiction over us. We have reminded them of the circumstances of our emigration and settlement here. We have appealed to their native justice and magnanimity, and we have conjured them, by the ties of our common kindred, to disavow these usurpations, which would inevitably interrupt our connections and correspondence. They, too, have been deaf to the voice of justice and consanguinity. We must, therefore, acquiesce in the necessity which denounces our separation, and hold them, as we hold the rest of mankind, enemies in war, in peace friends.

We, therefore, the representatives of the United States of America, in general congress assembled, appealing to the Supreme Judge of the world for the rectitude of our intentions, do, in the name and by the authority of the good people of these colonies, solemnly publish and declare that these united colonies are, and of right ought to be, free and independent states; that they are absolved from all allegiance to the British crown, and that all political connection between them and the state of Great Britain is, and ought to be, totally dissolved; and that, as free and independent states, they have full power to levy war, conclude peace, contract alliances, establish commerce, and do all other acts and things which independent states may of right do. And for the support of this declaration, with a firm reliance on the protection of Divine Providence, we mutually pledge to each other our lives, our fortunes, and our sacred honor.

"Don'ts" for the Fourth.

Don't talk politics.
Don't run to every fire.
Don't despise a toy pistol.
Don't complain if it rains.
Don't set fire to the house.
Don't drink pink lemonade.
Don't overload your stomach.
Don't celebrate with whisky.
Don't drive a nervous horse.
Don't miss the last train home.
Don't think the gun isn't loaded.
Don't go on a crowded excursion.
Don't be ashamed to be patriotic.
Don't let your dog out of the house.
Don't guy the "old-fashioned Fourth."
Don't shoot off your mouth too much.
Don't imagine that "it has gone out."
Don't put a double charge in a cannon.
Don't blow down the mouth of a loaded cannon.
Don't try to suppress small boys; it is their day.
Don't fire a pistol loaded with powder and ball.
Don't put your nose to a rocket after lighting it.
Don't "wish you hadn't gone" after coming back.
Don't forget that the Fourth lasts only one day.
Don't set off firecrackers in the haymow.
Don't carry loose powder in your pocket.
Don't laugh at the drum major—pity him.
Don't forget you were a boy once yourself.
Don't begin celebrating the Fourth on the 3d.
Don't throw firecrackers at passing bicyclists.
Don't take any chances with a cracked cannon.
Don't pine for "an old-fashioned Fourth."
Don't think that liberty was made for yourself only.
Don't carry powder and matches in the same pocket.
Don't sit on a cannon and think you can hold it down.
Don't shoot rockets into your neighbor's windows.
Don't say the Declaration of Independence is a "chestnut."
Don't imagine the house is afire because you smell smoke.
Don't feel blue—the right combination is red, white and blue.

The Day We Celebrate.

Once a year it comes
With its flags and drums,
With its cannon loud,
With its rockets high
And their starry crowd
Filling all the sky.

Music in the air,
Powder everywhere,
Crackers making noise,
Snapping at your feet,
For the happy boys
All along the street.

Then, hurrah! I say.
Independence Day
Comes but once a year,
With its noise and smoke.
Let us hold it dear,
Big and little folk.

Let us take our part
With a loyal heart.
Be our flags unfurled,
Little maid and man,
Proudest in the world!
Free! American!

RUSTIC FOURTH

O Fourth July's the finest day of any in the year,
At least that's how it allus seems to me,
You swell your chest an' take a breath, an' find you're breathin' freer,
Es though the air was full of liberty.
The crackin' o' the crackers goin' off by packs an' packs,
The cannon boomin' at the break o' day,
Jes' sort o' sends a joyous little shiver up our backs,
An' the only thing to holler is "Hooray."

The big men o' the county give us Patrick Henry's speech,
An' then recite the Declaration, too,
An' the crowd throw up ther hats an' cheer with ardor, after each patriotic orator is through.
An' then the silver cornet band (the township's joy and pride)
Inspirin' airs appropriately play,
An' the bangin' an' the poppin' start again on every side,
An' the only thing to holler is "Hooray."

An' after bit when darkness comes, the fireworks fizz an' spout,
An' Chinese lanterns twinkle 'midst the trees,
An' in the shadders pretty girls are saunterin' about
With rounded waists an' dimpled hands to squeeze.
An' then wunst more there's music from the silver cornet band,
An' down the floor the dancers all sashay,
Everybody's wantin' pardners—every feller's in demand,
An' the only thing to holler is "Hooray."

Too Late.

Sammy—Why don't you go up and tackle that beau o' yer sister's fer a half ter git some firecrackers?

Tommy—It won't work now. She's accepted him.—Judge.

AN OLD-TIME FOURTH

HOW OUR FOREFATHERS CELEBRATED THE DAY.

There Was Less Noise than Now, but More Feasting and Dancing—Two Typical Celebrations in the Early Part of the Century.

Orated and Feasted.

Our forefathers of three generations ago had a much more pleasant method of celebrating the glorious Fourth than the advanced urchin of to-day, with his hysterical vortex of booming, snapping, thundering, cracking and crashing sounds. Contrasted with the violent celebration of this up-to-date age, the Fourth of July of fifty or 100 years ago presents a peaceful picture of hearty patriotism more in keeping with the real sentiment of the event than the present blustering fashion.

For instance, here is the way the people of Germantown, Pa., celebrated the Fourth of July of 1818. There were three cannon in the little town which had done service both in the Revolution and in the War of 1812. Several days before the Fourth the ladies of the place boiled hams, roasted sucking pigs whole, baked pies by the dozen and biscuits by the hundred, made all manner of cake generously filled with jam, and on the morning of the great day deposited the good things with the proprietor of the best tavern in town. Early on the Fourth the young men of the place fired off the cannons two or three times, as official notice that the ORATOR OF THE DAY.

Fourth of July had come again. At the noon hour the whole community met at the green beside the heaped up tables. There were speeches and a prayer, and then the work of the day began. Benches were placed on all sides of the tables, and the eaters sat as closely as possible.

None of the ladies dined with the men. It was not considered proper. They stood in groups near the tavern, gowned in their best and making polite comments on the diners. In the late afternoon, when all the men had eaten their fill, there was a ball in the public house, and it was here that the ladies really enjoyed the day. They danced right merrily until well on toward midnight, when the candles, the musicians and the dancers were all exhausted.

In the '30's there was a change in the method of celebrating the Fourth. The country was more prosperous, and its patriotism had taken a more vainglorious turn. The town of Newburg-on-the-Hudson gave a great Fourth of July celebration in the year 1831.

The ladies began the work weeks before the Fourth. Committees were appointed, and each member was to call upon a certain number of her friends for contributions. Powder was purchased by an ambitious politician, and the village cannon was shot off at regular intervals during the morning of the Fourth. He also gave small change to the boys of the town, and this was used to buy peppermint candy and gingerbread. Firecrackers were very expensive things then, and few boys cared to indulge in the luxury of using them, even if they had the financial means.

From early sunrise, young ladies and young men were busy making and setting the rude tables, also a place for the orator of the day. The latter had been invited from a neighboring town because of his wide repute for eloquence. He was a young man, who wore his hair long, and in ordinary conversation used nothing but the most ponderous language. He was regarded as one of the coming men of the day by the community and himself.

At midday the people gathered at the church for the grand procession. A band composed of young men of the village led the way, followed by the three finest equipages to be had, in which sat the aged Revolutionary heroes. The 1812 veterans marched next, and then came all kinds of vehicles, from the heavy farm wagon to the light buggy, containing the children and the very old folks. The orator of the day, of course, took as his theme patriotism and the great and growing country. Here is an example of his style. It refers to the signers of the Declaration of Independence:

"Behold these iron-hearted men armed with dauntless valor, and encased in a panoply that no human force could shatter, and in readiness for battle, stalk boldly forward, and with one stroke of the pen cause a vibration that shall only cease to be felt when the universe returns to primeval chaos."

This was considered magnificent, and the long-haired young man after talking for three-quarters of an hour in this strain was deemed the hero of the day. After the deluge of eloquence the joints of beef and other delicacies were attacked, and it was dusk when the feast was over. Back in the village at night there were fireworks, which were considered magnificent, but which would be sneered at by the average small boy of to-day.

Here He is Again.

McKINLEY'S CALIBER

SMOOTH BORE AND EXCEEDINGLY SMALL.

A Man of but One Idea, and Powerless to Expound That Except by Cant and Platitude—His Individuality Lost in His Pernicious Doctrine.

The Tool of Politicians.

William McKinley, of Ohio, the putative author of the McKinley tariff act, whose name is embalmed in the phrase "McKinleyism" was nominated for President by the Republican National Convention. The nomination was made by a great majority of the delegates. No man as weak as McKinley, mentally and in his moral structure, was ever before nominated for President. He has not a great mind. But, large or small, it is occupied by only a single idea—that of protection. Yet he cannot expound the doctrine of protection except in a series of set phrases, of platitudes and in cant which he has worn threadbare in all parts of the country. Even as the representative of protection he is a mere creature of circumstances. He is not the author of the tariff act that bears his name. He was defeated by Reed for the Speakership in 1889, and, under a rule of courtesy, was made Chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee. This position gave him charge of tariff legislation.

How he fulfilled the charge is a matter of history. Every monopoly was invited to be present by its representatives at the meetings of his committee. Neither he nor any other Republican member of the committee prepared a schedule of tariff rates. The lobby made the bill. The attorney or agent of each monopoly and trust prepared the schedule of duties on its special products. The McKinley bill was not in the interest of the people. It was in the interest of the manufacturers, who specified the rate of duty on every article which they produced for the market. The manufacturers named the taxes for the people to pay. The monopolies and trusts, not McKinley, made the McKinley tariff. McKinleyism is protection of the monopolies and trusts, not the protection of the people nor of labor. The McKinley tariff robbed instead of protecting the people and labor. McKinley protection for the people and labor is such protection as the wolf gives to the lamb.

As the leader of the House, by virtue of his committee chairmanship in the Fifty-first, or "Czar," Congress, McKinley was a failure. The tariff bill bearing his name was not framed by him and it could not have been enacted through his influence, although there was an ample Republican majority. The superior strategy devised by others and Speaker Reed's exercise of dictatorial power caused the passage of the bill. An impostor and a humbug as the author of important Congressional legislation, McKinley was a failure and fraud as a State executive officer. The State affairs of Ohio never before were as badly administered as during the four years while he was Governor. The State institutions were honeycombed with fraud and degraded by inefficient management. Weakness, incapacity and dishonesty marked all the departments of the State government. He left a scandalous deficit in the treasury of one of the richest States in the Union.

Personally amiable and honest, McKinley represents brutal politics and all that there is in corrupt legislation and administration. His nomination for President is the result of bulldozing practices, packed delegations and the purchase of hundreds of delegates. He had less than a majority of delegates until fraudulent contestants were substituted for delegates elected by the Republican constituencies. The rascally substitution of false delegates was not confined to the Southern seats contested by ignorant and purchaseable negroes. The seats of New York, Missouri and other States were stolen. Lawfully elected white delegates were evicted from the convention and their places given to those who had no rightful claim. The only title to a seat recognized by Hanna's ruffianly boss-ship was allegiance by the claimant to the McKinley oligarchy and fraud.

If McKinley shall be elected President his four years' term of office will present an example of misgovernment without a parallel in past history. It will be a repetition on a larger scale of his weak and corrupt administration in Ohio. It will be a period of misrule and of riot for all the schemes and conspiracies by which the treasury is robbed or by which the people are defrauded and oppressed. Popular institutions, a system of free government through a pure ballot-box will be tested to their utmost capacity. Under an administration of McKinleyism the traffic in duties and subsidies in patronage and spoils will be a greater strain than that of slavery in the past on the conservative forces of honest republican government.

Republican Tariff Plank.

It has been well remarked that no good cause depends for success upon lies. To this it may be added that every cause which depends on lies for success is bad. This will serve to introduce fittingly some comments upon the prolonged St. Louis tariff plank and the tariff harangue of Temporary Chairman Fairbanks, which are tissues of express or implied falsehoods. The platform says that a protective tariff "taxes foreign products—puts the burden of revenue on foreign goods." These are merely alternate forms of expression for the old lie often uttered by the latest Republican President of the United States and the man who expects to be his successor that "the foreigner pays the tax." The tax is on foreign products, but it is the American who buys the products for consumption that pays the tax. And the curse of it is that the American pays the tax also on the like home product, and this part of the tax goes down into the strong box of the protected American producer and not into the treasury of the United States to be used for public purposes. The protectionist dares not let this truth be known. In order to the accomplishment of his object he must lie about it.

The platform asserts that protection "secures the American market for American producers," but lyingly seeks to hide the fact that it accomplishes this only at the expense of American consumers. The platform declares that protection is "just, fair and impartial, equally opposed to foreign control and domestic monopoly, to sectional discrimination and individual favoritism." This is false throughout. The very essence of the system is injustice, unfairness and partiality. It necessarily creates domestic monopoly, discriminates between sections and favors individuals just so far as it succeeds in accomplishing its purpose.

The carpenters who built the platform inadvertently admit as much when they say that protection "founds the strength of all on the strength of each." If this means anything it means that protection takes strength from those industries that are able to stand and go forward in their own strength and bestows this strength unrighteously wrenched from the strong upon those who are crafty and deceitful enough to make Congress believe they are weak. The special sugar plank reveals this. Translated from the general into the concrete it proposes to tax Americans $80,000,000 a year or more for the benefit of cane and sorghum and beet growers who try to make Congress and the people believe they are unable to make their own living unless Congress gives them power to tax the rest of us. This is the true inwardness of every protective tax.

The tariff plank contains many lies, but none is more palpable and contemptible than that which Temporary Chairman Fairbanks borrowed from the stump speeches of 1894 and those in Congress since then that it was the Democratic tariff which reduced revenues below expenditures. The treasury books show that the expenditures more than devoured the receipts before Harrison left office, and that there was a deficit of more than $60,000,000 during the last year of the McKinley law.

A cause which has to depend upon such barefaced and gigantic lies as those which the Republican platform and all its supporters tell about the revenues and the expenditures must be rotten beyond expression. "We are not pledged to any schedule," say the tariff liars. But they are pledged to McKinley, who stands for the plan of handing every tariff robber and monopolist a blank sheet of paper and telling him to write in all he wants. We all understand that "particular schedule lie."—Chicago Chronicle.

How Hanna Will Get His Money Back.

The Hon. Marcus A. Hanna, of Ohio, is popularly credited with spending $200,000 to secure McKinley's nomination. As Mr. Hanna is a shrewd, hard-headed business man, who never parts with his money unless for some good reason, there is natural inclination on the part of a curious public to know how he is going to get back the money which he so lavishly spent.

An answer to the inquiries as to the way in which this high-souled philanthropist and convention boss will be rewarded for his cash services in McKinley's behalf can be found in the fact that Mr. Hanna is in the iron manufacturing business, out of which he was enabled by protection to make a fortune of several millions of dollars. He is also interested in the Lake Superior iron ore industry and the lake carrying trade. Under the McKinley tariff the duty on iron ore was 43 per cent., and on manufactured iron from 40 to 75 per cent. This made higher prices for iron ore and iron and made Mr. Hanna rich. The Wilson tariff cut down the duty on iron ore to 23 per cent., and the duties on iron manufactures to an average of about 30 per cent. This has greatly benefited the American people by giving them cheaper iron, and has at the same time cut down Mr. Hanna's profits.

Should such a misfortune happen to this country as the election of McKinley as President it is expected by all the Republicans that the high tariff of 1890 will be restored. This will put up the duties on the goods which Mr. Hanna manufactures, will make iron ore dearer and will enable the Iron Ore Trust and the Steel Combine to charge higher prices. With an advance of 50 per cent. in duties the iron monopolists will make greater fortunes, and Mr. Hanna will in a short time be able to rob the people of far more than the $200,000, which rumor charges him with spending on McKinley. Is it any wonder that the beneficiaries of tariff taxes are liberal in their political contributions?

Who Is Hobart?

To the seventy million Americans the name of Garret R. Hobart, Republican candidate for Vice President, was unknown a week ago. All over the country the question is being asked: "Who is Hobart? What did he do to deserve the honor conferred on him by the St. Louis convention? Why were eminent Republican statesmen passed by and this obscure man selected as McKinley's running mate?"

To explain the choice of Mr. Hobart it is only necessary to state who that gentleman is. When the thirty great trunk railroads, representing one thousand millions of capital, formed in December last the gigantic trust known as the Joint Traffic Association, for the purpose of raising rates and compelling the people to pay more tribute to their monopoly, their first choice as one of the three arbitrators to settle all differences between the members of the trust was Garret A. Hobart. He was selected for this position for the same reason that he was nominated for Vice President, because of his consistent, life-long record as a friend of corporations and monopolies. That the Joint Traffic Association has been declared by the United States Inter-State Commerce Commission to be an unlawful conspiracy, and that proceedings have been commenced against it in the Federal courts was the very best indorsement for a candidate of trusts and monopolies. Mr. Hobart is in the eye of the law a conspirator against the people. This, of course, makes him the especial friend of the McKinleyites. Hobart is a fit associate for McKinley, the trust agent, whose tariff was constructed in the interest of monopoly.

Speaks of Her Melancholy Condition After the Birth of Her Child.

"I feel as if I was doing an injustice to my suffering sisters if I did not tell what Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has done for me, and its worth to the world.

"From the birth of my child until he was four years old, I was in poor health, but feeling convinced that half of the ailments of women were imagined or else cultivated, I fought against my bad feelings, until I was obliged to give up. My disease baffled the best doctors.

"I was nervous, hysterical; my head ached with such a terrible burning sensation on the top, and felt as if a band was drawn tightly above my brow; inflammation of the stomach, no appetite, nausea at the sight of food, indigestion, constipation, bladder and kidney troubles, palpitation of the heart, attacks of melancholia would occur without any provocation whatever, numbness of the limbs, threatening paralysis, and loss of memory to such an extent that I feared aberration of the mind.

"A friend advised Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and spoke in glowing terms of what it had done for her.

"I began its use and gained rapidly. Now I am a living advertisement of its merits. I had not used it a year when I was the envy of the whole town, for my rosy, dimpled, girlish looks and perfect health.

"I recommend it to all women. I find a great advantage in being able to say, it is by a woman's hands this great boon is given to women. All honor to the name of Lydia E. Pinkham; wide success to the Vegetable Compound.

CAMPAIGN CLUB OUTFITS.

How to Costume an Up-to-Date Political Organization.

Political clubs are the pride of those who belong to them and the envy and admiration of those who view them. To manage a campaign club takes the skill of a Napoleon. But before the Napoleonic era comes that of the Rothschild. The wherewithal and the how-withal to fight. Then the conflict! In getting up a campaign club the rooms take care of themselves. A friendly nook always opens itself, and there unite the forces that are to conquer the opposing elements in the neighborhood. The initial step is the uniforming. A warrior must be armed cap-a-pie before he goes out to meet even the curious small boys that hang around the doors.

WITH THESE ANY CAMPAIGN CLUB CAN BE FORMED.

1. Oilcloth cape in red, white, blue, or black.
2. Wooden musket.
3. Flannel shirt, embroidered with candidate, or muslin shirt stamped with same.
4. Transparency painted with name and national colors.
5. Silvered battle-ax upon light wooden mounting.
6. Double swivel torch; hangs straight, no matter how carried; perfectly safe.
7. Bull's-eye fixed with red glass.
8. Political broom; can be fixed in end of musket or above battle-ax.
9. Flag of stiff material—silk, or muslin or tin.
10. Fur shako of white or black, for campaigners or musicians.
11-12. White duck leggings for knickerbockers or trousers.
13. Dark night marching lantern set with colored lights.
14. Cockade hat for Napoleonic or Washingtonian clubs.
15-16. Cap and silk hat, the latter a political favorite with certain clubs.
17. Patriotic belt for full dress—white leather with raised silver eagle.
18-19. Samples of uniforms for clubs that wear full military or fancy dress.

To dress a campaign warrior is a matter of price and endeavor with the committee having the dressing in hand. Manufacturers have been busy for months getting ready to meet these committees, and shop windows are as luminous at night as the transparencies they offer. A battle ax, a gun and a transparency may be enough for a boys' club, but men want more elaborate equipment. They must be dressed from peak to toe. Uniforms of all styles are made for them, and to ask the price of them is to set a clerk rattling off prices as though a handle had been lifted from a phonographic machine.

The most extensive political uniform outfit can be purchased for $7. This is a very expensive outfit, and is bought only by gilt-edged clubs with either a fashionable neighborhood to parade or a woman's auxiliary club to admire. A complete outfit of an expensive suit in a Prince Albert coat, a pair of trousers, a belt, a lantern, a battle ax, a shako and leggins. Of these the Prince Albert costs $3; the trousers $1.50, made either of white duck or felt of any color; the belt, of white canvas, is 25 cents; the white duck leggins 25 cents, and the shako, $1.25. The remainder goes for torch and battle ax.

A cheaper uniform, and one that looks almost as good, comes within $1.15. There is a helmet costing 30 cents, a belt, a gun charged with a flag upon the end, and a flannel shirt. The last is stamped with the name and face of the candidate. "Vote for A." A cap, a cape of oil cloth in any color, and a torch can all be bought for 55 cents for the uniforming of a boys' club. The most important part of a political uniform is the hat. There are small white duck caps that cost 15 cents. Oilcloth ones in colors can be purchased for 25 cents, and so up to the fur shako of fairly good quality for 75 cents.

Makers of uniforms say there is no call for good materials. The campaigners want a great deal for the money, but they do not ask for enduring things. They want them for nightly appearance for three months, but after November they will be hung up in the archives of the clubs or thrown to the boys for city elections. The cost of getting up a campaign club is so small that it is practically nothing. A collection will inaugurate the movement. A ten-cent cap, a ten-cent double swinging torch and a fifteen-cent oilcloth cape set the ball rolling gayly. There lives no man with political soul so dead that he has never joined a campaign club, and this year the low price of uniforms brings the political club within the range of all who feel the spark of marching patriotism.

WHAT WE MAY EXPECT DURING THE CAMPAIGN.

Most Unexpected.

Wonderful things happen in this world, and many other things, possibly more wonderful still, are said to happen. Thus the New York Tribune reports that a company of American travelers were telling stories in the smoking-room of a steamer. One thing led to another, till a member of the party capped the climax by narrating an odd adventure that once befell him in Germany.

"There is in Hanover, as some of you know," he began, "a beautiful garden, Herrenhausen, on which the kings of Hanover, when there were kings of Hanover, lavished much attention. Some years ago I visited Herrenhausen with my wife and children, and some persons whose acquaintance we had made on the steamer. It was a beautiful day in summer, and we all felt in the highest spirits.

"It happened that at the hotel some one had told me of the statue of a former margravine of Hanover, which was soon to be unveiled in Herrenhausen. It was to stand in a shell-shaped structure, the whole of which was boarded over at that time.

"When our party reached this shed-like affair, I began to tell what it was there for, who the margravine was, and so on, pretending a vast knowledge of the whole business. One of my children then wanted to know if we could not see the statue. In a joking way I said certainly, and going up to the gate of the shed, drew a bunch of keys from my pocket.

"I made as if I were going to open the lock, and actually put a key into it, taking the first that came to hand. I turned the key to carry out the joke, and was astonished beyond measure to find the lock yield and the door open.

"My little daughter clapped her hands and exclaimed, 'Oh, papa's opened the door!' and rushed in to see the statue. The others followed, while I for a moment was too dazed to say a word. I began to feel more or less alarmed. I had heard a great deal about the strictness of German enforcement of law, and knew that technically I had committed burglary.

"The question also arose in my mind whether I could not be haled up for lese-majesty and sent to prison for six months. At the same time it would have been embarrassing and humiliating to confess to my children that I had made a mistake, and had no right in there.

"The statue was covered with cloth, and so I managed to hustle the party out of the shed after a short time. One of the laborers chanced to pass, and he was evidently surprised to see us in there. He must have taken me for the sculptor or something of the kind, and did not summon a policeman.

"I was in the greatest trepidation until I relocked the door and finally got away with my family and friends. There were probably a million chances to one that my key wouldn't fit that particular lock, but I haven't liked to be too practical in my jokes since that time."

Invented by Women.

Celia Thaxter, the poetess, had not an exalted opinion of the capacities of her sex.

She once said: "Women never invented knitting nor any other art." Yet it is an undisputed fact that the first button establishment was due to a woman.

The machine for making satchel bottomed paper bags was the invention of a woman, men having tried long and unsuccessfully to produce such an article.

A foundry owner declares that the first stove he ever saw was invented by a woman, though the patent was taken out by a man, and the original Declaration of Independence was printed by one Katherine Goddard. There!

A POSTMASTER'S WIFE

A LEEDS WOMAN WHO ASTONISHED HER FRIENDS AND NEIGHBORS.

Near to Death, but Restored So Completely that She Has Been Accepted by a Life Insurance Company as a Good Risk.

From the Journal, Lewiston, Me.

A bright little woman, rosy and fresh from her household duties, dropped into a chair before the writer and talked with enthusiasm shining in her snapping black eyes.

The people in the pretty village of Leeds Center, Me., have watched with some interest the restoration to complete health of Mrs. W. L. Francis, wife of the postmaster. So general were the comments on this interesting case that the writer who visited Mrs. Francis and learned from her that the statements regarding her troubles and her subsequent extrication therefrom are entirely true. That others may be benefited by her experience, Mrs. Francis has consented to allow her story to appear in print.

"If there is anything on earth I dread more than another," she said, "it is to see my name in the papers. But in this case I conquer my repugnance and give publicly the same credit to the savior of my life as I would to one who had dragged me from a death beneath the waves. In fact, I have extolled my preserver so enthusiastically and unreservedly; have sought out sufferers and recommended the remedy to so many friends and acquaintances that already my neighbors jocularly call me, 'Pink Pills Francis.' But really, my recovery is something that I consider wonderful. I know that there are so many testimonials of medicine in the papers nowadays that people do not pay as much heed as formerly, but I do wish folks who are suffering would remember that what I say comes right from the heart of a woman who feels that she had a new lease of happy life given to her.

"Eleven years ago I was afflicted with nervous prostration. My existence until two years ago was one of dragging misery. Anyone in the village will tell you of my condition. My blood seemed exhausted from my veins and month after month I grew weaker. I was able to undertake only the lightest household work, and even then I could perform it only by slow and careful movements. During all these sorry months and years I was under the care of this doctor and that, but their medicines helped me only spasmodically, and then I fell into relapses more prostrating than ever.

"In the night I used to be awakened by the most excruciating pains in my heart and side, and was obliged to use pellets of powerful medicine that the doctor gave me for relief in such attacks. At last my condition became so grave that I went out only infrequently. We live up stairs, you notice, over my husband's store, and in descending the stairway I frequently was obliged to sort of fall and slide over the steps in order to descend, such was the strain on my system resulting from even this slight exertion. Occasionally I visited the neighbors, but I was obliged to sit and rest to recover breath while ascending any elevation. In short, it did not seem that I could live.

"One day I saw an advertisement of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People, and although my faith in remedies was weak by that time, I sent for a box and tried them. That was two years ago. Now I call myself a well woman. Isn't it wonderful?

"I haven't had one of those excruciating pains in the heart for a year and a half. Why, even the first box of pills helped me. I can walk miles now; can do my work easily; have gained in weight constantly, and you would scarcely believe it, but a little while ago I was examined for endowment life insurance and was accepted unhesitatingly after a careful examination by the physician.

"Do you wonder that I'm shouting 'Pink Pills' all through our village? I haven't taken any of the remedy for some months, for it has completely built me up, but at the first sign of trouble I know to what refuge to flee.

"Last year my aunt, Mrs. M. A. Blossom, of Dixfield, P. O., was here visiting me. She was suffering from lack of vitality and heart trouble, but she was skeptical about my remedy that I was so enthusiastically advocating. At last, however, she tried it and carried some home with her when she went. A little while ago I received a letter from her and in it said, 'I am cured, thanks to God and Pink Pills.' She also wrote that her husband had been prostrated, but had been restored by the remedy.

"We feel up this way that such a sovereign cure cannot be too widely known. That is the only reason why I allow my name to be used in this connection. I know also that by personally recommending them I have helped many of my friends back to health, for I never let an opportunity pass when a word of counsel may direct some one."

One of the persons to whom Mrs. Francis recommended Pink Pills is Station Agent C. H. Foster, of Leeds Center, and the reporter found him patrolling the platform awaiting the arrival of the morning train. Mr. Foster, who is one of the most trustworthy, capable and energetic men in the employ of the Maine Central R.R., appeared in usual good health and spirits, and we made inquiry as to the cause.

"Do you know," replied he, "I think I've made a discovery, or at least Mrs. Francis has for me. I have been in poor health for a long time with a heart trouble variously complicated. We have been so fully interested in Mrs. Francis' wonderful recovery that I at once determined to give the medicine recommended a thorough test. So, about two months ago, I bought the first box of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. Only two months, please note, yet already I am so much improved, so much better able to fulfill my duties, so sanguine that I am on the road to recovery, that I feel like a new man.

"I can now walk without the fatigue I once experienced, my heart affection appears to be relieved, and I have joined the Pink Pills Band in our community."

Mr. Foster commenced taking the pills at a time when he was completely prostrated, after he had suffered such a severe attack of heart trouble that it was necessary to carry him home from his office. Since then he has faithfully adhered to the remedy and is constantly improving, so much so as to excite his enthusiasm and his gratitude.

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills contain, in a condensed form, all the elements necessary to give new life and richness to the blood and restore shattered nerves. Pink Pills are sold by all dealers, or will be sent post paid on receipt of price, 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50, by addressing Dr. Williams' Med. Co., Schenectady, N.Y.

Lamb.

We are rapidly becoming a lamb and mutton eating people, and flock masters may profitably give more attention to this demand than they have heretofore been doing. It is estimated that we market 200,000 lambs annually, between the ages of four and eight weeks. It is a rapidly growing industry.

A graphic idea of the immense size of Siberia may be gleaned from the following comparisons: All of the states, kingdoms, principalities, empires, etc., of Europe (except Russia), and all of the United States, including Alaska, could be placed side by side in Siberia, and yet but little more than cover that immense country.

A Lonely Old Man Dies.

It is reported that Reavis, the "Hermit of the Superstition Mountains," is dead. His body was found by the roadside, five miles from his cabin. Reavis was a peculiar character, and for a quarter of a century had lived alone in the mountains, with no companion save his rifle and dogs. Indians had a dread of his unerring aim, and Apaches considered the old man a spirit that could not be killed. He left his wife and children, who lived near the old mission at Los Angeles, some thirty years ago. Those who knew him said that in a fit of anger, Reavis walked through the side of his residence that was planked up and down, and from that date he was never seen by his family.

When the Silver King mine was being worked the old man used to supply the camp with vegetables, carrying the same with a train of burros. Twice a year he came to Florence for supplies. His home was a stone cabin and his bed a pile of deer and bear skins. He farmed about five acres of land in the mountain dell.—Phoenix (Arizona) Gazette.

Spanish Cookery.

I do not believe that any one, not even Washington Irving, ever remained so long on Alhambra's hill. The manager grew so used to us that he gave up providing the French dishes prepared or the tourist now the waiters brought only their own extraordinary messes, golden with saffron, scarlet with pepper, soft with oil, fragrant with garlic, most of which had hitherto been reserved for the family dinner in the office. We were over made to abstain on Friday, and very flamboyant was our abstinence. In fact, for those who like the rococo in cookery, the Spanish kitchen is unrivaled.—Century.

Too Much.

Nothing is gained by trying to grow too many plants or trees on an acre. It is not always the number of plants that increases the yield, but their thrift and feeding capacity. A dozen strong and stocky plants will produce more than double that number which are weak and spindling. Trees that are too close together simply come into competition for food and do not grow as rapidly as they should.

If Remote from Medical Help,

Doubly essential is it that you should be provided with some reliable family medicine. Our Diplomatic Service.

The diplomatic service has sometimes been assailed in Congress as a purely ornamental one; and while the evident necessity of maintaining the service is such as ought to save it from the destructionists, it is quite true that our diplomatic relations with some of powers are more ceremonious than practical. But we must be equipped and prepared for emergencies, and every now and then, even at the smallest and most remote courts, there is a critical need of an American representative to protect American citizens or American interests.—Ex-President Harrison in July Ladies' Home Journal.

At Kendallville.

The republican nominating convention at Kendallville yesterday, June 25, was a pretty lively affair. The nomination for senator, was a plain matter of "acclamation," however, as Mr. Rose had the matter carefully in hand. Mr. Willis on reaching Kendallville, found he had but two votes that he could depend on, and so took the next train home. His friend, Mr. Lockhart, when the proper time came, arose and withdrew Mr. Willis' name and moved that the nomination of Mr. Rose he made unanimous, which was done. The matter of joint representative was not so easily settled. There were three candidates and as now appears, at least, a better chance for the election. The candidates were, Charles Harris, of Goshen, Isaac Nadle, an Elkhart clothier and Dr. Knepper, of Ligonier. So it took ten ballots to settle it. The fight was hot, but good natured, and on the tenth ballot, the vote stood:

Knepper	27½

So Knepper won by the narrow margin of 1½.

The two candidates Dr. Teal and Dr. Knepper, are pretty evenly matched and there will be a close election unless one side or the other is aided by another landslide. In ordinary years, the district is republican, DeKalb county has generally given about 300 for the democrats; Noble would vary from 100 democratic to 200 republican, while Elkhart county, has generally been sure for about 400 republican. Dr. Teal lives in Kendallville, and Dr. Knepper in Ligonier. Both are men of considerable acquaintance, and both fairly popular. Teal was a surgeon in the army, and it is our recollection that Knepper was in the service also in some capacity. So, it will be seen that much will depend on how the two towns of Kendallville and Ligonier cut one another's throats.

As to senator, there are some conditions, like those in the case above named. Dr. Nusbanm and J. H. Rose, are both located together, here in Auburn, both have a large circle of acquaintance and friends, as Dr. Nusbaum has a large practice as a physician, and Mr. Rose, has for a young man, a good practice in the law. Both are comparatively young; we believe both will make active campaigns. There will be no flies camping on their trails. But as, under ordinary conditions, the two counties would give a small net majority for the democrats, it looks as if the physician had the attorney in a fair way to be "chloroformed."

Pencil Puncture

Conductor Bradley of the Wabash road, came rushing into Dr. Baxter's office this morning to have a bad thumb treated. It was hurt while he was coupling cars on his freight train, the west bound local that goes through Auburn about: ten a. m. In making the coupling the pencil he carried was forced into the ball of his thumb, making a painful but not dangerous wound. The Doctor dressed it, and it will be all right in a few days. But until the soreness is out, he will not indulge in such little sinful games as "Simon says, Thumbs up."

"The Foot of a Fly"

says an eminent English doctor, "will carry enough poison to infect a household." In summer-time, more especially, disease germs fill the air, multitudes are infected, fall ill, die; multitudes escape. These messengers of mischief do not exist for millions. Why not? Because they are healthy and strong—protected as a crocodile is against gunshot. It is the weak, the wasted, the thin-blooded who fall; those who have no resistive power so that a sudden cough or cold develops into graver disease. We hear of catching disease! Why not catch health? We can do it by always maintaining our healthy weight.

Scott's Emulsion

of Cod-liver Oil, is condensed nourishment; food for the building up of the system to resist the attacks of disease. It should be taken in reasonable doses all summer long by all those whose weight is below the standard of health. If you are losing ground, try a bottle now.

Obituary

Nicholas McIntyre, son of William and Mary McIntyre was born in Milan, Yates Co. N. Y., June 10, 1821, died at Sedan DeKalb county, Ind., June 23, 1896, age 75 years and 13 days.

The early part of his life was spent in New York State, where his first marriage occurred, of which union two children were born, both dying before him. From New York he moved to Ohio, where he was married the second time and leaves a son and daughter to mourn his death, Archie McIntyre, of Auburn, and Mrs. Jennie Imus, of Anaconda, Mont.

He moved from Ohio to Indiana in 1852, locating at Sedan, Ind., where he has since made his home. His third marriage occurred Dec. 13, 1885, leaving a widow and son Willie. After coming to Indiana he was contractor and builder of part of the Air Line division of L. S. & M. S. R. R., afterward running a blacksmith shop at Sedan, for a number of years, disposing of that he bought and cleared a farm east of there.

In 1877, he joined the Reynolds temperance movement being president of the club for a number of years. The following winter he united with the Evangelical Lutheran church of Sedan. In the winter of 1894, he was stricken with paralysis and never fully recovered, being in poor health all the time. June 12, another stroke occurred, of which he died, not being able to speak nor make his wants known.

The funeral occurred at Sedan June 25, services conducted by Rev. Barket, interment at Cedar Lake cemetery.

Obituary.

Margaret E. Cunningham was born March 6, 1841, and departed this life June 4, 1896, age 55 years, 2 months and 28 days.

She was married to James Felt September 21, 1865, and lived happily until his death, July 15, 1874. There were three children born to them of whom two survive, Charles, and Anna; Ollie having been called away when but 7 years of age. She was a widow 9 years and was then united in marriage to H. C. Croy, Feb. 20, 1883, who survives her. She leaves husband, three brothers, son and daughter and a host of friends to mourn the loss; she was a loving wife, a kind mother and sister and charitable neighbor. She was a very patient sufferer for nearly six months, but did not complain; she has been a christian for a number of years, and was ready when her Master called.

Mrs. Croy was a most worthy lady, and a most industrious and intelligent member of the community. She had won the regard of all who met her, and they proved the esteem they felt for her, by the interest they showed, when she was stricken by fatal disease. In all ways possible they faithfully ministered to her sufferings, and for this, the relatives named above, and the brothers, Thomas and A. P. Cunningham, at Larwill, wish to return thanks.

Recovery Due to It.

—Mrs. Rhodie Noah, of this place, was taken in the night with cramping pains and the next day diarrhœa set in. She took half a bottle of blackberry cordial, but got to relief. She then sent to me to see if I had anything that would help her. I sent her a bottle of Chamberlain's Colic Cholera and Diarrhœa Remedy and the first dose relieved her. Another of our neighbors had been sick for about a week had tried different remedies for diarrhœa, but kept getting worse. I sent him this same remedy. Only four doses of it were required to cure him. He says he owes his recovery to this wonderful remedy.—Mrs. Mary Mary Sibley, S dney, Mich. For sale by Davenport, the druggist. 2731

Royal Baking Powder

ABSOLUTELY PURE

Kruse-Fretz.

Thursday's Daily.

Married at the home of Samuel Fretz on South Jackson street last evening at 5:30 o'clock, by J. D. Brosy, pastor of the Lutheran church, Mr. George N. Kruse and Mary C. Fretz. Both are of Auburn and will make their future home here. They are a worthy young couple and the COURIER extends congratulations.

Registered.

Dr. Willard W. Swarts, after a rest from college for a few months, registered his diploma from the Medical College of Ohio, at the county clerk's office to-day. This authorizes him to practice medicine and surgery in the state of Indiana. He has lost no time and spared no labor, opportunity or money in fitting himself for his learned profession. As is well known, he was reared under the careful and earnest tutorage of his parents, two of our learned physicians, who have taken special pride in teaching him much of the healing art outside of his regular collegiate course. He has graduated from the oldest medical college west of Appalachian mountains, and one which ranks to-day with the best medical colleges of America, being also recognized in France, Germany and England. The faculty embraces many names of world-wide reputation. The young Doctor will office at Auburn Sanitarium with his parents, and will engage in both country and city practice. We bespeak for him a liberal share of patronage and look forward, with his friends, to his future success in following the Hippocratic Oath.

The World's Fair Tests showed no baking powder so pure or so great in leavening power as the Royal.

It Leads.

Wherever it has been introduced, Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin leads all other remedies in curing constipation, indigestion and sick headache. It only costs 10c for trial size (10 doses for 10c.) Large size 50c and $1.00. Sold by Davenport, the druggist. 2731

$1.00 for 10c.

A gentleman from Farmer City, Ill., writes: "I have used your remedy, Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, and find it an excellent medicine. My whole family use it. Our baby is only six months old and takes it freely. I would not be without it if the 10c size cost me $1.00." Lincoln S. Payne. In 10c, 50c and $1.00 sizes at Davenport the druggist's. 2731

In One or Two Days.

In the vicinity of Boquet, Westmoreland county, Pa., almost any one can tell you how to cure a lame back or stiff neck. They dampen a piece of flannel with Chamberlain's Pain Balm and bind it on the affected parts and in one or two days the trouble has disapperred. This same treatment will promptly cure a pain in the side or chest. Mr. E. M. Frye, a prominent merchant of Boquet, speaks very highly of Pain Balm, and his recommendations have had much to do with making it popular there. For sale by Davenport, the druggist. 2731

Nervous Prostration

Cured by Dr. Miles' Nervine.

Prolonged derangement of the nervous system not only affects the brain and mental powers, but develops disease in some of the vital organs. The most dangerous of these indirect results is when the heart is affected. This was the case of the Rev. N. F. Surface, Fawn River, Mich., who writes under date of Feb. 14, 1895:

"Fourteen years ago I had a slight stroke of paralysis. Overwork brought on nervous prostration. I was exceedingly nervous and the exertion of public speaking caused heart palpitation that threatened my life. I used two bottles of Dr. Miles' New Heart Cure for my heart trouble, and two of Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine for my nervousness and feel better than I ever expected to feel again. I can speak for hours without tiring or having my heart flutter as it formerly did, and I have you to thank that I am alive today."

Don't Get The Wrong Impression,

For a Psychopathic Physician is a common man among common people. He is not Christ, nor is he a Seventh Son. But if true to his work as an honest man to his people, studying natural law, to relieve the suffering humanity.

And if he is a Man, he would not wish to rate himself, as insignificant as he is, with a beloved Christ.

Psychopatic Treatment is a science taught by God and man. Why? Because you must learn natural law: first, because the patient is governed by natural law that we learn from God; second, we learn the anatomy of the human body. and by framing them both together we have one of the most beautiful lessons God ever gave to man.

CASTORIA

for Infants and Children.

MOTHERS, Do You Know that Paregoric, Bateman's Drops, Godfrey's Cordial, many so-called Soothing Syrups, and most remedies for children are composed of opium or morphine?

Do You Know that opium and morphine are stupefying narcotic poisons?

Do You Know that in most countries druggists are not permitted to sell narcotics without labeling them poisons?

Do You Know that you should not permit any medicine to be given your child unless you or your physician know of what it is composed?

Do You Know that Castoria is a purely vegetable preparation, and that a list of its ingredients is published with every bottle?

Do You Know that Castoria is the prescription of the famous Dr. Samuel Pitcher. That it has been in use for nearly thirty years, and that more Castoria is now sold than of all other remedies for children combined?

Do You Know that the Patent Office Department of the United States, and of other countries, have issued exclusive right to Dr. Pitcher and his assigns to use the word "Castoria" and its formula, and that to imitate them is a state prison offense?

Do You Know that one of the reasons for granting this government protection was because Castoria had been proven to be absolutely harmless?

Do You Know that 35 average doses of Castoria are furnished for 35 cents, or one cent a dose?

Do You Know that when possessed of this perfect preparation, your children may be kept well, and that you may have unbroken rest?

Well, these things are worth knowing. They are facts.

The fac-simile signature of Chas. H. Fletcher is on every wrapper.

Children Cry for Pitcher's Castoria.

Frank B. VanAuken.

The nominee for presidential elector for the 12th District, is a young man of forty. In 1874 he graduated with high honors, at the age of nineteen, from Hillsdale College, in a class that numbered among its members such distinguished men as R. M. Wing, the great criminal lawyer of Chicago, and Spencer J. Willard, late lieutenant-governor of California. He organized the graded schools of Orland, and there married one of Steuben's most gifted and accomplished ladies, Miss Mina Sanders. He and his wife organized and taught the first graded school at Pleasant Lake. In a county overwhelmingly republican, he was elected surveyor, but chose to accept the superintendency of the schools at Waterloo. His success in those schools was so pronounced that for several years he was re-elected, and when finally he concluded to leave them, the citizens were very loth to lose him. He moved from Waterloo to "Magic Grove Farm" three miles south of Angola. Since that time he has been engaged in farming. His mental life, however, continued active in politics, literature and public enterprises. He is one of the most valued citizens of Steuben county. He is president of the Farmers Institute and has contributed some of the most scholarly and useful papers to its sessions. The family consists of himself, wife and and four children, three sons and one daughter. His eldest son and the daughter are attending school at the Tri-State Normal College at Angola. The family is the highest outgrowth of christian civilization, and in it all the best elements of our civilization meet. He is a christian gentleman with wife and children that do him honor. Refined by nature, polished by culture and strengthened by all that is best in morals and religion, Mr. VanAuken is an excellent type of the true American. At the same time he is a laborer on the farm and feels the crushing tendencies of the centralization of wealth.

He is for free silver 16 to 1, first last and all the time. No interest will be be betrayed that is intrusted to his hands. And his vote in the electoral college, should he be elected, as we believe he will, will be an intelligent one, and one that will fully represent the people who gave into his keeping this high duty of American citizenship.

They do not weaken by their action, but by giving tone to stomach and bowels greatly invigorate the system. Regular size 25c per box. Sold at Robbins & McCord's drug store. 4

Lovely Views.

Clapp, the Auburn phographer, was sent for a few days ago to go up into Troy township and take a view of the new bridge, or rather of such part of the work as is under way. The contractor wished to show the manner in which such work is done, for, it is often a difficult matter to secure a solid foundation at the edge of DeKalb Co. streams. Many of our streams run through or over quick sand, and a stone abutment must be put down below this in order to get a solid foundation. This work therefore, usually includes putting down extensive curbing of planks, usually much larger than the size of the stone work, and then an engine must be used day after day, to pump the water out. But when a good bottom is reached, and the stone work is properly laid, it is there for all time. But this all adds to the present costs of our bridges. We speak of this so our people may know why some of our bridges cost so much, and why the foundation often costs so much more than the fine iron bridge that rests on it. An inspection of these fine views will show this better, than we can tell it. There are three of the views, taken from as many different directions and they are not only fine works of art, but the landscape shown is lovely. Besides these views, Mr. Clapp took pictures of the fine homes of B. F. Cornelius, who lives a little east of the bridge, and that of J. B. Bryant who lives a few rods east of Mr Cornelius. Both have lovely farm residences and with their surroundings make pictures that the families should feel proud of. Call at Clapp's and see them.

Sneak Thieves.

The DAILY warned our citizens on Tuesday, that the usual gang of petty thieves, was following the show. So, the most of our people were ready for them, and either staid at home or locked their houses. But they got in their work in a few places. Mrs. Zorah Shaffer, near the Presbyterian church had occasion to leave her house alone a few hours. But as she was expecting the ice man, she left the kitchen door unlocked. This was early in the afternoon. Soon after she left, Mrs. Frank McDowell, who lives on the next lot, saw a man trying to get a drink at Mrs. Shaffer's pump. He had come out of the house, but as Mrs. Shaffer was expecting a cousin from Ohio to visit her, Mrs. McDowell thought no more of it. But when Mrs. Shaffer came home the fact was discovered that the house had been robbed. The thief got four or five dollars in money, and a ring in Mrs. Shaffer's rooms. In the rooms on the second floor, occupied by Mr. Colvin, pastor of the Presbyterian church, a hand sachel and several articles of clothing were missing. The same man with the sachel about the same hour came to the rear of Supt. Merica's residence, and pretended he wanted to get a drink. When Mr. Colvin learned of his loss he set about finding the thief. Believing the man would take a train out of town, he went to the stations and kept watch. About half an hour before the west bound Wabash train was to leave, he saw in the station there, his sachel, but no one was with it. He telephoned for Marshal West, who came down and just before the train was to go through a man came in and picked up the sachel. He was arrested and a few pieces of Mr. Colvin's clothes were found in it, and he had on a shirt collar and cravat belonging to Mr. Colvin. He was locked up, and this morning brought before Squire Walter. He gave his name as Will Harvey, and said he was ready for trial. His case will come up at 10 tomorrow.

Sometime in the afternoon, the residence of Geo. Grund on West 7th was broken into, and a lot of fresh baked cookies taken. Wm. Bafley lost four or five bushels of chop feed last night, and Perry Muhn's residence was entered and some clothes belonging to him taken. Attempts were also made to get into Simp Johnson's and Lydia Hogue's.

Summer Complaint.

Last summer one of our grand children was sick with a severe bowel trouble. Our doctor's remedies had failed, then we tried Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhœa Remedy, which gave very speedy relief. We regard it as the best remedy ever put on the market for bowel complaints—Mrs. E. G. Gregory, Frederickstown, Mo. This certainly is the best remedy ever put on the market for dysentary, summer complaint, colic and cholera infantum in children. It never fails to give prompt relief when used in reasonable time and the plain printed directions are followed. Many mothers have expressed their sincere gratitude for the cures it has effected. A LETTER OF . . . . .

Recommendation.

AUBURN, IND., July 6, 1896.

The latter part of last winter I contracted with J. G. Clapp, Photographer, Auburn, Ind., for two enlarged portraits. The work is completed and fine and satisfactory. In my experience have relized him to be gentlemanly, honorable and punctual in his work and time of completion. This transaction placed me on the list of competitors for the beautiful Sewing Machine, called the "Premium," he gave his patrons as a prize to the one who presented the greatest number of tickets, July 4, 1896, for work done between the dates of Jan. 1 and July 4, 1896. In this part of the contract I also found him to be just and upright.

Very Respectfullr,
MRS. R. S. S. REED.

—Two men boarding at the Central House got into a quarrel one night last week and in some way set fire to some of the bed clothes. Not much harm came of it.

How He Got It.

As noted a few days ago a north Indiana man got a nomination on the state ticket. O. H. Downey of the Albion Democrat was the lucky man, and we copy from his paper, the full vote by which he was nominated.

The names placed in nomination for State Statistician, were Robert D. Mayfield, of Knox Co; Charles A. Porter, of Shelby; Charles Graffs, of Cass; O. H. Downey, of Noble county. The first ballot was;

Mayfield	288
Porter	345
Graffs	415
Downey	694

The second ballot resulted as follows:

Mayfield	150
Porter	171
Downey	1025.

Downey was declared the nominee and takes pleasure in acknowledging the valuable assistance given us by the entire Noble county delegation in particular and to the district in general. Also to Hon J. M. Robinson, Andrew Adams, Judge Adair, Judge Connor. Also to the 49 counties that cast a solid vote for Downey on the second ballot.

16 to 1.

There is scarcely a paper that comes to our table, but has some explanation of this very plain matter. We apprehend no one in DeKalb county misunderstands it, as the COURIER, for the past year, has often made it plain that it is merely the weight of the dollars, the silver dollar weighing about 16 times as much as the gold dollar. This is all there is to it. But it appears that now and then a locality is in the dark. The Columbia City Post, recently enlightened its readers on the subject. But we learned a few new points, while in Indianapolis recently. There was an old German grocer, who thought he had the problem all figured out. A customer asked his view of it, and he at once stepped to his cash drawer, and began to pull out silver dollars. He said he wanted sixteen of them to explain the problem fully, but he had not that many. So he took eight of them, put them on the scales, and showed that they weighed half a pound. "Now," said he, "If I had 16 of them they would weigh a pound, and that is what 16 to 1 means, sixteen to a pound." And he felt he had a sure thing.

Another gentleman related his experience. Two men, a democrat and a repulican, were discussing the matter in his presence, and found they both understood it in the same way. They agreed it was money making idea. "For," said one of them, "whenever you get a gold dollar, you can exchange it for sixteen silver dollars, and you have 16 for 1. And even if the silver dollars are worth but fifty cents, as some people claim, you still have a good thing, the value of eight dollars for one." As we said before, we think the people fully understand the question up this way. It might be added that the grocer was a little off, not much. Sixteen silver dollars of 412½ grains each would weigh 6600 troy gains, and there 7000 troy grains in a pound avoirdupois, the kind of pound he was using.

The World's Fair Tests showed no baking powder so pure or so great in leavening power as the Royal.

DOINGS OF THE DAY.

SUMMARY OF THE NEWS OF THE WEEK.

Eventful Happenings in Every Known Hemisphere—Fires, Accidents, Crimes, Politics, Religion, Commerce and Crops, Sandwiched with Minor Affairs.

The Disorder Grows.

Cleveland special: Bloodshed again marked the trouble at the Brown Hoisting Works Friday afternoon. One man, William Rettiger, was shot dead by a non-union man who had attempted to leave the works on his bicycle and was attacked by a portion of the mob. The police managed with great difficulty to rescue him and the police detail was beseiged in a shop and had great difficulty in preventing the lynching of their prisoner. Finally a call for troops was made and two of the four companies under arms were hurried to the scene. The prisoner was finally loaded into a patrol wagon and locked up in the central police station. The troops remain on guard and there is a sullen mob of at least 10,000 men hanging around the premises. Shortly before the hour for quitting, several strikers marched up to the broom works with a big banner, on which was written in black type: "Brown Scabs."

Bought a Gold Brick.

E. B. Walters, a livery stable keeper of Shelby, Ohio., went to Akron with a $5,000 gold brick, which he had purchased from a stranger for $100. He took it to a goldsmith, who immediately pronounced it brass, covered with a thin wash of gold. The stranger who sold the brick represented himself as a mine-owner of Arizona, who had fled because he had killed a man. Together they had bored a hole in the brick, and filing supposed to come from the center were tested and they proved to be gold.

Death of Harriet Beecher Stowe.

Mrs. Harriet Beecher Stowe, the gifted author of "Uncle Tom's Cabin," "Dred" and other works of world-wide reputation, died at her home in Hartford, Conn. She passed peacefully away as though in a deep sleep. Mrs. Stowe was born June 14, 1811, in Litchfield, Conn., the daughter of the Rev. Lyman Beecher, a distinguished preacher. She first moved to Hartford in 1824 as a schoolgirl and has lived there permanently, with a winter residence in Florida, since 1865.

A Soldier's Suicide.

At Pittsburgh, Pa., John M. Lewis, son of a wealthy Blairsville family and late Corporal of Company G, Seventh Regiment, shot and instantly killed himself in a house of questionable character. The cause was remorse at having abused a woman with whom he had been living. Lewis had served an enlistment in the United States army at Fort Dodge. The woman in the case is Nora Spencer.

Three Shots Fired Into a Passenger Train.

The north-bound express on the Norfolk and Western was fired into near Higby's, a point twelve miles below Chillicothe, Ohio. Two windows were broken, and it is reported that one passenger received several shots in the face. Officers are investigating, but have not yet caught the miscreants. Three shots were fired from shotguns.

In a Flower Bed.

Robert Hervey, an eccentric and aged citizen of Danville, Ill., died the other day in rather modest circumstances. His family believed him to have considerable money secreted, and searchers, digging in a flower bed, unearthed an iron pot containing $1,000, over half of which was in gold. It is believed there will be more found.

Hoots and Jeers for Workmen.

A special from Cleveland says: One hundred and twenty-five workmen left the Brown Hoisting Company's works under escort of 175 policemen. Strikers and on-lookers numbering 6,000 hooted and jeered them, and squads of policemen went in all directions escorting the men home. Serious trouble is expected at any time.

Steamer Sunk.

The British steamer Santa Renze, bound to Paris from Lisbon, has been sunk in collision with the four masted British ship Dundonald, Captain Girvan, from San Francisco, on March 10, for Hull, England. The Dundonald was damaged and is leaking, but no lives were lost.

Committed Suicide.

Buenos Ayres special: Dr. Alern, the leader of the Radicals, who was the chief opponent of ex-President Zanes Pena, who resigned in 1895, has committed suicide. He took part in several revolutions against President Pena, but was pardoned.

The Greatest Wonder of the Age

Is the marvelous performances of Philion at Swift's Park, Fort Wayne, Indiana. Much has been written regarding this man's performances, but he comes before the public this year more wonderful than ever.

Lillian's Deed.

Miss Lillian Ashley of Boston, whose case against E. J. (Lucky) Baldwin, the prominent capitalist and horseman, for seduction under promise of marriage, has been on trial in the Superior Court in San Francisco for several weeks, created a sensation in the court room by walking over to Baldwin, drawing a revolver and firing at his head. A bystander knocked the weapon aside in time to save Baldwin's life, and the only injury was a slight grazing of the scalp. The woman was removed to the city prison and it is believed her mind is unbalanced.

Cornell Wins the Race.

The intercollegiate four-mile boat race at Poughkeepsie, N. Y., Friday, was won by Cornell's crew, in 19 min., 29 sec.; Harvard second, 19 min., 32 sec.; Pennsylvania third, 20 min., 11 sec.; Columbia fourth, 21 min., 35 sec. The race was watched by 30,000 people.

Big Sensation at a Funeral.

G. Augustus Page, cashier of the Equitable Life Insurance Company, was arrested at Pittsburg on the charge of having brought about his wife's death. The funeral cortege was just about starting when the coroner took possession of the corpse.

HEAVY DAMAGES RECOVERED.

Manhattan Company Must Pay a Young Woman $15,000.

Miss Ann Eliza Thompson, of New York, recovered a verdict of $15,000 from the Manhattan Elevated Railway Company of New York in the Supreme Court. The case was on trial almost two days and attracted considerable interest on account of the novel defense that was set up by the railroad company. Miss Thompson was in one of the cars of the company on March 14, 1895, and the train smashed into the bumper. Her assertion was that her spine was injured so that it has assumed a permanent curvature, and that her left leg was made shorter than the other one. The assertion of the company was that she imagined injuries which did not exist. It was also asserted that she had been in a measure an invalid for some time previous to the accident, and that the smashing of the train into the bumper was not in any way responsible for her condition.

FARM PRICES RIDICULOUS.

Coarse Grain Crops Do Not Return to the Farmer the Cost of Production.

When prices in the Chicago market are called low, as they are at present, it is startling to consider what such prices in Chicago really mean for carlots of coarse grain on track at country points throughout Nebraska, Iowa, South Dakota, Minnesota and Illinois. It is not to be wondered at that those farmers who can are holding their grain in the hope that values cannot be any worse for them. Taking representative country points in the States named bids sent out to country shippers Friday night based on the market by various Chicago receiving and commission houses were practically below cost of production. The prices of No. 2 corn on track at Onawa, Iowa, based on Friday's prices at Chicago, was 15½c per bushel, and on No. 2 mixed oats 9½c, the railroad securing 20c per hundred as freight, and this included the local dealers' profit of about 1c per bushel.

SIX PEOPLE DROWN AT SHAWANO, WIS

Squall Capsizes a Yacht and All but Three of the Party Sink.

A party consisting of O. A. Risum and wife, Herman Drackery and wife, Louis Gokey, wife and child of Pulcifer, Miss Emma Garbrecht of Shawano, and Miss Margaret Crowe of St. Nazianz, Manitowoc County, Wis., started from Cecil at 5 o'clock Sunday in Risum's yacht, en route for a few days' outing on the north shore of the lake. When about three miles from shore the boat was capsized by a sudden squall, and the party precipitated into the water. Mr. Risum and Mr. Drackery clung to the capsized yacht for almost five hours, the latter holding the child in his arms, when they were rescued by parties from Cecil, who were attracted by their cries for help.

DIE WHILE SEEKING PLEASURE.

Four Children Killed and Many Injured at a Boston Picnic.

Four boys were drowned and thirteen persons were hurt Monday by the collapse of Sheldon's wharf at Castle Island landing, South Boston. The citizens were celebrating "Farragut day" and a large crowd was on the wharf, attracted by the offer of free passage to the island. The boat Ella was about to make fast at the wharf when the 100 or more on the small landing surged at the outer side. Immediately that side went down into eight feet of water and completely turned over, throwing seventy-five or eighty persons into the bay. Many of the crowd were women and children.

Thousands of Men Idle.

The annual depression in manufacturing circles has arrived. At McKeesport, Pa., with the exception of two mills in the butt-weld department, the entire plant of the National Tube Works Company, the National rolling mills and the W. Dewees wood, iron and steel mills are shut down, and 12,000 men are temporarily out of employment. The tube works will resume operations next week, but the rolling mills and the wood plants will be closed for six or seven weeks. The Braddock wireworks, the largest of the plants of the Consolidated Steel and Wire Company, followed the ruling of the wire nail trust and shut down. Both of the Braddock wire mills are now shut down, also the Beaver Falls mill. The suspension at these mills affects 800 men, who will be idle until August.

Compact Sealed at Canton.

Standing on the vine-shrouded porch of his home at Canton, O., William McKinley, at 12:10 Monday afternoon, listened to the formal notification of the fact that he had been nominated for the presidency by the Republican national convention of St. Louis. The actual ceremony consumed only about half an hour, and consisted in the speech of notification by Senator Thurston, chairman of the convention, and a response by Gov. McKinley. Then followed the presentation of the Abraham Lincoln gavel by Harry Smith, and following this a lunch served in a large tent behind the house.

Bicycle Firms Go Under.

The failures of two New York firms in the bicycle trade were announced Friday. A third is expected. The Munger Bicycle Company and the Plymouth Bicycle Company were the two that went under. This started anew and with increased vigor the reports of cutting in prices of from $10 to $40 on strictly high-grade wheels, really meant to sell for $100 each, if the buyer was persistent, and was willing to go at it in the proper way. But, most important of all, was the undenied statement that the high-grade wheels will come down next season.

Fatal Fight Between Farmers.

Charley and Richard Golden, sons of Harry Golden, a well-to-do farmer living near Kingston, Ky., while out plowing, engaged in a dispute over some domestic affairs, when Charley ran to the house and got his shotgun and, returning, emptied the contents into the breast of Richard, inflicting a fatal wound. Then, drawing his pocket knife, the frenzied man attempted to cut his own throat, almost severing his jugular vein. Both men will die.

Victim of Carelessness.

At Duncan, I. T., Robert Davis was accidentally shot and killed by Richard Cates while the two were out hunting. Davis was walking in advance and seeing a rattlesnake, called upon Cates, who carried a shotgun, to kill it. Cates stood looking at the bunch of grass where Davis saw the snake, and accidentally touching the trigger, emptied the contents of the gun into Davis' breast.

Bank Burglars in Limbo.

John McGinnes and John O'Brien, both men with many aliases and both notorious bank robbers, were captured in Vancouver and are now safely housed in jail. A man giving his name is Fred Martin, who was with the pair, was also arrested.

How a Railroad Was Fleeced.

Officials of the Chicago and Alton Railroad have just discovered that a gang of employes, among whom are passenger train conductors and station agents, working with Pullman car porters, have robbed the railway company of $15,000. The steal was accomplished through cooperation of a station agent with passenger conductors on railroad tickets from Springfield, Ill., to Chicago. On an average, so far as can be estimated by Auditor Kelsey's reports, $40 a day was stolen, and the larceny was in progress fully a year—probably a little longer. In a nutshell the scheme of robbery was for the conductor of the train which leaves Springfield for Chicago at noon to take up but not punch the tickets sold at the Springfield office on the noon train. The tickets would then be sent back that day to be sold over again.

POLICE CRACK THE HEADS OF RIOTERS

Two Thousand Strikers at Cleveland Are Charged and Completely Routed.

A pitched battle occurred Tuesday between eighty Cleveland, Ohio, policemen and a large force of strikers from the Brown Hoisting and Conveying Machine Company. The trouble started when the non-union employes of the company were dismissed for the day. The 171 new employes marched to the street cars within a hollow square of policemen. The strikers persuaded the street car employes not to stop for the new men, and a stone was thrown by some one in the crowd of 2,000 strikers, sympathizers and spectators. The police were ordered to charge. They made eight sallies on the crowd. One of the patrolmen named Kadel was struck on the head with a stone, and so badly disabled that he is now lying at a hospital. When the police saw that one of their number had been injured they started in to kill. As a result four of the strikers are in jail and 100 others are suffering with wounds inflicted by the clubs of the policemen.

GOES TO GRAY GABLES.

The President Will Transact Business at His Summer Home.

President Cleveland left Washington Tuesday morning at 7 o'clock over the Pennsylvania Railroad. A private car was attached to the regular train from New York leaving at that hour and placed at his disposal. The President was accompanied by Private Secretary Thurber, who will be with him during the summer. At Jersey City the President went aboard the private yacht Oneida, and sailed to Buzzard's Bay. All executive business will be transacted at Gray Gables during the summer, but official announcements, as heretofore, will be made from the executive mansion in Washington.

CANNOT BE RESCUED ALIVE.

Pittston Men Imprisoned Cannot Be Reached Inside of a Month.

The situation at the Pittston, Pa., shaft has undergone no change. The rescuers continue to work under great difficulties. The squeeze is now general, and at the foot of the shaft the loud rumbling noise of falling rock in different parts of the mine can be heard. There was another fall which drove the men back. Double timbering is now being resorted to. It is very slow and tedious work, and even under the most favorable conditions the workers could not hope to clear a gangway to where the entombed men are in less than a month.

TRAMPS SOAKED IN OIL.

Attempt to Remove a Coat of Tar and Feathers.

At Hutchinson, Minn., two tramps soaked themselves in oil in an effort to get rid of coats of tar and feathers administered by citizens. The tramps had attempted to make a farmer named Aus- tin Cook give them a meal, and one, who was drunk, hit Cook and was promptly knocked down. Because of the late murder of Sheriff Rogers by tramps the citizens decided to make an example of these two, one of whom committed no offense at all, and tarred them thoroughly.

Millions for Old Soldiers.

The Secretary of the Interior has issued his requisition for $13,325,000 to be used in the quarterly payment of pensions. Chicago gets $2,800,000; Des Moines, $2,100,000; Milwaukee, $1,950,000; Pittsburg, $1,750,000; Topeka, $200,000; San Francisco, $175,000; Louisville, $100,000; Knoxville, $200,000; Indianapolis, $100,000; Detroit, $150,000, and Columbus, O., $300,000.

End of Cook's Inlet Boom.

The schooner Norma, from Kodiakata, arrived at Port Townsend, Wash., with thirty-five stranded miners aboard, who pronounced the Cook's Inlet mining boom a fizzle. Over 3,500 miners are at the inlet unable to obtain employment and supplies are going rapidly.

Rain in Blinding Sheets.

A phenomenal storm of wind and rain, with some hail, passed over Cambridge Neb., and vicinity. The rain came up from all directions in blinding sheets and caused great damage. Three miles of Burlington tracks were badly washed away and bridge No. 202 is gone.

Poodle Dogs a Factor in Divorce.

Dr. David Jacobson, a well-known New York city physician, was divorced from Nora Jacobson at Perry, O. T. The complainant claimed, among other things, that his wife loved poodle dogs better than himself.

Town Raided by Indian Robbers.

Four Indians rode into Neol, a small town twenty-four miles south of Neosho, Mo., and robbed the town.

DEATH IN THE MINE.

ONE HUNDRED MEN ENTOMBED AT PITTSTON, PA.

Shaft's Mouth Surrounded by Frantic Men and Shrieking Women—Nearly Every Innocent Victim Leaves a Family to Struggle on Alone.

Coal Pit Their Tomb.

One hundred miners were caught under a fall of rock in the Twin Shaft mine at Pittston, Pa. It is believed that all perished instantly. If it prove that the men are dead sixty-three women will be left widows and 200 children be fatherless. This is the most terrible mine accident which has occurred in the anthracite region since the great disaster at Avondale, in 1869, in which 120 lives were lost.

The Twin Shaft operated by the Newton Coal Company, the principal stockholders of which live in Philadelphia, is an old mine, but the output has always been large. Some two weeks ago it was noticed that the mine was "squeezing"—that is to say, the surface was pressing hard on the props and pillars. Steps were at once taken to stop it. Heavy timbers were put in and every precaution was taken to prevent a cave-in. Friday it was thought that the "squeeze" had been arrested, but Saturday it began to "work" again. The principal trouble was in the red ash or lower vein of coal 1,500 feet from the foot of the shaft. There were two heavy falls on Saturday afternoon and it was thought dangerous to enter that part of the mine.

At 8 o'clock in the evening Inside Superintendent Langan concluded that something would have to be done and done quickly if it was hoped to save the inside workings from destruction. Accordingly he issued orders to get a party of the most expert miners together to make an effort to prevent further damage to the mine. Calls were sent out and at 9 o'clock that night about 100 men had gone down the mine. Nearly all of them knew the great risk they were running, but they argued thus: "The superintendent and foreman are with us; if they do not hesitate to go in, why should we?"

The men worked hard and faithfully until a little after 3 o'clock, when, probably without warning, the roof on the 1,000-foot slope where the men were at work fell in. The concussion was so great that it was felt for a distance of four miles. The foundations of nearly every house in Pittston were shaken, and the citizens first thought a violent earthquake had taken place.

Immediately after the accident occurred there was a call for volunteers. Two hundred men responded at once, and, despite the great dangers sure to be encountered, entered upon the work of rescue. The men were divided into relief gangs of forty each, for the work is very tedious, as the roof has to be propped as fast as the men work their way through the debris.

The greatest excitement prevailed about the mouth of the shaft all day. The relatives of the imprisoned men gathered in large numbers and their grief was pitiable. "Oh, my dear husband," "Oh, my poor papa," were the cries of anguish heard. Many of the women swooned and had to be carried away. Some knelt on the wet ground and prayed that their loved ones might be brought out alive. At last the excitement became so great that a special police force was sworn in to keep the crowd back. People from all over the valley went to Pittston by train, trolley cars, carriages and bicycles.

WASHINGTON'S HEADQUARTERS

Historic Spot Near White Plains Offered to Whoever Will Buy.

The Miller house on the road to Unionville, about a mile and a half north of White Plains, N. Y., once occupied by Washington as his headquarters, lies in a valley, bounded on the east by a range of steep hills, while to the west there is a rolling country through which run the sluggish waters of the Bronx. At the present time the Harlem Railroad passes in plain view of the old structure, from which the tracks are distant but a stone's throw. From official papers it appears that the house was occupied from Oct. 21 to Nov. 10, 1776. Within this period the battle of White Plains had been fought and lost, and after his retreat to North Castle the American army underwent such privations from lack of food and other necessaries that the steep hill that rises to the east of the headquarters is known as "Mount Misery," in memory of the sufferings endured by the patriots within the breastworks that crowned the eminence. Remains of these earthworks, overgrown by tall trees, are still to be seen.

At the present time the house is unoccupied, and a sign upon the premises announces it to be for sale, together with ninety acres of land.

SPAIN WEAKENS.

According to a Correspondent Who Writes from Cuba.

According to a correspondent who writes from Cuba there are many reasons to suspect that the Government is losing confidence in its ability to suppress the Cuban insurgents. Several Spanish generals have congregated in Havana; the Government is actively pressing volunteers into service as pickets at points about the city and suburbs; and there has even been a proposition to build a barbed wire fence, a 15-foot trench and an 8-foot stone wall about the city. Certainly the Spanish officials must be beginning to see the seriousness of the situation. There is much grumbling among the Spanish soldiers, for they have been paid nothing since early in March. Open mutiny would hardly surprise anyone cognizant of the facts.

The Havana civil governor recently ordered that public readers in the factories be suppressed, and as a result many of the cigarmakers are quietly slipping out of the city and joining the revolutionists. Anarchy, too, threatens in other towns, where starving men, women and children fill the streets. Everywhere the people are discontented and grumbling and the Government is losing ground, for it wouldn't take much to cause them to stampede to the ranks of the Cuban patriots.

Sparks from the Wires.

The Prince of Wales dined with William Waldorf Astor at Cliveden, Eng.

Henry Mitchell Smith, colored, was hanged at Lexington, Ky., for assaulting a white woman.

Rev. Dr. William Adams, pastor of the West Green Street Presbyterian Church, Philadelphia, is dead at his home in that city. He was formerly pastor of a large congregation in Louisville.

INDIANA INCIDENTS.

RECORD OF EVENTS OF THE PAST WEEK.

Slayer of Jennie Walters Takes a Change of Venue—Mary Wallace Gets in Trouble—Sad Fate of Geo. Lucas—Victim of Jokers.

Murderer Ends His Life.

Milton B. Wells, the murderer of Jennie Walters, committed suicide at Goshen by hanging, using a rope made out of his bedclothes. He left an ante-mortem statement denying that he had any part in the murder, intimating that he was drunk at the time and spilled the kerosene, which caught fire and burned Miss Walters. He claims that he does not know who fired the shots which struck her. Miss Walters, just before her death, said that Wells was enraged because she had agreed to marry another man; that the evening of the murder he enticed her over to his house while no one else was there, told her the story of his wrongs and then shot her three times. None of the shots resulting fatally, he dashed a can of kerosene over her and set fire to it. The neighbors, attracted by the fire, rescued her from the building, but she expired a few hours afterward, regaining consciousness just long enough to make the above statement. There was no doubt in the mind of anyone as to Wells' guilt.

She Kidnaped Three Children.

Several months ago three children appeared in Indianapolis from Danville, Ill., and performed numerous tricks upon the street. The attention of the manager of the Nickelodeon theater was attracted to them. The children said their name was Wilson, and that they sent their money home to their parents, one of whom was sick and in destitute circumstances. Mary Wallace, who was playing at the theater under the name of Mamie Quintette, disappeared with the children, and friends whom they had made caused a warrant to be issued for her arrest, on a charge of kidnaping. The woman and the children were overtaken at Danville, to which point she had traveled on trustees' passes, representing herself as the mother of the children and trying to reach her home in the South. She was tried before Judge McCray, fined $100 and sent to the female reformatory for a term of two years.

Killed by Remorse and Fear.

George Lucas, of Walton, near Kokomo, is dead of remorse and fear. His life has been a sad one and death was no doubt welcomed as a relief. In 1864 Mr. Lucas, who was an ardent and uncompromising unionist, killed two soldier boys that were home on a furlough, they being Byron and George Knight, sons of a near neighbor. Some one as a joke told Lucas that the Knight boys had deserted and were plotting against the Government. Lucas tried to compel the Knights to return to the service, and in the fight that followed he shot both of them fatally. When matters were explained Lucas went raving mad, and from that hour was a mental wreck, and for thirty years has been a great care to his family. To the hour of his death he was tortured by fear that the dead men's friends were seeking his life.

All Over the State.

Atlo Butt, 86 years old, near Hartford City, was kicked to death by a horse.

Fifty glass workers at Hartford City have started for Belgium, to spend the summer vacation.

Erickson Kilgore, near Windfall, was kicked by a horse, the hoof striking his skull. His death occurred Monday.

Unknown persons stoned the residence of Lee Watson, at Underwood, and Watson fired into the crowd, the shots being returned. No one was injured.

Attorney Daisy Dean, of Anderson, was taken to the prison north Friday, under sentence for three years for irregularities in practice. He is quite well known throughout eastern Indiana and also in the West.

At Shelbyville, Louis Richardson, aged 18, was arrested, charged with attempt to murder. His uncle, Jefferson Richardson, had reprimanded him for idleness, and for so doing was struck on the head with a brick. He will die.

Whit Star proved that the Marion County jail, erected two years ago at a cost of $200,000, is not proof against the arts of the burglar. He sawed his way to liberty, and the jail attaches have no idea as to the time he left or the direction in which he has gone. Star was under indictment and sentenced for burglary, and would have been removed to the northern prison Friday. His sister paid him a visit the previous morning, and it is believed she gave him the saws with which he separated the iron bars in the grating and secured his liberty.

Rev. Andrew Perry, of Hoopestown, Ill., believes there is much need of saving grace in this State. Wednesday evening he went to labor with the unregenerate and bring tidings of great joy to the denizens of Staunton. He stopped with a prominent member of the congregation, and while he slept some one filched his trousers from the room and departed with his money, watch and valuable papers. Not long ago a minister in that vicinity left his best clothes on a fence while he baptized a number of converts, and during his absence the clothes were stolen.

Sunday night both the Presbyterian and Methodist churches at Rising Sun were struck by lightning while services were being held there. The spire and front of the Presbyterian Church were wrecked by the bolt, which then passed through the church, prostrating the minister who was officiating. The lights were all extinguished, causing a panic, which was allayed, however, before any serious casualty occurred. At the Methodist Church Children's Day was being celebrated, and a little girl, who was reciting, was prostrated and rendered unconscious by the electric current. Much excitement resulted.

Charles J. Pochman, of Hammond, has dismissed the $10,000 suit against Dr. J. C. Pannenborg, wherein he claimed damages for the alleged alienation of his wife's affections. Mrs. Pochman was an invalid, her death occurring last week.

Laporte claims the youngest horse thief on record in Benjamin Harrison Thompson, aged 8. Last week he was captured at Kingsbury with the horse and carriage of ex-Senator Weir, and Tuesday the little fellow stole the horse and buggy of Hart L. Weaver, a prominent banker. The youth will be sent to the reform school.

At Crawfordsville, Philip Hauk was given a sentence of five years in the penitentiary and a fine of $50. He was charged with being an accessory to the death of Grace McClamrock. Dr. Stout, of Covington, is also indicted.

David Peters, one of the oldest citizens of the county, living near Helmer, committed suicide by shooting himself. No cause is given. Albert Trexell, living near Helmer, was held up by highwaymen while returning home and fatally beaten. The robbers obtained considerable money from their victim. No clew has been obtained by the authorities, but the existence of an organized gang in the neighborhood is suspected.

STEEL PENS.

More Metal Used in Them than in Making Guns.

"Do you know anything about pens?" asked a Nassau street stationer of a Mail and Express reporter. "I thought you didn't. Now, let me tell you something about the metallic pen that you never dreamed of. It requires the finest kind of steel to make a first-class pen. I have been overhauling records and I find that a greater quantity of steel is used annually in the pen-making business than in all the gun, sword and needle factories in the world. The recent popularity of the typewriter has of course diminished the use of pens, but the output is enormous nevertheless.

"In Birmingham, England, there are a number of pen manufactories that turn out a total of 150,000 pens every working week. The majority of the workers are women, and the wages, while low, help to make Birmingham a notable seat of industry. To make 1,000,000 pens a full ton of steel is required. There is really so much work about the manufacture of a pen that it is surprising they sell as cheaply as they do, but as I have said, the production is so great it is a profitable business. Pens have been in use a whole century now, but forty years ago, when they took the place of quills as the popular ink spreader, it was one of the secrets of the age how that slit was made in the pen. Those employed in that particular branch of the work were obliged to record an oath that they would not reveal the secret of that slit-cutting process.

"The secret became an open one, though, in the natural course of events, and soon almost every interested person knew that the slit was made with a pair of scissors fixed in a press. Men perform the initial work. That is to say, the roll out the steel to the proper thickness. The women then take hold, cutting the steel into strips as wide as two pens long. Presses do the cutting for the women. The steel when it leaves the presses is shaped like a pen, but it flat. The forms made by these presses are then put into a red hot furnace and when thoroughly heated are taken out and permitted to cool slowly. This process makes them soft. Then the women use fast presses that hammer the points as well as stamp the name of the manufacturer.

"This done, the pens are heated again and while still hot are cast into oil. They are much harder, but dirty and greasy when taken out. To clean and whiten them they are boiled in water to which soda has been added. The next step is to place them in a cylinder which revolves over gas jets. This turns them blue. A number of other minor details and the pen is packed and ready for the market. Whether it be the rich or the poor man's pen the mode of manufacture is alike."

Homage Paid to "Sky Stones."

Because they come from meteors, bodies that fall in this way are called meteorites and for very many years past all the meteorites which have been seen to fall, or could be found, have been carefully kept, so that they may be studied. We know, too, that they have fallen in earlier times as well, because the histories of nearly all ancient peoples contain accounts of such occurrences, and of the homage paid to the "sky stones" by those who thought them gifts from the gods, or miraculous objects. It is possible that the so-called goddess Diana who was worshipped by the people Ephesus was a meteoric stone.

A mass of iron which proved to be a meteorite was found in Texas a few years ago, at the crossing of a number of trails leading in different directions. It was learned that it had been set up by the Indians as a fetish, or object of worship; and whoever passed by was expected to leave upon it beads, arrowheads, tobacco, or other articles as offerings, since it was regarded as having come from the Great Spirit. Another, which fell in India some years ago, was kept decked with flowers, was daily anointed, and frequently worshiped with great ceremony. There is preserved to this day in the parish church of Ensisheim, Alsace, Germany, a stone weighing over two hundred pounds, which fell in the town Nov. 16, 1492. The king, being near at the time, had the stone carried to the castle, and after breaking off two pieces, one for himself and the other for the Duke Sigismund, ordered the remainder to be kept in the church as a miraculous object; and it still hangs there, suspended by a chain from the vault of the choir.—St. Nicholas.

Folly of Forest Destruction.

The devastation of forests still goes on in various parts of the country, which, unlike New York, and a few of the Eastern and Middle States, do not appreciate the value of trees. Unfortunately, this appreciation, even in the East, has come too late. It is proudly announced in a Western paper that a large syndicate has acquired possession of 40,000 acres of timber land in Northern Idaho. It is estimated that this area will yield more than 40,000,000 feet of white and yellow pine, red and white fir, cedar and tamarack. The arid waste which it will also yield is not taken into consideration in this estimate. Americans have too long looked upon trees as in their way unless they could be used to build fires or for commercial purposes. This was true a hundred years ago in Germany, but now a man who cuts down a tree must plant one to take its place, or suffer a penalty.

A Pause in Battle.

When the English, under the Duke of Wellington, were fighting with the French, commanded by some of Napoleon's famous marshals, in the Spanish peninsula, an interesting episode occurred during the battle of Talavera, fought on a hot day in July, 1809. The soldiers at a critical moment in the engagement ceased their firing, and with one accord met at a stream midway between the lines of battle, where they quenched their thirst, and filled their canteens before resuming the conflict. The day was so hot that human nature proved stronger than discipline or the authority of their commanding officers.—St. Nicholas.

THE SILENT SHORE.

By John Blundell Burton

CHAPTER VII.—(Continued.)

Two or three members said they had spoken to Cundall, and one that he had told him he did not seem very gay, but that he had replied in his usual pleasant manner, that he was very well, but had a good deal to occupy his mind.

It was some time past two o'clock (the club having a large number of members of Parliament on its roll, was a late one) before the storm was over, and he rose to go.

The hall porter was apparently the last person who spoke to him alive, asking him if he should call a cab, but receiving for answer that, as the air was now so cool and fresh, he would walk home through the park, it being so near to Grosvenor place.

The sentries who had been on duty at and around St. James' Palace were interrogated, and the one who had been outside Clarence House stated that he distinctly remembered a gentleman answering Mr. Cundall's description passing by him into the park at about a quarter to three.

It was raining slightly, and he had his umbrella up. He saw a laborer, or mechanic, walking some fifteen yards behind him, and supposed he was going to his early work.

From the time Mr. Cundall passed this man until the policeman found him dead, no one seemed to have seen him.

With the exception of the medical evidence, which stated that he had been stabbed to, and through, the heart by one swift, powerful blow, that must have caused instantaneous death, there was little more to be told.

Judging from the state of the ground, there had been no struggle, a fact which would justify the idea that the murder had been planned and premeditated.

The workman might have easily planned it himself in the time he followed him from outside his club to the time they were in the park together, but he would have had to be provided with an extraordinarily long knife, such as workmen rarely carry.

Lord Penlyn sat listening to the different opinions of men who had known Cundall.

Amongst others, he noticed one young man who was particularly grief-stricken, and who was constantly appealed to by those who surrounded him; and, on asking a fellow member who he was, he learnt that he was a Mr. Stuart, the secretary of his dead brother.

"To-morrow," Penlyn heard him say, and he started as he heard it, "I am going to make a thorough investigation of all his papers. As far as I or his city agents know, he hadn't a relation in the world; but surely his correspondence must give us some idea of whom to communicate with. And, until this morning, I should have said he had not got an enemy in the world, either."

"You think, then, that this dastardly murder is the work of an enemy, and not for mere robbery?" the gentleman asked who had brought him into the club.

"I am sure of it! As to the workman who is supposed to have done it—well, if he did do it, he was only a workman in disguise. No! he had some enemy, perhaps some one who owed him money, or whose path he had been enabled by his wealth to cross, and that is the man who killed him. And I am going to find that man out."

Penlyn sat there, and as he heard Stuart utter these words he felt upon what a precipice he stood.

Suppose that, in the papers which were about to be ransacked, there should be any that proved that Walter Cundall was his eldest brother, and that he, Penlyn, had only learned it two days before he was murdered.

Would not everything point to him as the Cain who had slain his brother, and was he not making appearanes worse against him by keeping silence?

He must tell some one; he could keep the horrible secret no longer. And he must have the sympathy of some one dear to him; he would confide in Ida!

Surely, she would not believe him to be the murderer of his own brother! Yes, he would go down to Belmont and tell her all. Better it should come from him than that Stuart should discover it, and publish it to the world.

"I hope you may find him out," several men said in answer to Stuart's exclamation. "Is there any clew likely to be got at through the wound?"

"No," Stuart answered, "I think not. Though the surgeon who has examined it says that it was made by no ordinary knife. The dagger, he thinks, must have been semi-circular, and of a kind the Arabs often use, especially the Algerian Arabs."

"I never knew that!" said one; "but then I have never been to Algiers. Who has? Here, Penlyn, you were there once, weren't you?"

"Yes," Penlyn said, and his tongue seemed to cleave to the roof of his mouth as he uttered the words; "but I never saw or heard of a knife or dagger of that description."

Stuart looked at Lord Penlyn as he spoke, and noticed the faltering way in which he did so.

Then, in a moment, the thought flashed into his mind that this was the man who had won the woman whom his generous friend and patron had loved.

Could he—but no, the idea was ridiculous! He was the winner, Cundall the loser. Successful men had no reason to kill their unsuccessful rivals!

CHAPTER VIII.

After a wretched night spent in tossing about his bed, in dreaming of the murdered man and in lying awake wondering how he could break the news to Ida, Lord Penlyn rose with the determination of going down to Belmont.

"How ill you look!" Smerdon said, when he saw him. "What is the matter?"

"Matter?" the other answered. "Is there not matter enough to make me look ill? I have told you that Cundall is dead, and you know how he died."

"Is there any trace of the murderer?"

"None whatever, up to last night. Meanwhile, his friend and secretary, Mr. Stuart, says that he is confident that the murder was committed by some one who had reason to wish him out of the way, and he is going through his papers to-day to see if any of them can throw any light on such an enemy."

"He cannot, I suppose, find anything that can do you any harm?"

"Supposing he finds those certificates he showed us?"

"Supposing he does! You are Lord Penlyn now, at any rate. And it would give you an opportunity of putting in a claim to his property. You are his heir, if he has left no will."

"His heir! To all his immense wealth?"

"Certainly."

"I shall never claim it, and I hope he has destroyed every proof of our relationship."

"Why?"

"Why! Because will not the fact that I held a position which belonged to him, and was the heir to all his money—of which I never thought till this moment—give the world cause for suspecting——"

"What?"

"That I am his murderer."

"Nonsense! I suppose you could prove where you were at the time of his death?"

"No, I could not. I entered the hotel at two, but there was not a creature in the house awake. I could hear the porter's snores on the floor above, and there is not a living soul to prove whether I was in at three or not. But this secret must be told by me, and I am going to Belmont to-day to tell it to Ida."

"You must be mad, I think!" Smerdon said, speaking almost angrily to him. "This secret, which only came to light a week ago, is now buried forever, and, since he is dead, can never be brought up again. For what earthly reason should you tell Miss Raughton anything about it?"

"Because she ought to know," the other answered weakly. "It is only right that she should know."

"That you were not Lord Penlyn when you became engaged to her, but that you are now. And that Cundall being your brother, you must mourn him as a brother, and consequently your marriage must be postponed for at least a year. Is that what you mean?"

Lord Penlyn started.

This had never entered into his head, and was certainly not what he would have meant or desired. Postponed for a year! when he was dying to make her his wife, when the very thought that his brother might step in and interrupt his marriage had been the cause of his brutality of speech to him.

Smerdon was right, his quick mind had grasped what he would never have thought of—quite right! he would do well to say nothing about his relationship to the dead man.

It is remarkable how easily we agree with those who show us the way to further our own ends!

"I never thought of that," he said, "and I could not bear it. After all," he went on weakly, "you are right! I do not see any necessity to say anything about it, and he himself forbade me to do so."

"And for Ida's sake you will not do so?"

"For Ida's sake, and for the reason that I do not wish his money, I shall not; and more especially for the reason that you have shown me our marriage would be postponed if I did so."

"Then when you go to Belmont, be careful to hold your tongue."

Lord Penlyn did go to Belmont, having previously sent a telegram saying he was coming, and he traveled down in one of the special trains that was conveying a contingent of fashionable racing people to the second day at Ascot.

But their joyousness, and the interest that they all took in the one absorbing subject, "What would win the Cup?" only made him feel doubly miserable.

And then, when they were tired of discussing the racing, they turned to the other great subject that was now agitating people's minds, the murder in St. James' Park.

"He stood in some one's light," one gentleman said, whom, from his appearance, Lord Penlyn took to be a barrister, "and that person has either removed him from this earth, or caused him to be removed. I should not like to be his heir, for on that man suspicion will undoubtedly fall, unless he can prove very clearly that he was miles away from London on Monday night."

Penlyn started as he heard these words. His heir!

Then it would be on him that suspicion would fall if it was ever known that he was the heir; and, as he thought that, among his brother's papers, there might be something to prove that he was in such a position, a cold sweat broke out upon his forehead.

When he saw the girl he loved so much rise wan and pale from the couch on which she had been seated, waiting for his coming, his heart sank within him.

How she must have suffered! he thought. What an awful blow Cundall's death must have been to her to make her look as she looked now, as she rose and stood before him!

"My darling Ida!" he said, as he went toward her and took her in his arms and kissed her, "how ill and sad you look!"

She yielded to his embrace and returned his kiss, but it seemed to him as if her lips were cold and lifeless.

"Oh, Gervase!" she said, as she sank back to the couch wearily, "oh, Gervase! you do not know the horror that is upon me. And it is a double horror, because at the time of his death I knew of it!"

"What!" he said, springing to his feet from the chair he had taken beside her. "What!"

"I saw it all," she said, looking at him with large, distended eyes, eyes made doubly large by the hollows round them. "I saw it all, only——"

"Only what, Ida?"

"Only it was in a dream! O dream that I had, almost at the very hour he was treacherously stabbed to death."

As she spoke she leant forward a little toward him, with her eyes still distended; leant forward, gazing into his face; and as she did so he felt the blood curdling in his veins!

"This," he said, trying to speak calmly, "is madness, a frenzy begotten of your state of mind at hearing——"

"It is no frenzy, no madness," she said, speaking in a strange, monotonous tone, and still with the intent gaze in her hazel eyes. "No, it is the fact. On that night—that night of death—he stood before me once again and bade me farewell forever in this world, and then I saw his murderer spring upon him, and——"

"And that murderer was?" her lover interrupted, quivering with excitement.

"Unhappily, I do not know—not yet, at least, but I shall do so some day." She had risen now, and was standing before him pale and erect. The long white peignoir that she wore clung to her delicate supple figure, making her look unusually tall; and she appeared to her lover like some ancient classic figure vowing vengeance on the guilty. As she stood thus, with a fixed look of certainty on her face, and prophesied that some day she should know the man who had done this deed, she might have been Cassandra come back to the world again.

"His face was shrouded," she went on, "as all murderers shroud their faces, I think; but his form I knew. I am thinking—I have thought and thought for hours by day and night—where I have seen that form before. And in some unexpected moment remembrance will come to me."

"And then?" Penlyn interrupted.

"And then, if I compass it, his life shall be subjected to such inspection, his every action of the past examined, every action of the present watched, that at last he shall stand discovered before the world!" She paused a moment, and again she looked fixedly at him, and then she said: "You are my future husband; do you know what I require of you before I become your wife?"

"Love and fidelity, Ida, is it not? And have you not that?"

"Yes," she answered, "but that fidelity must be tried by a strong test. You must go hand in hand with me in my search for his murderer, you must never falter in your determination to find him. Will you do this out of your love for me?"

"I will do it," Penlyn answered, "out of my love for you."

She held out her hand—cold as marble—to him, and he took it and kissed it. But as he did so, he muttered to himself: "If she could only know; if she could only know."

Again the impulse was on his lips to tell her of the strange relationship there was between him and the dead man, and again he let the impulse go.

In the excitement of her mind would she not instantly conclude that he was the slayer of his dead brother, of the man who had suddenly come between him and everything he prized in the world? And, to support him in his weakness, was there not the letter of that dead brother enjoining secrecy? So he held his peace!

"I will do it," he said, "out of my love for you; but, forgive me, are you not taking an unusual interest in him, sad as his death was?"

"No," she answered. "No. He loved me; I was the only woman in the world he loved—he told me so on the first night he returned to England. Only I had no love to give him in return; it was given to you. But I liked and respected him and, since he came to me in my dream on that night of his death, it seems that on me should fall the task of finding the man who killed him."

She had bidden him do the very thing of all others that he would least wish done, bidden him throw a light upon the past of the dead man, and find out all his enemies and friends.

She had told him to do this, while there, in his own heart, was the knowledge of the long-kept secret that the dead man was his brother—the secret that the dead man had enjoined on him never to divulge.

What was he to do? he asked himself.

Which should he obey, the orders of his murdered brother, or the orders of his future wife?

He rose after these reflections and told her that he was going back to London. And she also rose, and said:

"Yes, yes; go back at once! Lose no time, not a moment. Remember, you have promised. You will keep your promise, I know."

He kissed her, and muttered something that she took for words of assent, and prepared to leave her.

He reached his house early in the evening, and the footman handed him a letter that had been left by a messenger but a short time before. It ran as follows:

"Grosvenor Place, June 12, 188—.

"My Lord—In searching through the papers of my late employer, Mr. Walter Cundall, I have come across a will made by him three years ago. By it, the whole of his fortune and estates are left to you, your name and the title being carefully described. I have placed the will in the hands of Mr. Fordyce, Mr. Cundall's solicitor, from whom you will doubtless hear shortly.

"Your obedient servant,

"A. STUART.

"The Rt. Hon. Viscount Penlyn."

That was all; without one word of explanation or of surprise at the manner in which Walter Cundall's vast wealth had been bequeathed.

Lord Penlyn crushed the letter in his hand when he read it, and, as he threw himself into a chair, he moaned:

"Everything must be known, everything discovered; there is no help for it! What will Ida think of me now? Why did I not tell her to-day? Why did I not tell her?"

TREED BY A MOOSE.

A Prospector's Narrow Escape in the North of Minnesota.

Two pine land prospectors, Ben Jackson and Gustave Herman, have just returned to Tower, Minn., from a trip into the northern part of that State, and among other things they tell of a hair breadth escape which Jackson had away up near the Rainy River. Coming to an excellent tract of pine land, the two men entered from opposite sides to thoroughly investigate it. Herman had not gone far before he came upon the feeding and breeding grounds of a herd of at least 500 moose. His approach stampeded them and they all went off in the opposite direction.

"After having examined the breeding grounds for some time and hearing nothing from Jackson," says Herman, "I started off on the trail left by the moose, which was not a difficult thing to do, as the animals had made a good road through the snow, over which an army could have marched. Small trees were broken and old stumps overturned by the moose in their mad flight, and about a mile from the yard I came upon the mangled remains of a small cow moose. She had, no doubt, fallen as she ran, and had been trampled to death by her companions.

"Just at dusk I found Jackson. He was up a pine tree, at the foot of which, pawing, stamping and snorting in anger, was a gigantic bull moose. The animal had been tearing at the tree with his antlers until most off the bark was torn off, and the blows he inflicted upon the tall pine made the woods ring. I fired one shot at the animal, and he made off, as I had intentionally missed him when I fired. At the foot of the tree lay what was left of Jackson's rifle. The stock was broken off and trampled into little bits, while the heavy barrel was bent and twisted in a dozen different ways, and showed plainly the marks of hoofs."

"I was making my way through the woods," says Jackson, "when suddenly a noise like a hurricane coming fell upon my ear. There was no wind stirring, and therefore I was at a loss to acount for the sound. Just then the herd of moose, many hundred strong, came into sight, and for a minute I felt sick, for I did not think there was any escape for me, and, knowing that a bullet or two would not change them from their course, I dropped my rifle and went up a tree like a squirrel.

"The animals paid no attention to me for a time, and as they dashed along under me the very ground trembled, and the tree in which I was shook as though it were a sapling. When the herd had got pretty well past an old bull, who seemed to be bigger than all out-doors took his stand directly under the tree and until Herman came along kept trying to knock down my refuge."

FISHING SEASON OPENS

WHERE THE BLACK BASS ARE BITING

THE fishing season, which has just legally commenced, promises, according to old experts, to be one where general observance of the game laws has led to a marked improvement in the quality of the sport. There is today more and better fishing in Michigan, Illinois, Wisconsin, Minnesota and other Western States than there was twenty years ago, and piscatorial enthusiasts about this time form many plans for a jaunt in pursuit of the gamy bass, the elusive pickerel and the ferocious muskellunge. Those who are simply home anglers, cannot complain, either, for 1896 is turning out "a great year for fish"—perch, trout, suckers, redhorse, and even the dogfish being in large evidence in lake, brook and country stream.

A FISHING PARTY.

The black bass, however, are the lure that sportsmen have to follow, and the black bass are biting now. In a thousand lakes reached by railroads diverging from Chicago, Indianapolis, St. Louis and Minneapolis, the whirr of the reel is heard, while along streams like the Fox River, which flows on its way in a straight north and south line to the Illinois and the Mississippi, there is fishing that would delight the heart of an Izaak Walton. Loosely drawn fish laws almost ruined these streams. Fifteen years ago many of them were completely fished out. In the early spring thousands of fishermen would invade the spawning beds, and the seine drew tons of fish from the clear waters. Then the government took a hand in the matter. Rigid laws were passed, and game wardens were paid to enforce them. The fishery commission brought millions of fish from government hatcheries and dumped them into the Fox and other rivers, and as a result such waters now teem with bass, pickerel, pike, perch and other fish.

A GOOD CATCH.

Up in Wisconsin and wherever what are known as "grass lakes" exist, the fisherman is early at his post this year. Such grounds are favorable for the man who knows how to cast a bait so he will just miss a lily pad. A typical lake of this class will usually be found to have a bank of weeds at one shore, terminating in deep water, with a gravel and rock bottom. Pickerel and bass live in these weeds and many a good catch can be made by the fisherman who will skirt the bank with a spoon hook. The lake is alive with large perch and you can catch silver bass, rock bass, red eyes, cropplies and catfish until you become tired of the sport. There is another fish in the lake and you need not mistake him when the line runs out with a vicious jerk. This is the dogfish. The dogfish is not counted good eating, but he certainly is game. Unlike the trout or bass he never breaks water, but goes straight to the bottom and fights and pulls. A ten-pound dogfish will put up a fight that will make your blood tingle, and the fight is not over even when he is hauled into the boat. The dogfish is a terror to light tackle and no mercy is shown him by the various fishing clubs, many of whom pay a small bounty for the heads of these fresh water sharks.

Rivers that empty into the great lakes, especially in Michigan, are popular breeding spots for the black bass. White bass, too, run in schools there. This fish begins such movements at 5 in the morning and evening. They weigh from one to three pounds, and put up quite a fight, are a beautiful silver-colored fish, and esteemed as a table delicacy. The silver catfish is a like prize found in Eastern Michigan streams. Farther west, the Mississippi River, from La Crosse to Lake Pepin, is one of the best fishing spots in the country. Here thrive the black bass, pike and pickerel. It is generally assumed that the only fish in the Mississippi of any consequence is the catfish, but this is not true of the upper Mississippi. The water is as clear as crystal, and numerous brooks teeming with trout empty from the Wisconsin and Minnesota sides. Black bass and pike fishing in the Mississippi is especially good in the vicinity of Beef Slough and the mouth of the Chippewa River. The banks of Lake Pepin are lined with the huts of professional fishermen, who seine the lake for bass and other game fish. The bass are of the small mouth variety and are noted for their gamey fighting qualities.

Perhaps 10,000 ardent anglers yearly haunt the great network of lakes crossing Northern Illinois and Wisconsin. Here is truly the sportsman's paradise, and every boy who has caught a sucker or a bass in the village pond or river, looks forward to the day when he shall land a giant muskellunge; you cannot miss good fishing in this district anywhere south of Lake Superior. If you do not like the lake you are in, go a mile or two in any direction, and you find another. As will be seen by the map, the territory is a labyrinth of waterways. No man living knows how many lakes there are in Wisconsin. Every one of them is full of fish, and the man who skims Okauchee Lake one week, and Eagle Lake the next, sings constant praises of bass and muskellunge, and rod and reel.

LAKES OF NORTHERN WISCONSIN, THE FISHERMAN'S PARADISE.

An old fisherman says that if a beginner wants to become a good bass angler he must observe and imitate the tactics of some old expert who knows every letter of the black bass alphabet. A shelving sand shore with reeds is the favorite ground for this fish, but several articles of bait are necessary. Spoons, spinners and phantoms should be supplemented by such natural bait as the natural angler uses. In some waters firelight has an irresistible charm for these fish. In one lake one season there were no bass caught, though the fishermen knew there was an abundance of fish. One night a party of campers fishing for bullheads from a flat rock less than a rod from their big blazing fire began to land bass. In an hour or so they had taken forty good ones. Everybody took to fire fishing at night, and with unfailing success. In fact, without the fire at all, on a clear night, one can land some slapping big bass if he will row along the shore, keeping well within the shadow line and casting out into the light space. The color of flies or bait seems to make no difference with the biting. In old times it was believed the light flies were alone effective, but big catches with dark flies have long ago exploded that notion. It is the commotion, the stir upon the calm surface, which attracts the bass. An unmoving bait, be it ever so light, would prove a vain one.

IN CAMP.

NONE COULD GET AWAY.

A Decoy Goat.

A goat saves the firm of Swift & Co. of Kansas City the salaries of several men at the stock yards. He is the lure used to persuade sheep to leave the pens and go to the packing-house—a regular stock yards siren. He is not a pretty animal, and his name is "Willy," but he is a valuable assistant, and is treated with consideration, although he cost less than $2.

Swift & Co. by a great many sheep, and until they employed "Willy" had considerable trouble in driving the sheep across the bridge to their plant. Sheep are the most foolish animals on four feet. They have no sense to speak of, and when one, with even less sense than his fellows, goes through a hole in a fence or over a bridge, all the others are bound to follow, no matter the expense.

Since "Willy" has been in the company's service, however, the sheep have a leader they follow implicitly. A boy goes ahead of the goat and the sheep trail out behind. "Willy" is as dignified as a Congressman, with his beard floating in the wind and a bell jangling at his neck. He climbs up and down the steps leading to the walks along the fence tops. When his master takes a walk about the yards on the tops of the fences "Willy" goes along.

Occasionally "Willy" gets tired of being good, and, like the "little girl who had a little curl," he can be horrid when he's naughty. When "Willy" is naughty he is not coaxed; his master takes a hickory club and maltreats him, and thereafter one would think "Willy" had the disposition of an angel.

English as She Is Writ.

A prominent Detroit firm having a millinery department in their store received the following mail order for a bonnet from a patron who wrote that she lived "where millinery is not of a high order." She therefore sent the following:

"Direcktion for bonnet—Mazure of head from ear to ear over top of head 12 inches, from ear to ear under my chin 9½ inches; from forehead to back hare 7 inches. I want a black bonnet with streamers and rozetts of red or yallow satting ribbon an would like a bunch of pink Rozes or a blue ploom behind, with a black jett buckel. If artifishels is still all the go I want a bunch of grapes or a bird's tale somewhares. I do not dezire anything too fansy, but if you think a reath of pansies would look good you may put one on. I have some good pink ribbon here at home so you need not put on strings."—Detroit Free Press.

Why Some Animals Lap.

The reason that certain animals lap instead of drink seems to be an arrangement of nature to prevent carnivorous animals, whose stomachs are comparatively small, from over-distending themselves with water. Most of the animals that suck when drinking are herbivorous and have large stomachs, or more than one, with a paunch or receptacle for unchewed food, and with them digestion is a slow process and there is little, if any, danger of over-distension, although such a thing is not unknown with some domestic herbivorous animals. Digestion is a much more rapid process with the carnivora, and it is important that it should not be delayed by the ingestion of large quantities of cold water. By lapping the mouth and throat are thoroughly moistened, while the water is supplied to the stomach in small quantities, properly warmed and mixed with saliva. It may be fairly assumed that the carnivora are of more recent creation, for the herbivorous animals are their food, and that therefore lapping may be considered a more highly developed way of drinking than sucking.

Instrumental Bird Music.

There are several birds which produce what may be called "instrumental music." The male hoopoe is an example. This bird combines vocal and instrumental music in a most charming manner. An accomplished lady-killer is this gay hoopoe, and during the courting season it first draws a long breath and then taps the end of its beak against a stone or the trunk of a tree.

Whoever you marry, you will think you might have done better.

EMILE ZOLA.

Eminent Literary Man Who Is Charged with Plagiarism.

Emile Zola, the literary man latest charged with plagiarism, is said, by those who have read him, to be a realist of the realists. A Parisian born, he has spent most of the fifty-six years of his life in his own city, and made a great reputation in France by publishing books the sale of which was punished as a crime in other countries. He was educated at St. Louis College in Paris, and at 25 began to devote himself wholly to writing. His books number over a score. They cover many subjects, and their noted author has been able to be vile in all but one or two. M. Zola delights in odd situations. For instance, two years ago, he wrote a book in which the devotions of pious persons at Lourdes were treated in his usual style. Then he promptly went to Rome and presented himself for an interview with Pope Leo. It might have been because of the book 'Lourdes," or it might have been because of others; but Leo refused to see him. For many years the author of "Claude" and "Nana" and "La Terre" has been eager to become one of the immortals because he knew he could not. The academicians could not get the smell of M. Zola's famous books out of their nostrils, and consistently closed their door to him. "Le Reve," his only pure work, eminently un-Zolaesque, was written to placate the academy, but Louis Maria Julien Viaud was elected in 1891 and Zola is still a mortal. If not a member of the Academy, the great realist is at least a Knight of the Legion of Honor and has been president of the French Society of Men of Letters. His book "Rome," written with the hope that it would pass him into the Academy, is the one concerning which the charge of literary theft is made and which is creating so much talk.

HANDLES BILLIONS.

This Young New-Yorker Has Handled Over $25,000,000,000 in Cash.

William J. Gilpin, assistant manager of the New York Clearing House, handles more money in actual cash than any other person in the country and probably in the world. It does not pass through his hands in the form of checks, bonds or stock certificates, but in legal tenders and treasury notes—that is to say, in so many actual dollars.

Every business day of the year he handles over $5,000,000. He has counted as much as $15,000,000 in a single day. Altogether he has had to do with the handling of over $25,000,000,000 in cash. This stupendous sum represents far more than the sum total of the fortunes of all the millionaires in America and Europe combined.

Mr. Gilpin is a young man and is content with the modest salary of $5,000. He has been in the clearing house since 1878.

Lifted a 750-Pound Hammer.

All over Southern New Jersey William Stiles was known as the "Jersey Samson." At the time of his death at Cape May a few days ago he was 70 years old, yet even at that age he could lift things that a much younger man could only budge. Stiles was one of the expert boatmen of the Cape coast. In times of peril and heavy seas he was always placed in command of the lifeboat.

As an instance of Stiles' strength it is told of him that a few years before the outbreak of the rebellion, when leading Southerners frequented the hotels of that resort, athletic sports were often held for the amusement of the visitors. One young Southerner, who towered 6 feet 4 in his stockings, had entered a "strong man's" competition. He walked easily with objects weighing 300 pounds, then he did better by picking up a 550-pound weight and carrying it 100 feet.

Stiles watched these performances without saying a word. Then the Southerner, to "cap the climax," grasped a full 600-pound weight and carried it thirty yards. Flattered by cheers from the girls, he raised his voice and dared any one present to equal his feat. Stiles walked from his obscure position past the heaviest object that had yet been lifted, and on to the beach beyond, where there was an anchor weighing 750 pounds, took off his coat, stooped down, grasped the anchor, bore it to his shoulder and carried it 100 yards along the beach. Cheers rose that drowned the breakers' roar. The Southerner walked up to Stiles, stretched out his hand and acknowledged that this was superior muscle.

Take good care of your health, if you want to know what is going to happen next.

A SUPERBLY APPOINTED TRAIN.

Undoubtedly the handsomest train between Chicago and St. Paul, Minneapolis, the Superiors and Duluth is the "North-Western Limited," which leaves Chicago at 6:30 p. m. dail via the North-Western Line (Chicago & North-Western R'y). Its equipment, which is entirely new throughout, and embraces Compartment Sleeping Cars, Buffet, Smoking and Library Cars, standard Sleeping Cars, Dinning Cars and ladies' coaches, has every luxury which imagination can conceive or mind invent for the comfort and convenience of of passengers. All agents sell tickets via the Chicago & North-Western R'y. For full information apply to agents of connecting line, or address W. B. Kniskern, G. P. and T. A. Chicago, Ill. 28-29

—Rev. W. L. Meese has chosen the date of August 20, for the Matrimonial Reunion and Picnic. A special invitation is extended to everybody to attend this gathering. Come with well filled baskets and be prepared to stay all day. A photograph of those who Mr. Meese has married will be taken in the grove.

—John St. Clair, who lives with Sheriff and Mrs. Stroh has been quite sick. He is well up in years and can't stand too much hot weather. He is reported better at this writing.

—Bishop & Lackey call attention to their big ad in this issue. They will give their annual anniversary sale on July 17th. Read the bargains.

—There are two reasonable things which everybody should do: take good care of one's health; and if lost, regain it quickly, and to this everybody will agree. And there are a great multitude of people who are agreed that for both purposes Simmons Liver Regulator is the best helper. "I am troubled with torpid liver and nothing gives relief so quick like Simmons Liver Regulator" -R. R. Strange, Lake City, Fla.

—We had a pleasant call this morning from Miss Hoffman who lives north of town. She is entertaining Miss Olive Kiler of Indianapolis. Miss Kiler will be remembered as the charming lady who played the violin solo at the entertainment given in the Presbyterian church about a year ago by the Musical club.

—The northwestern yeast companys agent is around again with samples of the wonderful Yeast Foam which is better this year than ever owing to the new machinery being used for pressing out cakes. No excuse for having poor bread when you can get Yeast Foam, good flour and hot oven. 1tdaw

—John Klein and wife of Chicago, spent their July 4th vacation with Mr. and Mrs. M. Shoudel in Jackson township.

—Miss Ida Miller, of Fort Wayne was the guest over the Fourth of Misses Mary and Anna Shoudel in Jackson township.

—Our old time Waterloo neighbor, Phil Morel called to see us Saturday. He was considerably disappointed that he did not see the parade as the train was late.

—Don't miss seeing "Eva's Golden Chariot," a "glittering gem," costing over $3000, to be seen in the grahd free street parade given by The Ed. F. Davis Big Uncle Tom's Cabin Co. At Auburn next Tuesday.

—The Epworth League of Grove Bethel will give an entertainment and ice cream social at the church on Saturday evening July 11th. Everyone invited.

—Cards have been received by Auburn friends announcing the marriage of Miss Frankie A. Miller and Dr. Walter Lewell at Warrensburg Mo., Wed. June 24th. Mr. and Mrs. Lewell will be at home after Aug. 1st. at 1323 Park Ave. Kansas City, Mo. Mrs. Lewell will be remembered by many of our people. She attended school here and was a class mate of County Supt. C. M. Merica.

—Gold money is no better than any other money. What the people need, is not some certain kind of money, but more of it. They believe that silver will give them more money.

—Republican papers and speakers are continually claiming that the McKinley tariff bill secured more revenue than the Wilson bill. They are wrong. It is rignt the other way. The Wilson tariff law has produced better results, and has not carried an expense of 15 millions of bounty on sugar, as did the McKinley bill.

—Rob McDougall looked natural playing the fife by the side of Hank Wolf in the procession.

—Mrs. C. P. Houser, of Indianapolis is here and will spend a month or two with her daughter Edna, and with the old neighbors. She will be made welcome.

—The Ed. F. Davis Big Uncle Tom,s Cabin Co. uses a car-load of special scenery. The transformation is the finest ever staged.

CORUNNA.

The Ladies of the M. E. church will give an Ice Cream festival in Thomas' new hall on Saturday evening July 11. Everybody invited.

Mrs. George Knauer visited in Avilla last Tuesday.

Frank Shook is going to school in Butler.

Mrs. Isaac Reed is visiting with her daughter, Mrs. J. A. Sumwatt in Orland.

Samuel Beavers and family spent the Fourth in Churubusco.

Born July 2 to Mr. and Mrs. Edward Gushwa, a son.

Will Franks, and family of Garrett, visited with Mr. F's. parents last week.

Milo Thomas' new building is almost completed. The painters are putting on the finishing touches.

Mr. and Mrs. Homer Cutter were in Churubusco over Saturday and Sunday.

Born to Mr. and Mrs. William Dawson on the 3rd of July, a daughter.

Minnie Finch spent the Fourth in Auburn, and Ona, in Kendallville.

Dug Wallace's father, of Waterloo, is visiting with him and family.

Corunna celebrated the Fourth in good style. We had a street parade in the morning, and one in the evening that would fill Barnum with envy if he could have seen it. The parade by the small folks though, took the cake. At night there was a liberal display of fireworks, while martial music by Harding's band filled the air.

AUBURN' BIG DAY

The Largest Celebration Ever Given in the County.

INDURTRIAL PARADE!

Program Caried out in full, No accident.

Monday's Daily.

Auburn always has successful celebrations. We had one in '85, one in 86, and one in '90, but all these have been eclipsed by the big demonstration of 1896.

A nice rain the night before made the roads and streets pleasant, for the dust was laid. At 4 in the morning, the Auburn Rifles fired a salute, the church bells rang, and the steam whistles of the factories screamed, and it is supposed that cannons boomed, but there were so many cannon crackers and similar explosives going off at the same time, that it is doubtful if many could swear they heard the cannon. People thronged out on the streets and soon they came in from the country. By the time the parade was ready, at ten, the streets were lined and the public square was filled to overflowing.

THE PARADE.

No such industrial parade was probably ever seen in the state before. There were in the line seventy-seven floats, representing, a part of the many lines of Auburn's business. The procession as formed was nearly two miles long, as was seen when the last wagon had passed the public square going north, the first ones had made the entire round of the course, and were passing along the south side of the public square.

THE FLOATS.

Led by the Auburn Military Band, came the German Soldiers, in their some what strange uniform, and following these, the fire engine, hose, and hook and ladder trucks. Then came the sprinkling wagon. Then a big log with decorations as a part of Liniger Co. Hoof factory, which also had a double float, following, on which were shown the hoop machines at work. Henry's big wagon load of 24 little girls in white was a vision of loveliness. They represented the "Coming Stars" of the Opera House. The Fruit House, Cory Shugers and Campbell & Sons, had nice wagons, the last named having men at work. The big dogs of Dills & Borst in their cage, with a "lion tamer" in the cage, was far away a head of the lion cage in the show Wednesday. Then came G. H. Yesbera's float, with goods, Shull's big boot, Sheffer & Chaney, five rigs, one a butcher and meat, wagon and the other a fat cow, one with sheep and the "Farmer's Friend" rig followed. Then came the Empire Bakery's display, then a clown and then Richey's float on one of their piano wagons. Then came another show of fine St. Bernard dogs, the displays of Mr. Rader. In a carriage following this, were the proprietors of the Kiblinger factory Mr. McIntyre and Mr. Snyder, with two of their assistants. Then came the Trumpet Note Band, and following them, the four exhibits of the Kiblinger factory. The first showed bodies and wood work, the second showed the iron work or blacksmith department, with men at work at the forges, etc. The third was of the painting and the fourth the trimming department. The judges who were to decide the best of these four displays, gave first to the iron workers, with the trimmers a close second. A large float of the Kiblinger works, in charge of the local salesmen, McDowell & Carter, followed. Then Leighty & McNabb meat market display then that of W. C. Hartman, the real estate dealer. This last, was a banner carried by two lads on a tandem, Kessler's "John Halifax" was a nice rig, and Aber's flower wagon was lovely. Kessler's big float had cigar makers at work. Two or three floats were necessary for the Zimmerman factory and F. J. Yesbera had one for his make of bicycles. The E. M. Bishop wagon for the Dinger, and Pfefferl's bottling works display followed.

Then came a nice working force of the Auburn Foundry & Machine Works, the Practical Boiler Works, both having machinery and men at work. Koppitz' Bottling Works came next, followed by the City Dray Line with its piled up boxes, addressed to Auburn business men. As fine a thing as was shown, was Hodges, big watch, and Father Time with his scythe and glass.

Brown, Culbertson & Boland had the greatest number of displays. There was a traction engine several binders, separators, tedders, a hay loader in opration, and a grain drill, driven by "Wm. McKinley" as advertised, and one float had wagons and buggies three stories high. Hebel Brothers, and also Miser Brothers, had fine decorated rigs, as did also Robbins & McCord and Baxter Bros. A. J. Rogers had a music display, and a comic "woman" playing a piano. The Kruger Fruit House had a big float, and J. N. Myers a fine thresher and separator. T. C. Ford's feed store was followed by a lean horse on which was "hay and oats wanted within," and laughter went with him all around. Davenport had a wagon for his drugstore, and Willis for his bookstore. But as fine as any, was the tempting display of vegetables shown by Abel Brothers.

Raut & Co. and A. N. Wilson, both boot and shoe firms had fine displays, the latter having the old women in the shoe but had boys in it. R. S. Showers had a rig with brooms etc. And the Auburn Drum Corps' helped make the music.

We do not claim we have mentioned all, for the floats kept passing, whether we caught them or not. Many were very elaborate and beautiful, and we would gladly have noticed them more fully, but it is impossible and we have have not missed anyone intentionally.

THE RACES.

Running Horses, one-third mile. First prize $10; won by Joseph Springer. Second prize $5; won by Lee Morr and Bert Lockwood. (Divided.)

Bicycle Road Race, two miles. First prize $10; won by W. H. Kuhn. Second prize $5; won by Eddie Little.

Foot Race, around court square. First prize $3; won by Mr. Aunspaugh, of Garrett. Second prize $2; won by Allie Treesh.

Wheelbarrow Race, around court square. First prize $3; won by Aunspaugh. Second prize $2; won by Dan Yingling.

Boys Bicycle Race. One-third mile. Frst prize $3; won by "Nibbs" Refner. Second prize $2; won by young Shoemaker.

Too much praise cannot be given to the young business men who managed the celebration. The main ones were Howard McCord, John Kruger and Walter Hartman. They were ably assisted by Milo Husselman, Capt Kuhlman, John Lochner, Bert Robbins, H. E. Trout, Charles McClellan and others.

The bicycle parade was fine. The judges decided that Chas Schaab had the best decorated wheel and he received the $5.

Marshal West deserves a good word. He chose good help, Perry Long and Charles Bolton and these three were always on hand, and kept order.

Capt. Kuhlman, Milo Husselman and J. C. Lochner were marshals, the former being chief, and all sworn in as peace officers.

It was one of the biggest crowds ever in Auburn, the numbers being safely put at 10,000 to 15,000. The streets were full from 9 a. m. till ten p. m. It is said by some that at the big three days soldier's reunion years ago, we had a biger crowd. No one ever saw such a full program, so fully carried out on a Fourth, everything was given as printed on the program, and given on time. There was no waiting, even in the long afternoon.

The sham battle was the most real thing of the kind ever seen here. Each side had a different uniform, mode of handling men, and spoke a different language. The German soldiers from Garrett and the Auburn Rifles are our favorites. It closed by "geschwind schritt.

There was a dance at the Opera House, given by the Auburn Orchestra and one south of the jail.

The fire works were the best ever shown in North Indiana. Aber and his helpers should have credit.

There were but few accidents. A son of Mr. Hough, near the Junction, had powder blown in his face. He was stooping over a toy cannon, priming it, when some one put a lighted cigar to it and the powder was blown into his face. The doctors say his eyes will be saved, but it is a painful injury. A lad was thrown from a running horse, but was not much hurt.

Pierce Quinlan; foreman of the paint department at the Zimmerman factory deserves great credit for the banner work done on many of the displays.

SIMMONS LIVER REGULATOR

THE BEST

Is SIMMONS LIVER REGULATOR—don't forget to take it. The Liver gets sluggish during the Winter, just like all nature, and the system becomes choked up by the accumulated waste, which brings on Malaria, Fever and Ague and Rheumatism. You want to wake up your Liver now, but be sure you take SIMMONS LIVER REGULATOR to do it. It also regulates the Liver—keeps it properly at work, when your system will be free from poison and the whole body invigorated.

You get THE BEST BLOOD when your system is in A1 condition, and that will only be when the Liver is kept active. Try a Liver Remedy once and note the difference. But take only SIMMONS LIVER REGULATOR—it is SIMMONS LIVER REGULATOR which makes the difference. Take it in powder or in liquid already prepared, or make a tea of the powder; but take SIMMONS LIVER REGULATOR. You'll find the RED Z on every package. Look for it.

Obituary.

Enoch Morr was born in Wayne Co. Ohio, September 15, 1826, died July 2, 1896, age 69 years, 9 month and 19 days. February 5, 1852 he married Miss Rebecca Johnson of the same place, she preceding him to the tomb. To the union were born six children, three of which survive him. The early part of his life was spent in Ohio, and a few years in the gold fields of California. He was one of the old forty niners. Mr. Morr removed to this county in 1854, and since that time has resided on his farm a few miles east of Auburn. Early in his life he became a christian and at the time of his death was a member of the German Baptist church. Another old settler has passed away joining the silent band of those who have labored to make homes in a new country and then died. The works of these old pioneers have been grand and many lasting monuments which time can not obliterate are left behind, yet their hopes have been as grand as their labors and in heaven their reward awaits them. Mr. Morr has been an honorable citizen, kind husband and loving indulgent father.

He leaves many old neighbors and friends, one brother and sister, three children and three granchildren to mourn his death. The funeral occurred July 5, at the U. B. church near his home. Services conducted by Rev. Barton assisted by Rev. Trover. The body was interred in the burying ground ajacent to the church.

—We have heard a number of people speak about the fine wagons Kessler Bros had in the big industrial parade Saturday. They had one wagon so arranged as to show every employe of their factory busy at work rolling the celebrated John Halifax and Receipt cigars. They are already realizing the benefit of such occasions as the one celebrated here Saturday. It takes lots of cigars for such a large crowd. There were plenty of people here who probably have never smoked such a delightful smoke as the John Halifax. The firm exhibit showed enterprise in the Kessler Bros. and particularly Wm. Kessler who manages this large factory. We hope that their brands may always prove a lasting advertisement for them.

—Republican papers pretend now, that no money is good but gold money. Ask them which will buy the most goods of any kind, a gold dollar or a silver. Try it yourself at any store in DeKalb county. Talk is cheap, but an actual business transaction is the thing to settle the money question. But they say, the present silver dollar is a "republican dollar." It is the same dollar, precisely as is to be coined by the coming free silver administration, a dollar that weighs 412½ grains of silver nine-tenths fine. Free silver calls for these very dollars, and calls for no other kind. We simply want more of them.

Shows may come and go, but none seem to stand the test so well as Mrs. Stowe's immortal historical novel, Uncle Tom's Cabin. The grand parade, the finest ever witnessed. Auburn Tuesday, July 14.

Ada Miller is hereby notified that an action has been commenced against her in said court, for divorce by Andy Miller, and that the same will be heard and determined on the 5th day of October, 1896, being the 1st juridical day of the next term of said court, which commences October 5, 1896.

Witness, the clerk of said court this 16th day of June, 1896. DANIEL D. MOODY, Clerk.

C. A. O. McClellan, Attorney.

Notice of Final Settlement of Estate.

Notice is hereby given to all persons interested in the estate of John Nichols, deceased, to appear in the DeKalb Circuit Court, held at Auburn, Indiana on the 31st day of July, 1896, and show cause, if any, why my Final Settlement Accounts with the estate of said decedent should not be approved, and said heirs and all others interested are notified to then and there make proof of heirship or claim and receive their distributive shares.

Witness, my name, this 7th day of July 1896.

WILLIAM SWELEY,
Administrator.

THIRD ANNIVERSARY SALE

DeKALB COUNTY'S MIGHTIEST BARGAIN EVENT

FRIDAY AND SATURDAY,

July 17 & 18, 1896.

WE invite our patrons to join in the celebration of our three years of business prosperity—by participating in a fea t of Bargains—the equal of which WE KNOW stands unparalleled in the history of DeKALB COUNTY bargain giving. We will plainly and most generously show our appreciation of the public's liberal patronage by offering great quantities of the most desirable merchandise—in every department at prices cut so low—that there can be no doubt as to their being the lowest on record. This sale means a loss of many dollars to us, and is unquestionably the supreme money-saving chance of the year. IT IS A BENEFIT SALE FOR OUR CUSTOMERS. We hope all our old friends—DeKalb County's thrifty buyers—will profit by its mighty opportunities. We want a great crowd to again bear testimony that for liberal methods and highest values, there is no place like BISHOP & LACKEY'S.—Bring this sheet with you. A large extra force of sales people has been engaged and our patrons will find us much better able to care for them than last year.

GOODS SOLD ON THESE DAYS CANNOT BE RETURNED.

BISHOP & LACKEY,

Leading Merchants

Auburn, Indiana.

Auburn Courier.

AUBURN, INDIANA.

JAMES A. BARNS, - - - PUBLISHER.

The average farm horse actually suffers every day during the summer for the want of water. From sun-up till noon is too long for a hard worked horse to go without drink.

The Transvaal government is so thoroughly convinced that Cecil Rhodes was back of the Jameson raid that it will not rest until it has the ex-premier brought up for trial. This is the reason for Rhodes' quietness of late. He is getting to know when he is well off.

Miss Gertrude Vanderbilt has shown that she is a sensible girl, who cares more for an American citizen than for a scion of a decaying aristocracy. Her engagement to the son of William C. Whitney may mark a reaction in favor of home products in the matrimonial market.

A prominent missionary sugests "the only way to reach the cyclists is through tracts." If the tract is level and the person who wants to reach them is a "scorcher" it may be done. The more serious inference from the missionary's statement, that the cyclist is a conspicuously unregenerate individual requiring the last resorts of religious persuasion, is too ridiculous to combat or even consider.

The editor of a literary publication, who has been advocating summer reading clubs and helping his subscribers to form them, has received this delicious query: "How can we get rid of our president? She is well meaning, but she has no grip. She is really a disadvantage, but has no idea of it. She will never resign, and our personal liking is so great we cannot bear to ask her to go out." The editor was completely stumped, and has passed the problem on to his other subscribers.

A Chicago man is the first to invade the realm of fishes with labor-saving machinery. Oscar Plath, according to reports from Washington, is the person who has invented a rod that jerks the fish out of the water by a spring attachment while the fisherman may sleep or otherwise employ himself. The owner's only duty is to bait the hook and the fish and the rod do the rest. Next to the process of catching the finny tribe at convenient fish markets, this device is the most advantageous to unskilled labor of any that have recently appeared.

A British official report of the second massacre at Oorfa, Armenia, states that 1,800 people, men and women, were slaughtered or burned to death in a cathedral where they had taken refuge. The unspeakable Turks killed all the men on the ground floor, looted the cathedral treasures, closed the stairways to the galleries occupied by women, and set the building on fire. The British Government, which could have called Turkey to account for this horrible cruelty, hardly paralleled in history, has not even uttered its protest against it. Its silence is almost as awful as the silence which it has condoned.

It seems that the runaway accident by which Austin Corbin and his coachman were killed was caused, indirectly, by the fact that a team of spirited horses were being used for the first time without blinders. What followed was only to be expected. To put such a nervous, sensitive animal as a horse into the new and strange relations of an open bridle, after he has been accustomed to the restraint of blinders, is to invite an accident. But this lamentable occurrence should not be allowed to check the movement to free the horse from the cruel absurdity of blinkers. They are injurious to him and dangerous to his driver, and why they were ever adopted by horsemen is a conundrum. They should never be put on a horse, for he can be trained to do much better without them; but if he has been accustomed to them, they should not be taken off injudiciously, nor should he be recklessly driven without them until he has learned to adapt himself to his new conditions. Mr. Corbin's death resulted from somebody's fatal folly.

Reports from the Island of Yeso indicate that the Japanese province has been subjected to such a tidal wave as overwhelmed Lisbon in 1755. Ten thousand Japanese are reported to have been drowned after a terrible earthquake which gave rise to a resistlessss body of invading water. For twenty hours natives were terror-stricken by a series of seismic disturbances; then the sea swept in upon the fisher-folk living on its low-lying shores. There is only conjecture as to this destructive wave in Japan, as it was at Lisbon. The first shock destroyed 3,850 houses, burying 15,000 persons in the ruins. A minute later an immense wave forty feet in height swept in from the sea, drowning thousands of those who had sought refuge on the quays. Yeso is peculiarly subject to loss of life from such a phenomenon as a tidal wave. The island, nearly as large as is Ireland, is a trackless forest for the most part. Aside from the heavy growth of timber, vines and creepers make of the interior an almost impenetrable jungle. The chief industry of the island is the salmon fisheries, and this occupation compels the natives to dwell along the low coast lines.

When a tornado has swept across land or water, leaving death and ruin behind, there are no fret and worry and endless detail of "investigation;" there is no necessity for fixing responsibilities; the living set about burying the dead and repairing the ruin which has been wrought. Not since the St. Louis disaster have there been such fatalities as were attendant upon the sinking of the steamer Drummond Castle off the coast of France, but following the lesser calamity may be expected the "official investigation" which is so seldom prolific of anything but tediousness and verbosity. Some one blundered. In a calm sea, instead of standing far out from a dangerous reef which was guarded by a lighthouse, the steamer ran in close to the shore, crashed into the rocks and sunk with 244 passengers and crew. Some one blundered, but blunders are inevitable so long as man continues to be fallible. They are a factor in the risks taken by those who go down to the sea in ships. So long as man's mental condition and capacity are governed so largely by his physical state, men to whom lives are intrusted will continue to make those blunders which so often send a shudder through the world. In the case of the Drummond Castle there seems to be no one left alive to share punishment, even should the accident have merited its infliction upon some one. Whatever punishment was possible seems to have been visited upon officers, crew and passengers alike.

The Marquis de Mores and a party of thirty-five are reported to have been massacred near Tripoli. He was on a mission to enlist Arab chieftains against the British Nile expedition. If the report proves to be true it is a consistent ending to the remarkable career of this man. Sixteen years ago he married the daughter of a rich Wall street banker and came West with a gift of $3,000,000 and a disposition for picturesque adventure. He was fascinated by the wild life of the border country, bought a ranch, remained on it long enough to lose a third of his fortune, and then jumped to Paris in time to be caught by the Boulanger fever. When this had burned out he went to China, indulged in a few visionary projects there, lost another million, and again sought refuge in Paris, this time to be an anarchist. To his new fad he brought his customary enthusiasm, and his ardor did not weaken until he had spent three months in jail. He had been temporarily lost to public view since that time until the report of his death reveals his latst enterprise. From the day he married he has devoted himself to projects intended to revolutionize commerce or society, and was as unsparing of his money as long as it lasted as he was of his personal energy. His courage and daring were proverbial and were tested in at least twenty duels, in most of which he killed his man. His career has been meteoric, picturesque, but fitful, and wherever he temporarily set up his penates he promptly disturbed the serenity of life and injected his own fiery spirit. In his wild projects he was as irresponsible as he was fantastic and fascinating.

Is the watermelon degenerating? You couldn't induce any intelligent resident, who was a freckled farmer boy thirty years ago to believe that it is not. You couldn't make him believe that he ever crawled three-quarters of a mile on hands and knees in the moonlight to steal such a pallid, leathery thing as opens unwillingly to his knife in these early summer days. To attempt it would be to cast imputations upon his boyish intelligence. There was something indescribably delicious about the old-time watermelon. In the first place it was warm work reaching it, plumping into furrows and scrambling over low rail fences in the semi-dark. Then the "patch" lay out in the moonlight, with rustling corn all around, and dotting it everywhere lay the great striped melons, with glittering dewdrops on them. Into these melons the first probe of the knife caused ominous cracking sounds, startling to the night raider. Half-way down its length the great halves would yawn and fall asunder, leaving the rich, red meat exposed in jagged ridges, upon which were crystal formations suggestive of the sweetness within. In those days no debating society ever discussed the question whether the watermelon was a fruit or a vegetable; after such a search it was unquestionably a luscious fruit to grace any clime between the poles. To-day it would be difficult to classify the Georgia melon. It is a tough, unresponsive vegetable, tasting like a cucumber which has been slightly sweetened with water molasses. It is dull, prosaic, uninteresting. The idea of stealing one of them would be as preposterous as the stealing of a cottonwood stump. It is watery, clammy, elastic—the very corpse or mummy of the watermelon that used to be.

Taught a Dog to Sing.

John Porter, a New York Central engineer, has a dog that he is teaching to sing. Roger, the dog, has been trained to perform every time a member of the Porter family opens the piano. In showing off the other day he kept time to the accompaniment. His style of singing was by yelping in time to the notes played on the instrument. When it ran soft and low, his voice sank almost to a growl; when the notes rose in loud strains Roger pointed his nose to the ceiling and sang a wild, long wail of pathos in such treble as was never heard. When it was all over and the last note of the music had sounded, he wagged his tail and walked around to each one of the company for congratulations.

It was several months ago that the Porters first learned that they had sheltered this musical prodigy, and they and their neighbors have been having infinite amusement with him ever since. By dint of all the practice they have given him, Roger has improved vastly. He has learned songs and can distinguish from the first few notes of the accompaniment what selection is expected of him, and he sings them with all the feeling that a dog could have, and vastly more that some people seem capable of. There is only one thing that will stop him in the middle of a song, and that is to be laughed at. If he is laughed at he stops short, goes back under the piano and stares contemptuously at the ill-mannered people until they go away and leave him.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Fortune in a Spoon.

Mention is made in the long since published memoirs of the Marquis de Villiers of Paris of a wonderful spoon once in the possession of his family. This spoon was reputed to be of gold, studded in all parts with diamonds of the first water. Four inches in length only, yet the value of this article was stated to be $75,000. Each diamond was the size of a large pin's head, and there were some hundreds of them.

The Difference.

"I say, captain," said a young Englishman on board an American clipper, "that flag of yours has not floated in every breeze and o[illegible] sea for a thousand years, has [illegible] No. It hain't," replied the captain, "but it has licked one that has."

REPUBLICAN CAMPAIGN SONG—Hanna, Put the Kettle On, We'll All Take Tea.

REPUBLICANISM TO BE REBUKED

The Democracy is the party of the people. Its purpose has ever been to advance their interests. It may have had its errors of procrastination and its sins of omission. But the sins of commission against the people of this country have ever rested with the Republican party and with its ancestors of the Know-Nothing, Whig and Federalist parties. During the ninety-six years in the government of this country, since party lines have prevailed, Democracy has been in control sixty years. They have been years of the fullest prosperity. Business depression has come in rare intervals and then from natural and not from the government causes. The depression that now prevails, however, flows from the efforts of the McKinleyites, partly successful, for making the rich richer and the poor poorer through the successful demands for a tariff that could benefit corporations and the manufacturers only.

It is now sought to place at the head of this nation the tool of the coal barons, and of the iron kings, who dictated the tariff of 1890 for their own personal advantage and for the subjugation of labor. In this brazen endeavor it is in the logic of Republican consistency and of supreme selfishness that for a captain in the McKinley campaign such an unscrupulous leader should be selected as shall be under the complete domination of the iron interests—Mark Hanna, of Cleveland.

Are the people ready for such a surrender? We can understand the feeling of unrest that prevails from causes having their origin with the very leaders that are now rushing McKinley to the front. But the people will revolt against the recurrence of the McKinley, the Carnegie, the Cameron, the Quay, the Foraker, the Elkins, and the Platt dictation that is intrenched behind the movement to put another Ohio time-server in the Presidential chair.

He Has Spoken.

Soothed and sustained by the presence and advice of his backer and trainer the oracle of Canton has at last op'd his ponderous jaws and emitted a delphic utterance on the currency question. It was when a delegation from Evansville, Ind., with brass bands, tin horns and other outward evidences of enthusiasm had been admitted to the shrine. When silence had been secured Mr. Hanna turned on the calcium light, the apostle struck his right hand into the bosom of his frock coat, rose upon his toes, slowly settled back upon his heels, cleared his throat and began to open his mouth. The delegation stood entranced. Mr. Hanna turned on another limelight. There was a raucous, grating sound, a buzzing as of concealed machinery and then these never-to-be-forgotten words:

"My countrymen, there is another thing the people are determined upon, and that is that a full day's work must be paid in a full dollar."

That was all, but it was enough. The oracular lips had been unsealed; the dumb had spoken; the mandarin had decreed that twelve should constitute a dozen and that the multiplication table was not inconsistent with republican institutions. It was a day of sweetness and light in Canton.

Groveling at Mark Hanna's Feet.

No more remarkable spectacle has ever been witnessed in this country than is presented in the prostration of the Republican party—an organization which was once and still claims to be the champion of liberty—at the feet of a self-constituted autocrat, who has never been, in any sense, conspicuous in the counsels of the party; who was unknown a year ago outside of the narrow commercial domain in which he has achieved the fortune which renders him puissant, and who has set out on a purely "business" basis to acquire a President of the United States.—Kansas City Star.

No Inspiration to Enthusiam.

Enthusiasm for McKinley is lacking everywhere outside Ohio. The leaders, from Platt to Lodge, fall into line, as a matter of course. But the average Republican doesn't relish the success gained by the silent man of Ohio. He realizes that while old "bosses" may have been sent to the rear, a new boss has forged to the front, and that Republican success next November means Hanna rule, with all that it implies. No wonder that thinking Republicans are not inspired by their Presidential ticket.—Boston Globe.

Chickens Coming Home to Roost.

It is the irony of fate. The Republicans made Utah a State for the express purpose of having it give them two Senators, one Representative and three electoral votes. Yet in the very first Republican convention in which Utah ever participated as a State one of her Senators, her single Representative and half her delegation have abandoned the party, repudiated its platform and joined in a bolt.—New York World.

Statesmen Conspicuously Absent.

The most notable feature of the Republican National Convention was the conspicuous absence of statesmen of great abilities, attainments and achievements. The man of greatest power in the convention and who represented the nominee was a successful money maker. The McKinley campaign was run by money makers on a business basis for a business purpose. Its managers were as ignorant of statesmanship as schoolboys, and knew no politics above the manipulation of primaries and conventions.—St. Louis Republic.

Labor Is Offended.

There is such a thing as a labor vote in this country, and it cuts an important figure in a Presidential election. It is not a vote to be offended openly and deliberately, at any rate. Among the persons who took a prominent part in the proceedings at St. Louis was Henry C. Payne of Wisconsin. He was reelected National Committeeman from his State, in accordance with the wishes of Mark Hanna, so it was stated in the newspaper dispatches at the time. Now it is reported that Mr. Hanna is very likely to give added evidence of his approval of Mr. Payne by appointing him a member of the National Executive Committee. Mr. Payne is probably as objectionable to organized labor as any man in the country. As manager of the Milwaukee Street Railway Company he fought stubbornly to crush out organization among his employes, refusing under all circumstances to recognize the right of those who worked for his company to belong to a union. Conferring honor and position on this man, who is a bitter enemy of unionism, Mr. Hanna will find to be a poor way of making votes for his candidate among workingmen.

The Same Idea as in 1892.

There are other interests at stake beside those of Mr. McKinley's millionaire friends who have grown insolently rich over McKinley's outrageous protection ideas. Once Mr. McKinley's extravagant ideas were sat down upon by the American people. The issue will be tried again and if we mistake not the temper, the same emphatic treatment will be given him this fall.—Burlington Gazette.

How Teller and McKinley Differ.

There is a significant contrast between the action of Senator Teller, who has severed his relation with his party, because he could not agree with its position on the silver question, and with that of Mr. McKinley, who will accept the nomination for the Presidency on a platform which he sought to defeat.—Philadelphia Record.

Gold Exports and McKinleyism.

"European gold was flowing toward us," said Temporary Chairman Fairbanks in describing the "high-water mark" of McKinleyism in 1892. We give him the credit of not knowing that the net exports of gold from this country to Europe in that year reached the enormous total of $58,570,536.—Springfield Republican.

Owned by the Plutocrats.

If ever a party was dominated, controlled, owned bodily by money rings and plutocratic combinations, that at St. Louis takes the cake, so to speak. Any hard-working, toiling son of the nation who follows its flag deserves no sympathy whatever.—Arkansas Gazette.

Wages and Votes.

If every man votes for McKinley whose wages were raised during the existence of the McKinley act, and every one votes against him whose wages were lowered, he will not carry a single one of the manufacturing States.—Kansas City Times.

Cheering to Democrats.

There is nothing in the nomination of McKinley that should not cheer the hearts of Democrats. It was the McKinley idea and the McKinley platform that defeated the Republican party in 1892. It will be McKinley that will lead it to defeat in 1896.—Peoria Herald.

Will Not Grow Upon the People.

It is our best judgment that McKinley will not grow upon the people in the fierce light of the campaign. His election means another siege of tariff tinkering, and the people do not want any more legislation on this subject for some time.—Nashville American.

Combining Colors.

It is not given to all to detect as many shades of colors as that Swiss ribbon manufacturer who is said to be able to discern 2,700 different shades; therefore the following suggestions which he makes may be useful:

Black combines well with almost all colors, except those which are so lacking in brightness as to be too nearly like it. Black and pale pink, blue, yellow, green, red, lavender and even rather dark shades of blue, clear brown and green are excellent combinations.

Brown combines well with yellow gold and bronze if it is the shade of brown which has brightness. It is effective also with black and with certain tones of green. A chocolate-and-milk brown combines well with old rose and the dull shades of pink.

Very dark green is effective when brightened by linings of narrow trimming of pale blue. A medium shade of green unites well with old pink. Brownish greens look well with bronze and copper color.

Dark blue may be brightened by lines of bright, rich red, by lines of old rose or of clear yellow. Blue of the "electric" and "cadet" varieties is best combined with black or with figured silks in which the same shade predominates.

Never turn the misfortunes of others into ridicule.

SCANDINAVIANS AS CITIZENS.

Readily Adapt Themselves to Conditions in Which They Are Placed.

The great adaptability of the Scandinavians to the circumstances and customs of their adopted country is acknowledged on all sides. Whenever and wherever they have transplanted themselves, whether in England in the ninth century, in Normandy in the tenth, in Sicily in the eleventh, or in America in the nineteenth, the same process of transformation has taken place. No other people in all its history has such a record. In the United States they have eagerly learned English, and have quickly done so because of its similarity to their own language in structure and vocabulary. Of course men who have come hither as adults always prefer the old speech, and in some districts in the country and in Scandinavian quarters of the cities it will be heard almost exclusively, because of the large numbers of the foreign born. But the second generation quite invariably chooses English, and many of them have forgotten the language of their fathers. At a town convention which I attended in 1894 in Illinois in a large Swedish community, the proceedings went on smoothly in English for some time, until an elderly Swede became somewhat puzzled and asked the chairman, a young Swede, to explain the matter in Swedish. From that point all motions were given in Swedish. Remarks were addressed to the chair in both languages.

In matters of religion Scandinavians have shown a peculiar faculty in conforming to the bad American custom of multiplying denominations. In the home countries, though there is now practically complete toleration, the existence of a state church and an Episcopal organization have maintained a good degree of uniformity. Neither of these restraining influences has ever operated in this country. There have been no bishops to check the tendency of diversity. Liberty to adopt any creed and to change church relations at will is freely used. The zeal of the Norwegian in controversy has found even a better field in the church than in politics. Before 1890, when three divisions united, there were five bodies of Norwegian Lutherans, while the Danes were comfortable with two, and the Swedes lagged behind with only one. What the Swedes lack in Lutheranism they make up in "dissenting sects," though none of them have been converted in this country.

The statistics of intemperance and illegitimacy, which are sometimes so alarming in parts of the Scandinavian countries, do not appear to find a parallel among Scandinavians in America. But all such statistics are unsatisfactory, and frequently untrustworthy. Generalization is, therefore, unsafe. There are drunkenness and illegitimacy among them here, but I have not observed that it is more difficult to maintain order and decency in a city like Minneapolis with its Norwegians and Swedes than in St. Paul with its Irish and Germans. Of the pauper and criminal classes the Scandinavians have a smaller proportion than any other alien element except the British, while of the insane, judging from Minnesota, they seem to have a larger percentage than the Germans or British. Unfortunately in ordinary statistics of this nature the second generation is usually put down as native born with no hint as to parentage beyond some peculiarity of name.—Atlantic Monthly.

REV. E. S. NICHOLSON.

Father of the Indiana Liquor Law Which Is Sustained by the Court.

Rev. E. S. Nicholson, the father of the Indiana liquor law, which has been pronounced constitutional by the Supreme Court of the State, has an interesting personality apart from being the originator of the law. Mr. Nicholson first came into prominence in 1894, when he was made President of the Good Citizens' League, which has its headquarters at Kokomo. At that time he was the editor and proprietor of the Kokomo Times, a daily paper founded by him about three years ago. He had recently removed to Kokomo from Russiaville, where he was editor of the Observer. Only 30 years old, his ability was recognized by his older companions, who made him president of the league and leader of the law and order movement. He ran for the Legislature and was elected, and at once set about the work of the law which was to regulate the saloons. Mr. Nicholson was born thirty-four years ago at Elizabethtown, Ind., of Quaker parents. He studied at Earlham College and was graduated in 1885 with the degree of B. A. He likewise was prepared for the ministry, but never preached. After teaching school four years he took up journalism and has since remained an editor.

A Curious Camp Stove.

An Aroostook, Maine, woodsman, E. B. White, has a curious and unique arrangement for cooking food over an open fire, which he calls a camp range. It consists of a three-fourths-inch iron gas pipe, eighteen inches long, hammered to a point at one end and plugged with metal, through which there are three small holes, each of a size fit to hold the end of a wire, say, three-sixteenths of an inch in diameter. Loops are made of wire, into which skillets, pails, pans or other tapering cooking utensils are fitted snugly. A washer of sheet iron fits over the end of the gas pipe and is prevented from slipping clear down by a snug metal wristband. The washer serves to brace the wires. The gas pipe is driven into the ground and red embers and coals placed about it. The food is cooked easily and quickly. A coffee pot hanger is also used, it being bent up so that the long coffee pot will swing clear of the fire. Had White cared to do so, he might have made a snug sum of money by patenting and selling his handy contrivance.—Lewiston (Maine) Journal.

MAKES THIEVES CONFESS.

Frightened by a Skull Worked by Electrical Contrivances.

A hideous grinning, illuminated human skull is one of the accessories of the eleventh precinct police station in Chicago, and it is said to hold a better record as a criminal "spotter" than any detective on the Windy City force. The skull, which is that of a male negro, was found on top of a shed in 48th street last October. Lieut. Samuel C. Rank is a frugal and an inventive man. Many of the more troublesome residents of the precinct, especially around 50th and State streets, are superstitious negroes who are deathly afraid of anything apparently supernatural.

THE SKULL.

It was as a means of dealing with this class of citizens that the Lieutenant hit upon the scheme of illuminating the skull. He had blood-red pains of glass fitted in the eye sockets, and an electrical connection makes them flash fire, while at the same time the jaws open and shut with a snapping sound. The effect of the "death's head" is marvelous. It is claimed that it has never failed to make a criminal give a correct account of his doings when brought before it.

Eighty stolen bicycles have been recovered since December by means of the skull's flashing eyes and grinning, snapping jaws, and a large quantity of clothing, of which all trace had been lost, was also found through a confession brought forth by the skull. The most notable confession caused by the "death's head" was that of John H. Farver, alias "Viper." He confessed to having stolen thirty-five bicycles, and told where they could all be found.—New York World.

WON A FINE PIANO.

Miss Ewing Captured the Prize in a Vocal Contest at Mexico, Mo.

Seldom it is that a budding young girl whose reputation as a singer is confined almost wholly to her own society, and who has not been advertised by a Grau or a Locke, receives the equivalent of $1,000 for the rendition of three songs before a single audience. That was the good fortune however, of Miss Annie Ewing, of Jefferson City, Mo., and her friends throughout the State are pouring congratulations upon her, not simply because she won a splendid prize, but for the further reason that competent judges decided that she deserved it for possessing a superb voice, trained to a nicety. Miss Ewing and five other vocalists entered a contest at Hardin College, Mexico, Mo., and the prize, a piano valued at $1,000, was awarded to the Jefferson City candidate. Her first selection was, "Oh, Patria, Tu che Accendi," and she beautifully interpreted Rossini's great composition, her rich contralto voice being in perfect control. The theme carried her away, and the audience of music-loving people, representing several States, paid her a great ovation. She also sang Viedlinger's "Serenade" and Jensen's "Lehn Deine Wang' an Meine Wang," with equally good effect. Miss Ewing is a handsome blonde, with the fairest of complexions, auburn hair and azure blue eyes. She is a great social favorite, not only at her home in Jefferson, but is popular at Hardin, and the decision in her favor meets with hearty approval among a large circle of Miss Ewing's admirers.

New Means of Light.

An entirely new form of lighting was used at a dinner party a few weeks ago in Rue de Longchamps, Paris. Neither gas, oil lamps, electricity nor candles were used, but every object was rendered phosphorescent. "The ceiling," said one of the guests, "sparkled with diamonds; pictures, flowers, carpets emitted luminous rays; the ladies' dresses were illuminated; the very complexions sent forth beams of moony light, while their hands gleamed like so many well-o'-the-wisps." The phosphorescent face powder used on this occasion was invented by a French chemist, M. Charles Henry. It is described as "lending a moonlight radiance, very becoming to some.

BAGGAGE OF AMERICANS.

Luxurious but Compact, and Suited to Their Every Want.

While the Englishman traveling may have six or eight pieces of baggage, the American, who prefers to have his luggage in a compact form, may have but one. Instead of carrying his belongings in a number of separate packages he puts them in a trunk in which there are separate compartments for all necessary articles. In this trunk there is a place for his dressing case and a place for his silk hat and a place for his shoes. There are compartments for a dress suit and for other suits, and for shirts, and for underwear, and places for neckwear and other articles. Such trunks are made of sole leather, of rawhide, and of canvas, and of various sizes. An American going on a journey of considerable extent and duration might get all he desired to carry into one such trunk.

He would have a number of traveling bags to meet different requirements, and he would have also a small trunk for use upon occasion, perhaps upon a yachting trip; though he might carry aboard a yacht a bag or a larger trunk. For trips of a day or two, perhaps, into the country, he has a dress suit case. These cases are made nowadays of various dimensions, some of them to hold a number of suits. There is one deep dress suit case that has at one end a compartment for a silk hat; the sale of these is increasing somewhat, but still it is small altogether, such a case being rather cumbersome. The man going on a short trip where a high hat would be required, as, for instance, for a coaching party, would usually carry a hat case. Hat cases are made to carry, besides a silk hat, a derby hat and a soft hat; and hat cases are made in which two hats may be carried—a silk hat and a pearl hat, as well as a derby and a soft hot—and such cases are not very much higher than an ordinary hat case, the additional room required for the added hat being not so great as might seem necessary.

If he goes into hunting and fishing he has a hunting trunk made conveniently arranged to carry his shooting and fishing clothing and equipment, and with a compartment suitably fitted for his guns; his fishing rods are usually carried, however, in a sole leather case made especially for that purpose.—New York Sun.

Columbian Stamps and Coins.

Of all the different denominations of Columbian stamps, there are only three that are out of use entirely. They are the fifty ones, the $1 stamp, which is worth about $6, and the $2 stamp, on which there is also a good premium. The $3, $4 and $5 stamps are yet for sale at the Washington postoffice, and various other denominations may be obtained at different postoffices. A number of 10-cent stamps were offered to an agent recently, but agents are not anxious to invest in the Columbian issue. They can buy those stamps sometimes for less than face value from individuals who secured large quantities while stamps were sold everywhere, and cannot, on account of the need of money, afford to wait for the premiums. Once in a great while a Columbian stamp is used in the current mail. Stamped envelopes of the Columbian issue bring a small premium. A complete set, consisting of five sizes of 1-cent envelopes, eight sizes of 2-cent, six sizes of 5-cent and three sizes of 10-cent envelopes, is worth $2. There is also a premium on the centennial postal cards, which were sold at the exhibition only, and are very rare.

Columbian half-dollars are not as much used as might be expected, from the fact that they are current coins. There is not more than $20 worth of that cast in the sub-treasury and the receipt is no more than about $10 on $20,000 of coin. They are sorted out and kept by themselves, and are not paid out unless asked for. The demand is slight, but it is expected that by Christmas time the business firms will want them to give out in change as a sort of an advertisement, for that is the way they did last Christmas. The treasury will then send to Washington after as many as are needed and exchange them for gold only in large quantities. The issue of 1892 is practically out of circulation, which is perhaps due to the fact that there is a premium on it. There is a Columbian quarter also, although few knew it, and less have seen one. Not even all who attended the World's Fair can claim the distinction of having seen one, and people who are supposed to know all about coin do not know the whereabouts of the Columbian quarter. Few money collectors have any dealings with the Columbian issue, and if asked why, they say "there is no money in it."—Boston Transcript.

How to Sleep Best.

The proper position of beds with regard to the point of the compass—that is, whether we should lie north and south, parallel to the earth's axis, or east and west, across it—is the puzzling problem propounded by Sir Benjamin Richardson in an English publication. If the head is turned west there is a tendency, it is said, to send the blood rushing to that organ. If the head is east the feet are affected in a similar way.

Sir Benjamin thinks that "if we should lie in the line of the axis due north and south it would be most probable that the rotation of the earth would produce no special effect on the blood in its course to or from the head." As for himself, he has tried all positions and sleeps best when his head is turned towards the United States. The only objection he has to it is that the sun wakes him up a little earlier than he likes.

Checkers a Very Ancient Game.

Thanks to the investigations of our modern Egyptologists, the Egyptian temples, pyramids and tombs, statues, inscriptions and pictorial representations have at last yielded up their secret, and enable us to assert, without hesitation, that in the far remote period of 4,000 years, in the land of the Pharaohs, the game of draughts was a favorite amusement in the houses of the poor and the mansions of the rich. From these monumental records and pictorial representations we learn what the daily domestic life, amusements, manners and customs of the ancient Egyptians were. Let our readers inquire at the free library for "Egyptian Antiquities," by Sir J. Gardner Wilkinson, and turn to pages 188 to 193, and I promise them a treat. There they will see several illustrations copied from the tombs and temples. One of these portrays King Rameses—as portrayed on the walls of his palace at Thebes—engaged in the game of draughts with the ladies of the household. The modern Egyptians still play the game, with pieces very similar to the pieces used by their ancestors. Several specimens of these may be seen in cases forty-four and forty-five in the British museum. The Egyptians of today call their game dameh, and play it very much in the same way as we do ours.

HEEDLESS WOMEN.

They Pay a Sad Penalty for Their Neglect.

If women only heeded first symptoms—nervousness, backache, headache, lassitude, loss of appetite and sleep; palpitation, melancholy, "blues," etc., and at once removed the cause with Lydia E. The Vegetable Compound at once removes all irregularities of the monthly period; inflammation, ulceration and displacement of the womb, and all female troubles. All druggists have it. Write to Mrs. Pinkham at Lynn, Mass., if you wish for advice, which she will give you free.

COST OF CAMPAIGNS.

TAKES A "MINT OF MONEY" TO RUN A GREAT PARTY.

Tremendous Work of a National Executive Committee—How It Is Divided Among Minor Committees—New York Usually the Headquarters.

How the Work Is Done.

No two presidential campaigns are conducted alike, but all are directed by national executive committees, whose headquarters are always the vortex of political activity during the continuance of the fight. Down to the present both the great parties have always had campaign headquarters in New York, though more than once determined moves have been made to locate them elsewhere. Washington has been the favorite place for a large contingent of the Republican leaders. Those who favor New York urge that it is the center of the densest voting population in the United States; that it affords unequaled facilities for printing the millions on millions of "documents" used, but the partisans of Washington represent that they have the Government printing office, from whose presses are turned out the "documents" that have been delivered as speeches in Congress so as to be sent through the mails free.

It has long been an unwritten law with both political parties that their headquarters should be on Fifth avenue in New York city, and the first thing to be done after a private house has been leased for campaign headquarters is to make its interior look as little like a dwelling as possible by putting up wire lattices and iron barred doors in every conceivable place. Then the outside of the building is decorated with flags, and a man is placed in charge, his duties being to act as doorkeeper so as to prevent any one, under any pretext, not personally known to him from visiting the rooms occupied by the committee. None but the truly elect can get by this man, and it is a pathetic thing in campaign times to watch the victims of this stony-eyed creature, as they sit and sit the livelong day in the vain hope that by and by they will be admitted to the regions above.

Campaign headquarters are always in charge of an executive committee, the members of which, with the exception of the chairman, are chosen from among themselves by the members of the national committee. The chairman is selected by the presidential candidate himself. Mr. Hanna was a long time in McKinley's eye, just as Hon. Tom Carter was in Harrison's eyes, and Mr. Harrity was in Cleveland's eyes in 1892. The duties of the position are complicated enough to upset the average intelligence. The chairman practically bears the weight of the burden on his shoulders. He is in a constant state of terror lest some acts have been committed either by himself or some of his subordinates that will "Burchardize" the campaign. The number of letters he is obliged to answer daily is enormous. His callers are numbered by the thousands. His every action is watched by critics and fault finders, and he knows it; and the wonder is, not that the reputation of the executive chairman for political sagacity sometimes suffers during the campaign, but rather that at its close he has any reputation at all. There is always a treasurer and a secretary, a speakers' committee, a finance committee, a printing committee, and a committee on election methods. Naturally, the treasurer is at the head of the finance committee, and he not only has to strain every faculty to secure sufficient contributions to meet the enormous expenses of the campaign, but also to manage the funds so as to prevent a deficit at the end.

CHAIRMAN OF PRINTING COMMITTEE.

The printing committee generally has charge of the editorial work as well as the printing. The most important piece of this branch of campaigning is the production of the text book. In the eyes of the committee this volume is always the greatest piece of literature of the current year. Sometimes it is the work of a large number of party wise men; sometimes of only a few. The text book issued by one of the parties in 1892 was produced by a young attache of the headquarters, who put it to press without so much as even showing the larger part of it to all the members of the committee. Of course there was a row over that book. There were some who declared it to be nothing more or less than maniacal drivel, while others seemed to regard it as infallible.

FOREVER DISTRIBUTING DOCUMENTS.

One committee tried to put out 100,000,000 documents, or one and a third to every person in the country. This was at the rate of 10,000,000 documents a week. The printer farmed out most of the work to job offices, but could not get it fast enough. He was obliged to put in a great number of presses himself at ruinous expense. His bills came dangerously near to $200,000. The printing department, together with the binding department, occupied two or three floors of a huge building, a whole block long, and several hundred men, women, boys and girls, were kept busy every week day and Sunday, and many nights, during the campaign, in getting the matter off. The expenses constituted one of the greatest eyesores of the whole campaign with the methodical treasurer of the executive committee.

Some executive committees run very heavy to oratory, and such committees send out hundreds of speakers. There are always a number of men who are really excellent talkers that desire to go on the stump, and do not wish to be paid anything beyond their actual expenses. But it may be said without showing disrespect to these men, that the majority of those who apply to executive committees for stump work might well be described as old-fashioned sailing ships are spoken of by steamship men, as mere "wind jammers," and the rooms of a speakers' bureau sometimes contain a most remarkable assortment of vociferous freaks. This is equally true of the executive committees of both parties.

Occasionally an executive committee employs a man to look after a lot of details too fatiguing or trivial for members of the committee themselves, who, although he may nominally be connected with one special department, has to do with the details of nearly every department. One man who was so employed by an executive committee a few campaigns back had to audit the printers' bills, to wrestle with the artists who drew cartoons for the committee, to draw up the contracts with those who desired to furnish services of one kind and another, to look after the work of the newspapers published in foreign tongues, and attend to a thousand other unconsidered trifles. When the campaign was over this man, whose work had averaged from fourteen to sixteen hours a day, felt as though he had just awakened from a horrible and seemingly endless nightmare. He had much to do with newspapers published for the sole benefit of Finns, Huns, Scandinavians, Spaniards, Frenchmen and Hebrews, who speak and read only Yiddish—to say nothing of the Germans. He would order from 3,000 to 10,000 papers containing paid political articles, and had to visit and inspect the press rooms, and see that the papers were really counted, printed and delivered.

THE SPEAKERS' COMMITTEE CHAIRMAN.

The expenses of a national committee vary. One spent $1,900,000 a few years ago in less than three months. The average is estimated at $1,500,000. There are hundreds of avenues open for the escape of this immense amount. Nearly every committee establishes several secret bureaus which are located away from the headquarters themselves. There are bureaus for the workingmen, bureaus for the Swedes and voters of other nationalities, and even bureaus for the liquor dealers, whose favor is generally courted by both parties. Curiously enough, more than one committee has maintained a temperance bureau contemporaneously with the liquor dealers' bureau. Among the miscellaneous items, too, come heavy expense. Thus the number of typewriters bought and worn out by each committee is very large. In 1892 one of the committees gave a single order for 250 machines. The selection of employes, of which each committee must have 100 or more, in addition to the speakers and traveling agents, is an important and delicate task, since the persons engaged must be of the same political faith as the committee itself, and must be capable of exceedingly hard work for sometimes sixteen hours a day. They are generally well paid, for it always happens that a few get their names on the pay-roll whose sole qualification is a political pull.

The securing of a complete list of the voters in each State is a matter attended with great care and expense. It has to be accomplished in a few weeks' time, and a well-paid executive head and numerous subordinates are employed. Such an institution should have years, instead of months, in which to do its work, for its poll lists need constant revision, and its operations must be continuous to be effective. The nearest approach to a perfect organization in this respect is the American Protective Tariff League of New York. It is unendingly engaged in revising poll lists and forever printing and distributing documents. It employs a large number of people, and has agents in every section of the country. The Democratic Reform Club also began this class of systematic work in 1892. The work of these organizations, while independent of the regular campaign committees, is particularly valuable in having within its scope the address and affiliations of nearly every voter in the United States.

THE DOORMAN.

THE ONLY WOMAN MASON.

She "Peeked," and Being Caught Was "Initiated"

There has been just one woman Mason. She "peeked," was caught in the act and forthwith initiated as the one means by which to keep her silent. She was Lady Aldsworth.

An authentic portrait of her Ladyship hangs in the Masonic Temple in New York among the rows of bearded men who have won Masonic distinction. She was painted in the very act of laying her hand upon the "booke" and swearing eternal loyalty to the Masonic vows. Lady Aldsworth's brother, who was the son of an Irish nobleman, entertained his lodge on an evening that is vaguely located in the last century at his home, Domarite Castle.

His sister, who was not free from the vice of her sex, crept to the corridor outside the room where the meeting was being held and watched the ceremonies until she became so overcome by the sense of her transgression that, woman-like, she shrieked and fainted. This aroused the sentinel, who, in turn, summoned his brother Masons. They deliberated until 3 o'clock in the morning, hesitating how best to protect themselves. Then it was decided to have gentle Lady Aldsworth register the Masonic vows. She did so, and became the only woman Mason who ever lived. Whether she proved an efficient member has never been recorded, but it is to be hoped that the gallant Masons who initiated her never had reason to regret their step.

LADY ALDSWORTH.

Professor in English (to young man)—How would you punctuate the following: "The beautiful girl, for such she was, was passing down the street." Student—I think, professor, I would make a dash after the beautiful girl.—Woonsocket Reporter.

All Chipped In.

They were sitting in the Tenderfoot saloon, recalling the New York Tribune, and were discussing the shooting of a man who had sold a "salted" mine to a number of investors. Finally old Free Silver Bill, who generally summed up the verdict on every event for the gathering, said: "Boys, if they is to be a monyment put up to the deceased, I move that we chip in an' have cut on it some words I once seen on a grave in California. It will show we are not down on the galoot as long as he is good an' dead, an' it will be a powerful hint to others to go an' not do likewise. Them words wuz as follows: 'Death loves a mining shark.'" The boys chipped in at once.

Why?

Mr. Bloobumper—My dear, you have an irritating habit of asking "Why" after every statement I make. Now, won't you try to break yourself of that habit?

Mrs. Bloobumper—Why, certainly, my love. I'm sure I didn't know did. I'll certainly try to break myself of the habit as you suggest. But why?—Judge.

An Appeal for Assistance.

The man who is charitable to himself will listen to the mute appeal for assistance made by his stomach, or his liver, in the shape of divers dyspeptic qualms and uneasy sensations in the regions of the glands that secrete his bile. Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, my dear sir, or madam—as the case may be—is what you require. Hasten to use, if you are troubled with heartburn, wind in the stomach, or note that your skin or the whites of your eyes are taking a sallow hue.

The Czar's Double.

The Duke of York was not present at the coronation services of the Czar of Russia, and for a peculiar reason. He is an almost exact counterpart of the Czar in personal appearance and the Russian police refused to be responsible for his safety while in Russia, claiming that it would have been equal to guarding two Czars. What that would mean none know better than the Russians.

Gladness Comes

With a better understanding of the transient nature of the many physical ills, which vanish before proper efforts—gentle efforts—pleasant efforts—rightly directed. There is comfort in the knowledge, that so many forms of sickness are not due to any actual disease, but simply to a constipated condition of the system, which the pleasant family laxative, Syrup of Figs, promptly removes. That is why it is the only remedy with millions of families, and is everywhere esteemed so highly by all who value good health. Its beneficial effects are due to the fact, that it is the one remedy which promotes internal cleanliness without debilitating the organs on which it acts. It is therefore all important, in order to get its beneficial effects, to note when you purchase, that you have the genuine article, which is manufactured by the California Fig Syrup Co. only and sold by all reputable druggists.

If in the enjoyment of good health, and the system is regular, laxatives or other remedies are then not needed. If afflicted with any actual disease, one may be commended to the most skillful physicians, but if in need of a laxative, one should have the best, and with the well-informed everywhere, Syrup of Figs stands highest and is most largely used and gives most general satisfaction.

"Cut Down Expenses."
Battle Ax PLUG

A woman knows what a bargain really is. She knows better than a man. "BATTLE AX" is selected every time by wives who buy tobacco for their husbands. They select it because it is an honest bargain. It is the biggest in size, the smallest in price, and the best in quality. The 5 cent piece is almost as large as the 10 cent piece of other high grade brands.

"A Scorcher."

BattleAx PLUG

A GREAT BIG PIECE FOR 10 CENTS

Tobacco Dealers say, that "BATTLE AX" is a "scorcher" because it sells so fast. Tobacco Chewers say, it is a "scorcher" because 5 cents' worth goes so far. It's as good as can be made regardless of cost. The 5 cent piece is almost as large as the other fellows' 10 cent piece.

—When we consid r that the intestines are about five times as large as the body, we can realize the intense suffering experienced when they become inflamed. DeWitt's Colic and Cholera Cure sub dues inflammation at once and completely removes the difficulty. Davenport, the druggist.

Some sneak thief broke into Mr. Fishler's residence Monday night and stole his clothes and took them outside and went through them, taking such things as they thought of value. They got some change and a gold watch. A bottle of medicine and some letters in his coat pocket were thrown to one side. He thinks the thief got into the house, took the clothes and threw them out of the window and then got out and set down on a box near the house and went through. No clue.

Weak Lungs

Hot weather won't cure weak lungs. You may feel better because out of doors more, but the trouble is still there. Don't stop taking your because the weather happens to be warm. If you have a weak throat, a slight hacking cough, or some trouble with the bronchial tubes, summer is the best time to get rid of it. If you are losing flesh there is all the more need of attention. Weakness about the chest and thinness should never go together. One greatly increases the danger of the other. Heal the throat, cure the cough, and strengthen the whole system now. Keep taking Scott's Emulsion all summer.

For sale by all druggists at 50c and $1.00.

$1 00 for 10c.

A gentleman from Farmer City, Ill., writes: "I have used your remedy, Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, and find it an excellent medicine My whole family use it. Our baby is only six months old and takes it freely. I would not be without it if the 10c size cost me $1.00." Line in S. Payne. In 10c, 50c and $1.00 sizes at Davenport the druggist's. 2731

In One or Two Days.

In the vicinity of Boquet, Westmoreland county, Pa., almost any one can tell you how to cure a lame back or stiff neck. They dampen a piece of flannel with Chamberlain's Pain Balm and bind it on the affected parts and in one or two days the trouble has disapperred. This same treatment will promptly cure a pain in the side or chest. Mr. E. M. Frye, a prominent merchant of Boquet, speaks very highly of Pain Balm, and his recommendations have had much to do with making it popular there. For sale by Davenport, the druggist. 2731

Recovery Due to It.

—Mrs. Rhodie Noah, of this place, was taken in the night with cramping pains and the next day diarrhœa set in. She took half a bottle of blackberry cordial, but got to relief. She then sent to me to see if I had anything that would help her. I sent her a bottle of Chamberlain's Colic Cholera and Diarrhœa Remedy and the first dose relieved her. Another of our neighbors had been sick for about a week had tried different remedies for diarrhœa, but kept getting worse. I sent him this same remedy. Only four doses of it were required to cure him. He says he owes his recovery to this wonderful remedy.—Mrs. Mary Mary Sibley, Sidney, Mich. For sale by Davenport, the druggist. 2731

Don't Get The Wrong Impression,

For a Psychopathic Physician is a common man among common people. He is not Christ, nor is he a Seventh Son. But if true to his work as an honest man to his people, studying natural law, to relieve the suffering humanity.

And if he is a Man, he would not wish to rate himself, as insignificant as he is, with a beloved Christ.

Psychopatic Treatment is a science taught by God and man. Why? Because you must learn natural law: first, because the patient is governed by natural law that we learn from God; second, we learn the anatomy of the human body. and by framing them both together we have one of the most beautiful lessons God ever gave to man.

The Great Convention.

For President, W. J. Bryan, of Nebraska.
For Vice President, Arthur Sewall, of Maine.

The following reports are continued from the DAILIES of last week, and are inserted to show in what order and on what days the work was done.

Wednesday's Daily.

When the COURIER went to press yesterday Chairman Daniels was just making his speech after which the convention adjourned till ten o'clock this morning. The platform as given out will be as follows:

The platform will declare for unlimited coinage of silver at ratio of 16 to 1. Denounces issunace government bonds in times of peace. Demands that power to issue notes be taken away from national banks. Declares for tariff for revenue only. Demands enactment constitutional amendment to permit an income tax. Expresses sympathy for Cuban belligerants. Demands restriction immigration of pauper labor. Favors liberal pensions to old soldiers Denounces the pacific funding bill. Opposes third term for president to any man. Denounces extravagance last republican congress.

It is said committee on credentials have decided to throw out gold delegates from Michigan and Nebraska.

Senator White, of California, will permanently preside over convention.

Twenty-four Pennsylvania delegates have decided to vote for Bland.

Convention called to order 10:51 a. m.

Bland marching club just entered. Crowd cheering.

Gov. Hogg, Texas, requested to address convention. Takes platform amid cheers. Band playing Dixie.

He predicts success in November. Denounces republican platform. Protection as only in interest of wealthy, and against farmer and working man. He says a republican corruption fund is being formed to carry Illinois, Ohio and other states. He advocates free coinage of silver and denounces republican financial platform as in interest of foreign nations, and finishes by asking all sores be healed after convention and party will march to victory.

Blackburn, of Kentucky, addresses convention. Says majority American people are suffering, and looks to this convention to right its wrongs. Says Christ drove from the temple a better set of men than those in money power for many years.

Overmeyer, of Kansas now addressing convention.

Altgeld addressing convention. Says come to help formulate policy for benefit of America. That nearly everything is under mortgage. That gold standard lowered price of farm products while farmers have had to pay more for what they buy. Loudly applauded. Says gold democrats claim they love their country and still are doing all they can for English moneyed men.

Williams, of Massachusetts, addresses convention. Pleaded for harmony and doing away with sectionalism.

Credentials committee reported against gold delegates from Michigan and Nebraska, and ask for further time to consider the individual credentials of Michigan delegates, and asks that Nebraska delegates be seated.

Convention adjourned till 5 p. m.

Thursday's Daily.

The convention convened at 5 o'clock yesterday and remained in session till 9:36 when they adjourned till 10 this morning.

Chicago—Weather cloudy and cool. Text of platform published this morning. Practically as given in yesterday's DAILY. Three hours were given to discussion of which senator Hill will have last half hour. Senator White is quoted as saying struggle will likely be a lengthy one.

At 10:45 the delegates came in slowly Prominent men cheered as they enter.

Committee on platform have added an anti A. P. A. plank, and resolution granting civil and religious belief to every citizen.

Convention called to order at 10:57

Senator Jones, of Arkansas presents report committe on platform. Various points are cheered. Gives each side one hour and twenty minutes for debate.

A minority report of committee on resolutions will be presented by senator Hill in which strong exception of silver coinage plank is taken and will contain strong endorsement of President Cleveland.

Minority report being read. Senator Hill to speak in turn. Report advocating that all money be kept at parity with gold. Loudly cheered.

Plank endorsing Pres. Cleveland administration loudly cheered. Many delegates and larger part of audience on their feet.

Tillman, of South Carolina offering amendment, and is to speak fifteen minutes. He favors minorty report and refers to way lying newspapers have misrepresented him the pitchfork man from South Carolina. Cheers.

Says we are to inaugurate a war to liberate the white slave. Cheers.

Senator Vilas speak for minority report says this is sectional issue. Asks if New York and Penn. got its great increase in wealth in last decade honestly, says increased in wealth more than 25 western and southern states put together. Asks where are New York leader now? Cries of "In the Soup."

Tillman says will have his say if he stands here till sundown. Says Cleveland been death of democratic party so far as he could be. Referrs to John Sherman and Cleveland republicanism, Cheers.

Senator Jones, of Arkansas addressing convention in favor of majority report, says this is not sectional question. Cheers. Asks when men are coming over to great question from all section How in Gods name can any one claim it is sectional. Hill just ascending great cheering all over hall.

Hill appealing to conventiou not put eastern men in position where their hand be tied. Says should declare only in favor of international bi-metalism, says platform has not one word in favor. He is pointing out danger to business and to party if platform endorsed on financial question.

Senator Vilas assends platform.

Much confusion many delegates on their feet.

Vilas begins speech favoring minority report but is interupted by cheers.

Vilas reiterating and eneorsing Hills arguments which says were so ably presented by that. Points out increase in wages of working men under monetary system of last dacade and asks if that system is to be readaly done away.

Russell, of Mass., takes platform and is given three cheers.

Hays can see nothing but defeat and disaster in this movement.

Bryan, of Nebraska take Platform, says we are here under solemn and bending instructions to support the will of the majority of the people in this matter of money, says he favors an income tax, says not a state here today in favor of gold that is not in control of republican party.

Friday's Daily.

FIFTH BALLOT

Bryan was declared the unanimous choice of the convention for President on the democratic ticket.

Adjourned till 8 p. m.

Saturday's Daily.

The editor of this paper was present all the week at the big convention and at every session till the nomination of president was settled. A few words as to our impressions and the events that occurred in connection with this great meeting, will, we trust, be of interest. First as to the candidate.

FOR PRESIDENT

Wm. J. Bryan, of Nebraska, is a young man, the youngest man ever nominated for this, the highest and most honorable office in the gift of man in either hemisphere. His age is a little over thirty-six. But he has seen a good deal of public and political life, and in that regard has had as much experience as many of our presidents who went into office at an older age. But there is in his nomination something more significant than the matter of age. It is the fact that he is the first man ever nominated by any party, from a state west of the Mississippi. This is a great step, and should add tens of thousands of votes to his strength. The east has had the control long enough, and while we are far from making the demagogic outcry against the east, now so common, we still believe the change of the center of power and influence is a valuable step in the right direction. Next after our own Governor Matthews, Mr. Bryan seems to us the best. But as we said. it is the change of locality that will prove of even greater value to us.

IN THE CONVENTION

The convention was one of the largest and most enthusiastic ever seen We have been present at three others, and this was the greatest. It was also, one of the most enthuiastsc. It was almost uncontrollable. Yet with all its enthusiasm and lack of control, there was not much quarreling except in the speeches and these could not be considered a quarrel. The speakers simply took opposite sides and spoke earnestly. Their followers cheered them wildly.

THE GHOST DANCE

Twice during the convention there happened wild scenes. After howling themselves tired, someone in the delgations, would snatch out of its socket, the standard of their state, and go marching around the delegate area. Soon others would do the same, and then there would be the spectacle of state standards dancing up and down in a wild hilarious jig. And in two instances, these standards were brought together into a group, one being added to the group each moment as the feelings of the delegates were worked higher. This was the case, when on the fourth ballot, the stampede to Bryan began. He was gaining ground rapidly, and some states changed to him. This started a stampede and soon one state after another jerked up its standard and carried it and stood holding it near the Nebraska standard. In a few minutes half the state standards were grouped about the Nebraska standard, forming an exciting picture. There were cheers from 20,000 throats or more, and wild shouts for Bryan. The audience would yell for other states, naming them, to go over and help Nebraska. In one or two states there was a struggle for the standard. A man went to the Ohio delegation and persuaded a part of their delegates to yell for Bryan, and then with their help, caught hold of the standard, other Ohio delegates objected as they still stood by their own candidate McLean. There was a hard tussle and the staff of the standard was broken in two, and the man who had the upper part containing the name and the flag let his apponent keep the staff while he ran over to Nebraska, and showed the big standard of Ohio with its 64 delegates votes, standing in the group with Nebraska. The yells redoubled and everything went wild. Soon the call of the roll was resumed, but it was plain that Bryan had received the necessary two thirds of the vote, and ballotting stopped. After it was announced that he was nominated, the cheering gradually died down, as the people as well as delegates were worn out.

Monday's Daily.

We add the following points of interest to what we had Saturday. There were many others, but we cannot give all.

GIRLS AND BOIES.

On Thursday evening between nine and ten, there was a strange scene. Boies had just been put in nomination in a very stirring speech, and at its close, the great crowd went to cheer-

DOINGS OF THE DAY.

SUMMARY OF THE NEWS OF THE WEEK.

Eventful Happenings in Every Known Hemisphere—Fires, Accidents, Crimes, Politics, Religion, Commerce and Crops, Sandwiched with Minor Affairs.

COMES SUDDENLY.

Death of Hon. Frank Hurd of Toledo, Ohio.

Toledo special: Hon. Frank Hurd died a few minutes before 9 o'clock Friday morning. His death was caused by several strokes of apoplexy. Ten days ago he was taken with a slight case of dysentery, which made it necessary for him to remain in his room. It was not considered dangerous, however, and he gained rapidly from the effect of the attack. The city is in mourning over the death of its most prominent citizen.

Mr. Hurd's death occurred at his room in the Boody House. There were present at the time Mr. and Mrs. Robert Clark and Mr. Henry Curtis of Mount Vernon, O., and four physicians of this city. Mrs. Clark is a sister of Mr. Hurd. The only other surviving relative is Mrs. John Deleno, granddaughter of Hon. Columbus Deleno of Mount Vernon. Mr. Hurd was unconscious several hours prior to his death. The remains will be taken to Mount Vernon for interment.

The Elks Elect Officers.

The Grand Lodge of Elks in session at Cincinnati elected the following officers for the ensuing year:

Grand Exhalted Ruler—Meade D. Detweller of Harrisburg, Pa.

Grand Secretary—George A. Reynolds, Saginaw, Mich.

Grand Esteemed Leading Knight—B. M. Allen, Birmingham, Ala.

Grand Esteemed Royal Knight—Louis Hausser, Newark, N. J.

Grand Esteemed Lecturing Knight—Charles M. Foote, Minneapolis.

Grand Trustees—Jerome B. Fisher, Jamestown, N. Y.; Hunter V. Craycroft, Dallas, Tex.; George B. Cronk, Omaha, Neb.

Grand Treasurer—E. S. Orris, Beaver, Pa.

Court of Appeals—Thomas F. Turner, Chairman, Canton, O.; James A. McHenry, Cumberland, Md.; William C. Vanderlip, Boston, Mass.

Grand Tyler—Scott Holmes, Cincinnati.

Minneapolis was selected for the Grand Lodge meeting in reunion of 1897.

The Venezuelan Boundary.

Berlin special: The Herald news agency which circulated a report that a special envoy had arrived in Berlin from Caracas entrusted by the Venezuelan Government with authority to negotiate with the British Government a settlement of the boundary dispute between Great Britain and Venezuela, asserts that the envoy is General Pietri, and that he is accredited to both the Berlin and Madrid Governments. According to the Herald agency, General Pietri will present his credentials immediately upon the return of the Kaiser from his Nordland trip, and in the meantime will go to Madrid.

Loss by Fire.

The village of Marengo, eleven miles south of Mt. Gilead, in Morrow County, Ohio, was almost wiped out of existence by fire. The town has no fire protection, and as a high wind was raging the flames held full sway. Among the losers are Scott Van Alta, livery stable; C. W. Corbett, grocery store; Jack Scott, barber shop; Mrs. James, millinery store; Wm. Osborne, barber shop. The loss is estimated at about $10,000.

Choir Sues for Pay.

An action has been brought in the Circuit Court of Dekalb County, Ind., for $20, alleged to be due a choir which sang at the funeral services of the late Abraham Carbin. The officiating clergyman was given $5, but the choir was not paid. The defense is that singing is not a necessary expense at a funeral. This is the first case of the kind brought in Indiana.

Scared by a Wave.

As six young people were crossing the Ohio River in a frail canoe at Wellsburg, W. Va., a girl in the boat became frightened and jumped up when a high wave came along, capsizing the boat. The following were drowned: Alice Baxter, Kate Roberts and James Loyd. The others were saved.

She Tried to Commit Suicide.

Fanny Ross, a levee queen of Springfield, Ohio, attempted suicide by taking 35 grains of morphine and opium. Jealousy of "Bill" Gurnell's attention to other women is the supposed cause of the act. This is her sixth attempt.

Failures.

Judgments aggregating $100,000 have been entered against Jennings Bros. & Co., limited, operating the West Pennsylvania Steel works of Allegheny, Pa.

Democratic Convention.

After the nomination of Wm. J. Bryan for President, the Democratic Convention adjourned to meet Saturday morning at 10 o'clock.

A Spanish Jingo.

Madrid special: Senor Mellau, Carlist, speaking in the Chamber of Deputies, declared that the Government ought to be energetic in preparing for the inevitable conflict between the United States and Spain, in which Spain will acquit herself with honor.

The Boycott Raised.

Peoria, Ill., special: The difficulty between the Santa Fe Railroad and the Order of Railway Telegraphers has been adjusted, and the boycott existing since May 1, has been declared off.

An Ohio Cloudburst.

A cloudburst occurred near Bellaire, O., doing very great damage to property. Sheep, horses and cattle were drowned; trestle work and bridges and seven houses with contents and the large canning and preserving works of McMillen Bros. were swept away by the water in Wegee Creek.

Steamers Collide.

Glasgow special: The Allen State line steamer, State of Nebraska, Capt. Brown from New York, on June 26, for this port, refused to answer her helm while ascending the Clyde and collided with the warship Dido at the latter's moorings. Both vessels had several plates smashed.

The Nicholson Law in Terre Haute.

Seventy affidavits were filed against as many saloon-keepers in Terre Haute, Ind., for violation of the provisions of the Nicholson law which prohibits the presence of any person in a saloon during the hours when the sale of liquor is prohibited. These affidavits were the results of visits to the saloons on the Fourth of July and were filed by Dr. Tucker of Centenary Church, and others who have been taking part in these meetings. Visits were made to the saloons Sunday, but they were closed. It is understood the saloon men will offer as a defense that the Fourth of July is not a legal holiday in Indiana.

A Sad Suicide.

A very sad suicide has occurred in Richmond, Ind., the principal in it being one of the best known of the old residents of that city, Isaac Purcell, aged about 70 years. Of late his mind has been affected, owing to the death of his wife, with whom he had lived for over half a century, and he was placed in the county jail for safe keeping until further provision could be made for him. In making his rounds the Sheriff found him hanging in his cell dead. He had found a piece of rope about four feet long and had ended his life by means of it.

Lead Mine in Indiana.

Great excitement prevails in the vicinity of Memphis, in Clark County, Indiana, over the finding of a valuable vein of lead ore while workmen were sinking a well. The richness of the vein was so apparent that a quantity was immediately taken to a blacksmith's forge, where the yield of pure lead proved to be very heavy. The only question giving rise to speculation is the extent of the vein, but the find is sufficient to set every farmer in that neighborhood to prospecting. Already there has been a rapid advance in price of holdings.

War on Poor-Rooms.

A Criminal Court jury at Indianapolis fined Samuel L. Douglas $400 for registering and recording bets on horse races at his pool-rooms on North Illinois street. The case has been tried four times, and on three occasions the jury failed to agree. While the jury was out the gamblers at Douglas' rooms were offering bets of five to one that he would not be convicted. The miscarriages in this case have prevented the authorities from moving against the others, but the war on the pool-rooms will now begin in earnest.

War Waged on Spiritualism.

M. R. Covert of Anderson, Indiana, has closed a lease on a tract of land adjoining the Indiana spiritualist camp grounds and announces he will open an anti-spiritualist camp meeting July 16, when the spiritualists open. He is having signs painted, "All Mediums are Liars, Knaves, Frauds or Ignoramuses," and offers $500 to any medium who produces any phenomena he cannot reproduce and expose. He will post these in front of the entrance to the spiritualists' gates.

Tracked 10,000 Miles.

John W. Eigenhey, arrested in Cleveland for pension forgery, alleged to have been committed by him in Amsterdam, N. Y., was captured after being tracked by detectives 10,000 miles. Eighmy resided in Amsterdam from 1879 to 1893, and had a pension office in that city, as well as in Schenectady and Albany. He is a lawyer and was twice sent to prison for perjury. While in Amsterdam he was prominent in local politics, and served a term as justice of the peace.

A Heavy Forger.

It has developed that Lyman Rowe, who killed himself in Toledo, Ohio, a few days ago, while despondent, seemingly over domestic troubles, was a forger to the extent of at least $5,000, and possibly $9,000. Most of the paper is in his father's name. A friend who was victimized by Rowe threatened prosecution if the forgery was not made good. Rowe's suicide followed the next morning. An appraisal is being made of the extent of the dishonest papers.

Prisoners Overpower Guards.

The guards in the United States jail at Guthrie, O. T., were overpowered and fourteen prisoners escaped. Bill Doolin and Dynamite Dick, former members of the Dalton gang, who were charged with murder, led the outbreak. After having subdued the guards, the ringleaders called upon the thirty-nine prisoners to follow them, but only fourteen took advantage of the opportunity. A posse is in pursuit.

Killed by a Nail Head.

William Johnson, a carpenter of Butler, Ky, died suddenly. While driving a nail in a roof the head flew off, striking him in the eyeball. Physicians did not think the wound dangerous, but inflammation of the brain set in and death ensued in a few minutes.

Must Hang.

Judge Helm of Cincinnati, has overruled the motion for a new trial in the case of Alonzo Walling convicted of the murder of Pearl Bryan, and sentenced him to hang August 7.

Aged Woman Killed.

Mrs. Michael Lang, while driving to church in Woodsfield, Ohio, accidentally fell from her road cart and was instantly killed. She was 70 years of age.

Gas Explosion.

By an explosion of natural gas at the Evergreen Hotel, seven miles north of Allegheny, Pa., six persons were injured, three, it is feared, fatally.

THE BATTLE OF LOGIC

TILLMAN, HILL, BRYAN AND VILAS SPEAK.

Two Favor the Adoption of the Report of the Committee on Resolutions, and Two Do Battle for the Gold Standard.

Debate on the Platform.

In the discussion of the platform before the national Democratic convention Senators Hill and Vilas opposed the silver, bond, and income tax planks, and Senator Tillman and Congressman Bryan supported the committee's report. Senator Tillman spoke in part as follows:

Senator Tillman.

I came here from South Carolina. I came at an opportune time. South Carolina in 1860 led the fight in the Democratic party which resulted in its disruption. That disruption of that party brought about the war. The war emancipated the black slaves. We are here now leading a fight to emancipate the white slaves. I do not know whether I can truly say whether I am a representative of the entire South or not. I have been in fourteen States since April, making the announcement of a new declaration of independence that "16 to 1 or bust" is the slogan. In the last three or four or five years the Western people have come to realize that the condition of the South and the condition of the West was identical. Hence, we find to-day that the Democratic party of the West is here almost in solid phalanx appealing to the South—the South have responded—to come to their help to remove this yoke. It is not worth while for me to say that which will breed any discord between the sections, for such a thought does not harbor in my breast. I deny utterly having one ill thought or angry passion in my bosom in contemplating the wrong which we have endured. But if you have listened to the truth, and it has entered your brain, you are bound to acknowledge that the most of these improvements and money in the Eastern and Southern States where all this wealth has gone, has not gone for the benefit of the people, but the wealth is owned by a few men. Look at this city here—not a paper in it in favor of the money of the Constitution and of the people, every one of them howling day by day and abusing the majority of their fellow citizens in this section even, and further West by calling them howling derelicts and silver lunatics. We have, instead of a slave oligarchy, a money oligarchy. The one is more insolent than the other was. The only thing which can keep the movement—this revolution—from succeeding in sweeping this country from end to end is that we may submerge our patriotism here, forget the duty which we owe our people, follow after the banner of some individual rather than a principle, and fail to discharge that duty which we owe to the masses of selecting a man here whose record will fit this platform. The Senator from New York is to follow me. He despised the President of the United States in 1892. He has had cause since to more than despise him. But for some inscrutable reason, although he has been betrayed by his own party and his own State, he appears here as the sponsor and apologist for the administration. As Grover Cleveland stands for gold monometallism, and we have repudiated it, then when we are asked to indorse Grover Cleveland's administration, we are asked to write ourselves down as liars. We need money to spend or we cannot patronize the local merchants; if we have not money, the local merchant cannot order from the jobber; the jobber cannot order from the factory; and you see the sequence of consequences. The farmers of the Northeastern States are just as poor and just as hard up as we are. They are ready to join this army of emancipation. The Democracy are face to face with this issue, and it must be met. We of the South have burned our bridges so far as the Northeastern Democracy is concerned, as now organized. We have turned our faces to the West, asking our brethren of these States to unite with us in restoring the Government to the liberty of our fathers, or which our fathers left us. The West has responded by its representatives here. For myself, and for those of my State who came with me, we came here primarily to see that we had a platform which meant what it said and said what it meant. We have got it. Now give us any man you please who is a true representative of that platform—we have no choice—and we pledge you that every vote South of the Potomac will go to him.

Senator Hill.

I am a Democrat, but I am not a revolutionist. No matter what the provocation, you cannot drive me out of the Democratic party. That party has survived the attempt of every section of the country to divide it, to distract it; it lives to-day, and I hope it will long survive. My mission here is to unite, not to divide. The question which this convention is to decide is which is the best position to take at this time upon the financial question. It is not a question of patriotism. It is not a question of courage. It is a question of business. It is a question of finance. I think that the safest, the best course for this convention to have pursued, was to take the first step forward in the great cause of monetary reform by declaring in favor of international bimetallism. I do not think that we can safely ignore the monetary systems of other great nations. I know that it appeals to the pride of the average American to say that it matters not what other countries may do, we can arrange this matter for ourselves. But I beg to remind you, if that suggestion is carried out to its legitimate conclusion, you might as well do away with international treaties, you might as well do away with commercial treaties with other countries, you might as well do away with all the provisions in your tariff bills that have relation to the laws of other countries. What does this silver platform provide? Your committee has recommended for adoption a platform which makes the test of Democratic loyalty to hang upon a single ratio, and that 16 to 1. I doubt the wisdom of having entered into detail. I doubt the propriety of saying that 15½ or 17 is heresy and 16 is the only true Democratic doctrine.

HILL ADDRESSING THE CONVENTION.

With all due respect, I think it an unwise step; I think it an unnecessary step, and I think it will return to plague us in the future. Another suggestion: What was the necessity for putting into the platform other questions which have never been made the tests of Democratic loyalty before? Why we find the disputed question of the policy and constitutionality of an income tax. Will some one tell me what that clause means in this platform? Whenever before in the history of this country has devotion to an income tax been made the test of Democratic loyalty? Never. Another question I think should have been avoided is this: What was the necessity, what the propriety of taking up the vexed question of the issue of bonds for the preservation of the credit of the nation? Why not have left this financial question of the free coinage of silver alone? You have announced the bold policy that under no circumstances shall there ever be a single bond issued in times of peace. It means the virtual repeal of your resumption act; it means repudiation per se and simple. The statement is too broad, the statement is too sweeping; it has not been carefully considered. No, no, my friends; this platform has not been wisely considered. In your zeal for monetary reform you have gone out of the true path; you have turned from the true course, and in your anxiety to build up the silver currency you have unnecessarily put in this platform provisions which cannot stand a fair discussion. I dislike the Republican party. I dislike all their tenets. I have no sympathy with their general principles. Do not attempt to drive old Democrats out of the party that have grown gray in its service to make room for a lot of Republicans and old Whigs and other Populists that will not vote your ticket after all. No matter who your candidate may be in this convention, with possibly one exception, your Populist friends upon whom you are relying for support in the West and South, will nominate their own ticket and your silver forces will be divided. Mark the prediction which I make. My friends, I thus speak more in sorrow than in anger. You know what this platform means to the East. You must realize the result. But, calamitous as it may be to us, it will be more calamitous to you if, after all, taking these risks, you do not win the fight. My friends, we want the Democratic party to succeed. We want to build it up. We do not want to tear it down. We want our principles—the good, old principles of Jefferson, of Jackson, of Tilden, of hard money, of safe money, we want no greenback currency on our plates. We want no paper currency whatever. We want to stand by the principles under which we have won during the history of this country and made it what it is. If we keep in the good old paths of the party we can win. If we depart from them we shall lose.

Ex-Congressman Bryan.

On the 4th of March, 1895, a few Democrats, most of them members of Congress, issued an address to the Democrats of the nation, asserting that the money question was the paramount issue of the hour; asserting also the right of a majority of the Democratic party to control the position of the party on this paramount issue; concluding with the request that all believers in free coinage of silver in the Democratic party should organize and take charge of and control the policy of the Democratic party. Three months later, at Memphis, an organization was perfected, and the silver Democrats went forth openly and boldly and courageously proclaiming their belief, and declaring that if successful they would crystallize in a platform the declaration which they had made; and then began the conflict, with a zeal approaching the zeal which inspired the Crusaders who followed Peter the Hermit. Our silver Democrats went forth from victory unto victory until they are assembled now, not to discuss, not to debate, but to enter up the judgment rendered by the plain people of this country. In this contest brother has been arrayed against brother and father against son. The warmest ties of love and acquaintance and association have been disregarded. Old leaders have been cast aside when they refused to give expression to the sentiments of those whom they would lead and new leaders have sprung up to give direction to this cause of truth. Thus has the contest been waged, and we have assembled here under as binding and solemn instructions as were ever fastened upon the representatives of a people. We do not come as individuals. Why, as individuals we might have been glad to compliment the gentleman from New York, Senator Hill, but we knew that the people for whom we speak would never be willing to put him in a position where he could thwart the will of the Democratic party. I say it was not a question of persons; it was a question of principle; and it is not with gladness, my friends, that we find ourselves brought into conflict with those who are now arrayed on the other side. If they ask here why it is that we say more on the money question than we say upon the tariff question, I reply that if protection has slain its thousands the gold standard has slain its tens of thousands. If they ask us why we did not embody all these things in our platform which we believe, we reply to them that when we have restored the money of the Constitution, all other necessary reforms will be possible, and that until that is done there is no reform that can be accomplished. Mr. McKinley was nominated at St. Louis on a platform that declared for the maintenance of the gold standard until it should be changed into bimetallism by an international agreement. Mr. McKinley was the most popular man among the Republicans, and everybody three months ago in the Republican party prophesied his election. How is it to-day? Why, that man who used to boast that he looked like Napoleon—that man shudders to-day when he thinks that he was nominated on the anniversary of the battle of Waterloo. Not only that, but as he listens he can hear with ever-increasing distinctness the sound of the waves as they beat upon the lonely shores of St. Helena. Why this change? Ah! my friends, is not the change evident to any one who will look at the matter? It is no private character, however pure, no personal popularity, however great, that can protect from the avenging wrath of an indignant people the man who will either declare that he is in favor of fastening the gold standard upon this people, or who is willing to surrender the right of self-government and place legislative control in the hands of foreign potentates and powers. We go forth confident that we shall win. Why? Because upon the paramount issue in this campaign there is not a spot of ground upon which the enemy will dare to challenge battle. We care not upon which issue they force the fight. Mr. Carlisle said in 1878 that this was a struggle between the idle holders of idle capital and the struggling masses who produce the wealth and pay the taxes of the country, and my friends, it is simply a question that we shall decide, upon which side shall the Democratic party fight? Upon the side of the idle holders of idle capital, or upon the side of the struggling masses? They tell us that the great cities are in favor of the gold standard. I tell you that the great cities rest upon these broad and fertile prairies. Burn down your cities and leave our farms and your cities will spring up again as if by magic. But destroy our farms and the grass will grow in the streets of every city in this country. My friends, we shall declare that this nation is able to legislate for its own people on every question without waiting for the aid or consent of any other nation on earth and upon that issue we expect to carry every single State in this Union. It is the issue of 1776 over again. Our ancestors were the 3,000,000 who had the courage to declare their political independence of every other nation upon earth. Shall we, their descendants, when we have grown to 70,000,000, declare that we are less independent than our forefathers? No, my friends, it will never be the judgment of this people. Therefore we care not upon what lines the battle is fought. If they say bimetallism is good but we cannot have it till some nation helps us, we reply that, instead of having a gold standard because England has, we shall restore bimetallism and then let England have bimetallism because the United States has. If they dare to come out in the open and defend the gold standard as a good thing, we shall fight them to the uttermost, having behind us the producing masses of this nation and the world. Having behind us the commercial interests and the laboring interests and all the toiling masses, we shall answer their demands for a gold standard by saying to them you shall not press down upon the brow of labor this crown of thorns. You shall not crucify mankind upon a cross of gold.

Senator Vilas.

As a Democrat who has always maintained a reasonable obedience to be the first duty to accomplish the party's mission, I ask a hearing for the party's sake, which from youth I have devotedly believed necessary for our good and our liberty. I speak for a State which has maintained the Democratic faith under circumstances of trial and with constant fidelity. The question which you are about to decide is momentous, painfully so. Its right decision demands intelligence and reasoning. Order will reverse no law of nature and flat rage in vain against principles of finance. This convention has power over neither, but will be powerful for good as it shall respect that higher law which it cannot alter, though disobey and counter. The minority believe the proposal of the majority to be disobedient to that cause, recklessly and flagrantly so, and will cause a fearful penalty. I will not protract the argument. The Senator from New York has already stated the argument. His speech in direct proposal indicates what serious injury to the country may come in the change of the standard of values if that proposition is carried out. It will not produce bimetallism—far from it. It is in diametric opposition to the platform of 1892, which proposed an honest bimetallism, if the thing be possible at all, when conditions shall make it possible. And the superlative victory of this scheme will be the honest bimetallism contended for to-day in the belief that you will thereby secure bimetallism. Those who are in favor of this scheme believe that it will produce an abundance of money. This it will not do. It will shrink and not swell our currency. The silver dollar is no new thing to the United States. This scheme of silver monometallism is no new thing to this country, however novel to the ignorance, perhaps, of some of this generation. The silver standard is no new thing in the United States beginning without earning poverty and weakness and abiding until its then money was scant in this country; it possessed no gold; it was to get gold and with abundance, so far as the want of currency concerned, that the act of 1834 was passed. That was a Democratic measure. That was a measure created under Democratic leadership by Benton with the favor of Andrew Jackson. That was distinctly accused then a gold measure, and it raised the standard of gold in this country, but it raised this country from the grade of China and Japan and Mexico to a place among the foremost nations that maintain and rule the world's commerce and carry the colors of civilization to the farthest regions of the globe. The gold standard is now accused of responsibility for falling prices, but it is never credited when prices rise. In truth, it is entitled neither to the credit nor to the fault. The argument is a false deduction. Would you stop the fall of prices, suppress invention, extinguish enterprise, discard improvements in transportation—in short, smite with paralysis the forces of civilization? Take from the farmer the harvester and thrashing machine, and wheat will rise; snatch away from the planter the cotton-gin, the press, and cotton will rise. Let loose on society the things of destruction and they will soon deliver you from this supposed curse of civilization to a cheap abundance. But the gold standard has nothing to do with it. When any standard be fixed with continuing stability it has no more to do with price than a yard-stick or pair of scales.

Oh, fellow Democrats, why must you launch our old party on this wild career? What inspiration warrants our pursuit of that which the wisdom of mankind condemns? Who teaches us, with authority, a lesson in finance which the world of the highest civilization stands aghast at? Is it possible that this old party of Jefferson, this old Democratic party of constitutional law and liberty, shall thus fall before the machinations of a propaganda maintained by silver mine-owners which had its origin many years ago? It was not for such uses, it was not for such an end that the Democratic party was created. I protest with solemn earnestness, with sincerity and personal kindness, that the Democrats of the North ought not to have accepted this result. For thirty years they have stood at great personal cost fighting devotedly for the principles of Democracy, until in a restored Union, with equal rights shared by every part and every portion of the people, they have seen the triumph apparently of Democracy. And now, in the hour when we thought everything before us was well, we are to have this newly given strength exerted to pull down the pillars of the temple and crush us all beneath the ruins. So I hope for a better future for the Democratic party. The evil times, the evil days, though filled with darkness and with dangers, and compassed around with clouds, may pass. I hope to live to see a Democratic convention assembled here when all shall be united and the whole party restored to the vigor and power which is necessary for its service to the Constitution.

Presence of Mind.

A person who knows exactly the right thing to do in a sudden emergency, without stopping to think at all, deserves to have his presence of mind noted and commended. A German drum major has lately attained such distinction, with good reason.

A regiment of the imperial army, resting on a country road, was appalled to see a great bull madly pursuing a little child in a field which was near by, and yet so far away that the child could not be reached in time to save it, nor yet saved by the shooting of the animal.

The bull had his horns down, and all the soldiers were horrified to see that in another moment the child must be gored to death. For an instant no one seemed to know what to do, and then the drum major shouted to the buglers of the band, who stood near with their instruments in their hands, to sound a loud blast. They looked aghast.

"Sound, I say, for God's sake, to save the child!" he repeated.

Then the buglers blew a blast at the top of their lungs. The drum major knew that animals of the cow kind are so much affected by strange and high-pitched musical sounds that they seem compelled to imitate them. This bull proved to be no exception to the rule.

As soon as he heard the bugle blast he paused in his pursuit of the child, glanced toward the band, raised his head, and began to bellow madly. The buglers kept up as high and discordant a tumult as they could, and meantime soldiers were running to the rescue of the child.

Before the bull had finished his attention to the bugles the child was in a place of safety.

Great Waves.

A traveler who crossed the Atlantic in company with an army officer says that in spite of his sympathy for his companion's suffering from the pangs of seasickness, he could not help deriving considerable amusement from it.

Going into the stateroom one particularly rough day he found his companion tossing in his berth, muttering in what at first appeared to be a sort of delirium.

Stooping over to catch his words, the friend heard him say, "Sergeant, major, sergeant, major, or, only eighth corporal; brigadier general, brigadier general, ugh, lieutenant general, a-a-a-h!"

"What are you saying?" asked the friend in some alarm, as the sufferer looked piteously up at him after his last gasping "a-a-a-h!"

"Assigning the waves their rank," said the military man, rolling over toward the wall again. "There have been eight lieutenant generals within the last twenty minutes!"

Mourning.

Mourning takes odd forms in some countries, but none more curious than at Sitka, in India, where, when a woman loses her husband, she mourns him by painting the upper part of her face a deep jet black.

Will Make Clothing Cheap.

An electrical machine for cutting cloth has been invented which is capable of cutting out from 200 to 300 suits a day.

The sacred Bo tree of Ceylon is said to have sprung from a slip of the tree under which Buddha was born.

ENDEAVORERS MEET.

MAMMOTH CONVENTION ASSEMBLED AT WASHINGTON.

Railroads Swamped in Hauling the Crowds—Rain Storms Wreck One of the Big Tents—President Clarke and Secretary Baer Make Reports.

The Work Commenced.

Washington was captured by the national convention of Christian Endeavorers Wednesday, and they held the town until the following Tuesday. The railroads had failed to make adequate arrangements for transportation, and were swamped. Thousands of delegates and visitors were late in arriving. Of delegates there were 50,000, and of visitors as many more. The exercises were in progress in nine different places at once. Three tents, seating 13,000 people each, were erected near the Washington monument. Central Hall and five of the largest churches were also used. Wednesday night a storm blew down one of the largest tents, and exercises were in consequence delayed Thursday morning.

Notwithstanding discouraging weather, the Endeavorers were early astir, making their way to the many churches set apart for the sunrise services which begin the exercises of each day. The topic at these sunrise services was "Prayer of the Convention," and in each case the meetings were led by members of the visiting organizations. These special services lasted from 6:30 to 7:10 o'clock. Then came a short adjournment for breakfast and a walk about town. The great meetings in the big tents were originally fixed for 9:30 a. m. They were crowded even before the services began. In tent Washington, President Francis E. Clark of Boston, Mass., presided and Percy I. Foster of Washington acted as director of the vast chorus of singers. The services in tent Endeavor were conducted by the Rev. Howard B. Grose of Boston, with O. E. Excell of Chicago in charge of the music. The address of welcome to the visitors on behalf of the District of Columbia was delivered by Commissioner John W. Ross, and was responded to by Prof. W. W. Andrews of Sackville, N. B. Otherwise the services were similar in every respect to those conducted in tent Washington, the annual reports and addresses being duplicated for the benefit of the thousands unable to secure admission to the first-named tent.

REV. DR. CLARKE

President Clarke chose for his text: "What God hath joined together, let no man put asunder." He said the platform of the Christian Endeavor was for Christ and independence of the individual and of each society in this work. In fifteen years on this platform 4,000 societies had been formed, 5,200,000 Endeavorers had been enrolled, of whom 2,700,000 are to-day members and 2,000,000 others. Endeavorers in all but name, had been enrolled in purely denominational societies. Ten million Endeavorer meetings had been held and over $2,000,000 given in benevolence through denominational and church channels. He urged Christian Endeavorers to continue the good work, and especially organize evangelistic work as Christian duties of Endeavorers.

General Secretary Baer took his text from Luke xiii., 19. He said Pennsylvania still heads the list of Christian Endeavor societies with 3,273. The next in order was New York, 2,971; Ohio, 2,311; Ontario, 1,817; Illinois, 1,700; Indiana, 1,372, and Iowa, 1,302. These figures, he said, did not include numerous other kinds of Christian Endeavor societies that are fast becoming sturdy branches of the mother tree—such as the Junior, Intermediate, the Mothers' and the Senior. Pennsylvania led in junior societies. He spoke of the good these societies had accomplished in behalf of morality. Sunday observance, saloon warfare, Christianity and mission work, for which $154,022 had been given the past year.

GATHERING OF TEACHERS.

Annual Convention of the National Educational Association at Buffalo.

The annual convention of the National Educational Association was held in Buffalo. It was the greatest gathering of public school teachers in the history of the association, the attendance being nearly 10,000.

PRES. DOUGHERTY.

N. C. Dougherty, of Peoria, Ill., is president of the National Association, and Irwin Shepard, of Winona, Minn., secretary. Nearly all of the leading educators were present and read papers on various subjects. The delegates to the convention heard, among other notables, Booker T. Washington, Bishop Vincent of the M. E. Church, Bishop Spaulding of the Catholic Church, and President Andrew S. Draper, of the Chicago University, formerly superintendent of public instruction of New York State.

SEC'Y SHEPARD.

Twelve distinguished citizens of Buffalo had in hand the entertainment of the delegates. The Buffalo reception committee, of which Mayor Jewett was chairman, consisted of 300 members, mostly principals and school teachers.

Told in a Few Lines.

Frank Rowan was probably fatally hurt at Napoleon, O., by the accidental discharge of a pistol.

Baron Louis de Levay of Hungary married Miss Blanche de Wolfe of Bristol, Conn., at Newport.

Ex-Gov. Waite was shut out of the Republican State convention at Denver. He was heading a contesting delegattion.

F. E. Storm, clerk of the United States Railroad Commission of Washington, died suddenly at a private hotel at San Francisco.

The 9-year-old son of Charles D. Henry, of Chillicothe, Mo., went to sleep on the railroad track in a short curve and was killed by a passenger train.

Joseph Hedrick and Matthew Wheat, of Campbellsburg, Ind., were run down and killed by a fast train. They had been drinking and went to sleep on the track.

In the new Erie mine in Nevada gulch, S. D., Andrew Hanson, the owner of a number of valuable claims on the silicous ore belt, while loading a number of holes in the face of the tunnel, was instantly killed by a premature explosion of a quantity of dynamite.

THE SILENT SHORE.

By John Bloundelle Burton

CHAPTER IX.

That night he did not go to bed at all, but paced his room or sat buried in his deep chair, wondering what the morrow would bring forth and how he should best meet the questions that would be put to him.

Smerdon was gone again to Occleve Chase, so he could take no counsel from him; and, in a way, he was almost glad that he had gone, for he knew what that advice would be—that he should pretend utter ignorance as to the reasons Cundall might have had for making him the inheritor of all his vast wealth, and on no account to acknowledge the brotherhood between them.

But he told himself that, even had Smerdon been there to give such advice, it would not have been acceptable; that he would not have followed it.

He had wavered for many days now as to what course he should take, had had impulses to speak out and acknowledge the secret of his and his brother's life, had been swayed by Smerdon's arguments and by the letter he had received at the hotel, but now there was to be no more wavering; all was to be told.

It was about midday that, as he was seated in his study writing a long letter to Smerdon, explaining exactly what he had now taken the determination of doing, the footman entered with two cards on which were the names of "Mr. Fordyce, Paper Buildings," and "Mr. A. Stuart."

They came in together, Mr. Fordyce introducing himself as the solicitor of the late Mr. Cundall, and Mr. Stuart bowing gravely.

Then Lord Penlyn motioned to them both to be seated.

"I received your letter last night," he said to the secretary, "and, although I may tell you at once that there were, perhaps, reasons why Mr. Cundall should have left me his property, I was still considerably astonished at hearing he had done so."

"Reasons, my lord!" Mr. Fordyce said, looking up from a bundle of papers which he had taken from his pocket and was beginning to untie. "Reasons! What reasons, may I ask?"

"The reason," he answered, looking straight at both of them, "is that he and I were brothers."

"Brothers!" they both exclaimed together, while Stuart fixed his eyes upon him with an incredulous look, though in it there was something else besides incredulity, a look of suspicion and dislike."

"This is a strange story, Lord Penlyn," the lawyer said after a moment.

"Yes," the other answered. "And you will perhaps think it still more strange when I tell you that I myself did not know of it until a week ago."

Then he told them, very faithfully, everything that had passed between him and Walter Cundall, from the night on which he had come to Black's Club, and they had had their first interview in the park, down to the letter that had been written on the night of the murder.

Nor did he omit to tell them it was only a month previous to Cundall's disclosing himself, that he and Philip Smerdon had made the strange discovery at Le Vocq that his father, to all appearances, had had a previous wife, and had, also, to all appearances, left an elder son behind him.

If there was anything he did not think it necessary to tell them it was the violence of his behavior to Cundall at the interview they had had in that very room, and the curse he had hurled after him when he was gone, and the wish that "he was dead."

That curse and that wish which had been fulfilled so terribly soon after their expression, had weighed heavily on his heart ever since the night of the murder; he could not repeat it now to these men.

"It is the strangest story I ever heard," Mr. Fordyce said. "The very strangest! And, as we have found no certificates of either his mother's marriage or his own birth, we must conclude that he destroyed them. But the letter that you have shown us, which he wrote to you, is sufficient proof of your relationship. Though, of course, as he has named you fully and perfectly in the will there would be no need of any proof of your relationship."

"The man," Stuart said quietly, "who murdered him, also stole his watch and pocketbook, probably with the idea of making it look like a common murder for robbery. The certificates were perhaps in that pocketbook!"

"Do you not think it was a common murder for robbery?" Lord Penlyn asked him.

"No, I do not," Stuart answered, looking him straight in the face. "There was a reason for it."

"What reason?"

"That, the murderer knows best."

It was impossible for Penlyn to disguise from himself the fact that this young man had formed the opinion in his mind that he was the murderer.

His manner, his utter tone of contempt when speaking to him, were all enough to show in what light he stood in Stuart's eyes.

"I understand you," he said, quietly.

Stuart took no notice of the remark, but he turned to Mr. Fordyce and said: "Did it not seem strange to you that Lord Penlyn should have been made the heir, when you drew the will?"

"I did not draw it," Mr. Fordyce said, "or I should in all probability have made some inquiries—though, as a matter of fact, it was no business of mine to whom he left his money. As I see there is one Spanish name as a witness, it was probably drawn by an English lawyer in Honduras, and executed there."

"Since it appears that I am his heir," Lord Penlyn said, "I should wish to see the will. Have you it with you?"

"Yes," Mr. Fordyce said, producing the will from his bundle of papers, and handing it to him, "it is here."

The young man took it from the lawyer, and spreading it out before him, read it carefully.

The perusal did not take long, for it was of the shortest possible description, simply stating that the whole of everything he possessed was given and bequeathed by him to "Gervase Courteney St. John Occleve, Viscount Penlyn, in the Peerage of Great Britain, of Occleve House, London, and Occleve Chase, Westshire."

With the exception that the bequest was enveloped in the usual phraseology of lawyers, it might have been drawn up by his brother's own hand, so clear and simple was it.

And it was perfectly regular, both in the signature of the testator and the witnesses.

The two men watched him as he bent over the will and read it, the lawyer looking at him from under his thick, bushy eyebrows, and Mr. Stuart with a fixed glance that he never took off his face; and as they so watched him they noticed that his eyes were filled with tears he could not repress.

He passed his hand across them once to wipe the tears away, but they came again; and, when he folded up the document and gave it back to Mr. Fordyce, they were welling over from his eyelids.

"I saw him once after I knew he was my brother," he said; "and I had very little acquaintance with him before then; but now that I have learnt how wholesouled and unselfish he was, and how he resigned everything that was dear to him for my sake, I cannot but lament his sad life and dreadful end. You must forgive my weakness."

"It does you honor, my lord," the lawyer said, speaking in a softer tone than he had yet used; "and he well deserved that you should mourn him. He had a very noble nature."

"If you really feel his loss, if you feel it as much as I do, who owed much to him," Stuart said, "you will join me in trying to track his murderer. That will be the most sincere mourning you can give him," and he, too, spoke now in a less bitter tone.

"I promised yesterday the woman whom we both loved that I would leave no stone unturned to find that man; I need take no fresh vows now. But what clew is there to show us who it was that killed him?"

For a moment neither of the others answered.

"Must everything be made public?" Penlyn asked.

"More or less," the lawyer answered. "One cannot suppress a will dealing with over two millions worth of property. Even though you were willing to destroy it and forfeit your inheritance it could not be done. If Mr. Stuart and I allowed such a thing as that we should become criminals."

"Well, so be it! the public must think what they like of me—at least until the murderer is discovered." Then he asked again: "But what clew is there to help us to find him?"

"None that we know of, as yet," Stuart said.

"I suppose," Mr. Fordyce said, with a speculative air, "those Spanish letters will not furnish any, when translated."

"What Spanish letters?" Penlyn asked. "If you have any, let me see them. I am acquainted with the language."

"Is Corot a man's or a woman's name?" Mr. Fordyce asked, as he again untied his bundle of papers.

"Neither that I know of," Penlyn answered. "It is more likely, I should think, to be a pet or nickname. Why do you ask?"

"I found these three letters amongst others in my desk," Stuart said, taking them from Mr. Fordyce and handing them to Lord Penlyn, "and I should not have had my attention attracted to them more than to any others out of the mass of foreign correspondence there was, had it not been for the marginal notes in Mr. Cundall's handwriting. Do you see them?"

"Yes," he answered. "Yes. I see written on one, 'Sent C 500 dols.;' on another, 'Sent 2,000 Escudos,' and on the third again, 'Sent C 500 dols.'"

"What do the letters say?" they both asked.

"I will read them."

He did so carefully, and then he turned around and said:

"They are all from some man signing himself Corot, and dating from Puerto Cortes, who seems to think he had, or perhaps really had, since money was sent, some claim upon him. In the first one he says none has been forthcoming in a long while, and that, though he does not want for himself, some woman, whom he calls Juanna, is ill and requires luxuries. He finishes his letters with, 'Yours ever devotedly.' In the second he writes more strongly, says that Juanna is dying, and that, as she has committed no fault, he insists upon having money. After this the largest sum was sent."

"And the third?" they both asked.

"The third is more important. It says Juanna is dead, that he is going to England on business, and that, as he has heard Cundall is also about to set out for that country, he will see him there, as he cannot cross Honduras to do so. And he finishes his letter by saying: 'Do not, however, think that her death relieves you from your liability to me. Justice and the vile injuries done to us make it imperative on you to provide for me forever out of your evilly acquired wealth. This justice I will have and you know I am one who will not hesitate to enforce my rights. Remember how I served Jose and beware.'"

"This is a faithful translation?" Stuart asked.

"Take it to an interpreter, as you doubt me," Penlyn said.

"I do not doubt you, Lord Penlyn," the other replied, "and I beg your pardon for this and any other suspicions I may have shown. Will you forgive me?"

"Yes," Penlyn said, and he held out his hand to the other, and Stuart took it.

"If this man is in England," Mr. Fordyce said, "and we could only find him out, and also discover what his movements have been, we should, perhaps, be very near the murderer."

"Every detective in London shall be set to work to-night especially those who understand foreigners and their habits, to find him if he is here. And if he is, he will have to give a very full account of himself before he finds himself free," Stuart said.

CHAPTER X.

A few days later the rewards offered both by the Government and by "the friends of the late Mr. Cundall," had been announced, and the magnitude of them, especially of the latter, had caused much excitement in the public mind, and had tended to keep the general interest in the tragedy alive.

The detectives themselves, though they were careful not to say so, had really very little hope that they would ever succeed in tracing the assassin.

Meanwhile, Penlyn had nerved himself for another interview with Ida Raughton, an interview in which he was to tell her everything, and he went down to Belmont to do so.

He found her alone in her pretty drawing room, Sir Paul having gone to Windsor on some business matter, and Miss Norris being out for a walk.

She was still looking very pale, and her lover noticed that a paper was lying beside her in which was a column headed, "The Murder of Mr. Cundall."

Had she been reading that, he wondered, at the very time when he was on his way to tell her of the relationship that had existed between him and that other man who had loved her so dearly?

When he had kissed her, wondering as he did so if it was the last kiss she would ever let him press upon her lips after she knew of what he had kept back from her at their last interview, she said to him:

"And now tell me what you have done towards finding Mr. Cundall's murderer? What steps have you taken, whom have you employed to search for that man?"

"It is thought," he answered, "that there is some man, now in England, who may have done it. A man whose name is Corot, and who was continually obtaining money from him."

"How is this known?"

"By some letters that have been found amongst Cundall's papers. Letters asking for money, and, in one case, threatening him if some was not sent at once; and with notes in his handwriting saying that different sums had been sent when demanded."

"Corot," she said, repeating the name to herself in a whisper, "Corot." Then, after a pause, she said, "No! That man is not the assassin."

"Not the assassin, Ida!" Penlyn said. "Why do you think he is not?"

"Because I have never known him, because the form of the man who slew him in my dream was familiar to me, and this man's form cannot be so."

"My darling," he said, "you place too much importance on this dream. Remember what fantasies of the brain they are, and how few of them have ever anything bearing on the actual events of life."

"This was no fantasy," she answered, "no fantasy. When the murderer is discovered—if he ever is—it will be seen that I have known him. I am as sure of it as that I am sitting here. But who was he? Who was he? I have gone over and over again every man whom I have ever known, and yet I cannot bring to my mind which of all those men it is that that shrouded figure resembles.' She paused again, and then she asked: "Has it been discovered yet whether he had any relations?"

"Yes, Ida," he said, rising from his seat and standing before her, while he knew that the time had come now when everything must be told. "Yes, he had one relation."

"Who was he?" she asked, springing to her feet, while a strange luster shone in her eyes. "Who was he? Tell me that."

"Oh, Ida," he said, "there is so much to tell! Will you hear me patiently while I tell you all?"

"Tell me everything," she replied. "I will listen."

Then he told her, standing there face to face with her.

As he proceeded with his story, he could give no guess as to what effect it was having upon her, for she made no sign, but, from the seat into which she had sunk, gazed fixedly into his face.

Once she shuddered slightly, and drew her dress nearer to her when he confessed that he had refused to part from him in peace; and, when she had read the letter that he had written on the night of his death, she wept silently for a few moments.

A WOMAN'S TIRELESS SEARCH.

Results in the Finding of Her Husband Living the Life of a Hermit.

Fifteen years ago A. B. Conway, a prosperous merchant of Jersey City, disappeared, leaving a wife and one child, a boy 7 years old. For a year the missing man was searched for. Large rewards were offered and the best detectives employed. But their efforts were in vain, and finally the conclusion was arrived at that he had been murdered or had killed himself. But his wife would not hearken to any such explanation and announced her intention of continuing the search. From Maine to California and from the gulf to the great lakes, the loving woman, accompanied by her son, journeyed, seeking the absent husband and father. Many clews were followed, some of them very promising, and through this all her hope never wavered.

Last week her search was rewarded. At Jacksonville, Fla., she obtained a clew. She learned that a strange man had years before settled upon a small peninsula fronting on a town called New Smyrna and that his habits had earned for him the name of hermit. He had always dwelt in a miserable hut and was seldom seen. Mrs. Conway, her son and two Jersey City clergymen went to the cottage of the hermit. As the party entered, the hermit was standing with his back to the door, gazing at a portrait of Mrs. Conway, as she appeared when a bride. Mrs. Conway gave a little cry, the hermit turned and in a moment the long-separated husband and wife were clasped in each other's arms.

In explanation of his strange conduct Conway said that at the time he disappeared he was troubled about business. The thought of bankruptcy crazed him, and he left Jersey City, hardly knowing what he was doing, and wandered to Florida. It was a year before his mind became clear and he realized what he had done. Then, ashamed to return, he continued to lead a hermit-like existence until it was ended by the arrival of his wife.

A Bed in the Tyrol.

"Could I have a bed?" and when I asked the question the hostess stared at me. I could sit by the fire, she said, or perhaps lie down on a kind of settle covered with harsh American cloth, and not overclean, which she pointed out in the shades of the further end.

"Have you no guest chamber?" I asked.

After much consideration and a word with her husband, she lighted a candle and led me carefully through an ante-room, piled up with thrashed-out maize stalks, to a door, which she unlocked, and so into a room where the heavy ears of Indian corn were laid in rows along the floor, while onions and apples were heaped in the corners, and bunches of small red and yellow tomatoes hung from the rafters.

There was a bedstead behind the door, and a chair, only one, stood by its side. The bed had not been used for years, she confessed—not since the opening of the railway. But she had sheets—clean sheets—at my service, adding, doubtfully, that perhaps, if she put a pan of hot coals between the feather-bed and the mattress it might not be so very damp after all by the time I had eaten my supper. Coffee? No, that was impossible, but a glass of real red Tyroler wine was at my command, as well as a share of the smoking dish of polenta, which stood on the table of the common room, flanked by a large loaf of black bread.

A Remarkable Theft.

A Parisian thief entered a cab without baggage, and directed the driver to convey him to an address some two miles distant. On the way hither he requested the driver to halt at the shop of a certain dealer in second-hand goods. The passenger entered the shop, bearing in his arms a large paper-covered parcel. He had ripped open the cushions, stolen the horse hair, and was ready to sell it. The cabby, however, followed him into the shop and caused his arrest.—London Times.

SOME OF THE VERY LATEST IDEAS IN DRESS.

Some Old Fashions Still Admissible—Gone-by Modes that Are Available for Remodeling—How Out-of-Date Sleeves May Be Made Over.

Gotham Fashion Gossip.

New York correspondence:

REVIEWS of new fashions are welcome to women at all times, but what most women want, more than information about new styles, is what old fashions are still admissible, and what gone-by modes are available for remodeling. They read the exhaustive review with all due respect to its authoritativeness, but yet with a list of old gowns and pieces in mind. Here are a few items that are likely to be in an ordinary collection of such dresses and accessories, and that are still serviceable; velvet sleeves, whether velvet appears in the gown elsewhere or not, are all right. Sleeves of color and material contrasting with the gown are not only still permitted, but they are stylish. The sleeve is close to the inadmissible if it is a stand-out puff at the top of the round kind, or if it is stiffened. Such a sleeve may be remodeled by splitting it over the top and round of the arm and inserting a point of material, contrasting if you like, or borrowed from the lower part of the sleeve. This point should follow the line of the shoulder and arm, and the puff should spread either side from it. The result is entirely in

TRIMMING THAT WOULD DISGUISE WEAR.

"form," and the change is made very easily.

Of your leg-o'-mutton sleeves you'd better cut off to the full part and then push the full part up into a puff-setting in a flat point over the shoulder, or else binding down the fulness to fit the shoulder by a band of ribbon that ties about the arm just below the shoulder. This first picture presents a very pretty pattern of sleeve, into the making of which an old leg-o'-mutton sleeve may enter, but it should be understood that the model shown was an entirely new design. That fact should render the intending copier all the more eager. A piece taken out of the upper part of the sleeve will make it conform to this shape, and its very top is masked by cape epaulettes. In copying in the manner suggested, the stock of stuffs in hand will determine what materials are to be used, but in this model black and white and mastic colored taffeta were used. The skirt had no trimming, and the bodice of the mastic goods had a yoke of the striped stuff, which was alike back and front. The back of the bodice was plain, but the front was draped in deep folds, the fastening coming at the side. The epaulettes are prettily trimmed with black silk passementerie, but six months ago their trimming would have been spangled, and the left-over stock is likely to include some of this garniture. Very likely it is as pretty as it can be, but its day is about done, so it is much better to lay it away than to use it again just now.

The woman that never throws away a dress, and who even successfully resists the fascinations of a dicker with an old clo' man, is often laughed at because of the amount of her accumulations. This sort of woman will present for her grown son's inspection a sample from a piece bag which she insists was part of his little dress as a 2-year-old. But the laugh is sometimes on her side, and now is the time when she feels triumphant as she brings out some old gown with tight-fitting sleeves. Isn't she glad she saved it! She can put in over the sleeve at the armhole a frill of some contrasting material that will hang softly, or to just above the elbow, and the sleeve is all right. This use of a very old sleeve has one advantage, in that the dress of which it was originally a part is long since forgotten, so the makeshift cannot be traced to its source.

With respect to skirts, the new fashions are right in line with practical economy. Much is saved by their being no longer a need of stiffening, the skirts are narrower, so that less material is used, and best of all is the trick of trimming summer skirts at the hem. This is very generally done now, and whether it will last into next winter or not, it is at present a boon to the economizer. The skirts of the next two pictures were brand new, but how many worn plain skirts there are that can be similarly trimmed and thus made to give a lot more service. In the first instance, the skirt was bordered with a full ruching of silk muslin, headed by black velvet ribbon; in the other, ruchings on skirt and bodice both were chiffon. The material of the first dress was white pique, draped, in the bodice, with finely dotted tulle, and at the top a handsome yoke of ecru lace was finished with loops of black velvet ribbon. The second of this pair of dresses was made from broche taffeta for the bodice, and white serge for the skirt. Plain white serge was used for the vest, which was topped by a band of insertion. This outlined a small, square-cut-out, which may be filled in with tulle, if desired. Small bands of embroidery trimmed the sleeves, and for final finish there was a sailor collar of lace, from which hung a ruffle of pleated chiffon.

Of the new devices offered in collars, there is none that must imperatively be a part of the new gown or of one that is being shaped to look like new. The ribbon collar, crinkled about the neck and tied into a big spreading bow at the back, still prevails, though it is no longer new. In the top of all plain, high, unfolded stock collars there should be set a spreading frill or a big soft ruche. If in trying to accomplish some new collar device in the gown you are managing at home you make a mistake in the cut about the neck, and you know the collar will never set, just give up the collar entirely, cut the neck band out evenly and bind it smooth. Now make a collar on the plan of a gretchen belt, boned stiffly, the bones touching in the center and spreading towards top and bottom, just like a belt that is intended to fit about the waist and also to clasp the hips and spread of the body above the waist line. This collar is measured so that it fits absurdly high, really almost to the ear tips, and spreads below the base of the throat far enough to take a good hold and to successfully hide the mistake at the neck band of the bodice. The bones are soft enough to bend down for the chin. Such a collar needs deft fingering, but it is stunning when done, and will go on any dress. Make it of velvet, or, if you are as clever as can be with your needle, make it of heavy lace and use gilded bones. This latter, of course, is for the dressy gown.

Most collars are now very high, some of them ridiculously so, when donned by women whose necks are short, but now and then the neck is cut a trifle low, generally square. The last dress described was of this type, and so is the next one, the fourth being particularly rich. Of fine black silk, its skirt was trimmed with three rows of black mousseline, each one finished with ruffles as it crossed the lower two horizontal bands. Alternate bands of embroidery and silk gave the bodice a plastron of mousseline showing at each side a ruffle to harmonize with the skirt panels coming at the bust line, and the tiny basque being to match. Over the sleeves there were epaulettes of the goods trimmed with embroidery.

An excellent model for the employment of that very popular material, linon, is shown in the final illustration. For it even the resources of an attic full of piece bags are of no avail, for the stuff is so new a weave that the old stock does not include it. This makes a dress of it all the more desirable a possession, and this one has, besides, much attractiveness of its own. The goods is pleated and lined with rose-pink taffeta, and the open-work bands of linon embroidery are also underlaid with silk.

MANUFACTURE OF CANES.

Grown, Boiled, Warped, Fired, Finished and Ornamented.

The manufactures of canes reveals an interesting process connected with a growing industry. There are several large factories in Philadelphia and some in New York. These have recently been established. The cane is grown mostly in Austria, France and Japan. There are numerous species, among which are the Congo, Corine, Penang, Bamboo, Furze, Whampoo and the Welschel. Many canes are partly shaped while growing. At the manufactory the crude canes are placed over a large steam vat. Cloths are wrapped over the sticks and they are left in this position until the wood has become perfectly soft and pliable at the end, where it is intended to form the handle. Having reached this condition, they are taken out separately and placed in a vise, around a mold of whatever shape it is desired to make the curl. While the cane is grasped tightly in the vise, the upper end is placed in a steel spring having a cast-iron handle, which is drawn sharply around, warping the cane at this point into the precise shape desired. When taken out of the vise the handle is tied with cord, to prevent it from straightening out to its original shape.

After it has lain for some days in this condition and the curl is permanently formed, the cane is thoroughly scubbed in a hot water bath. The next step is to either put it in the stain box or to finish it in some other desired manner. In the staining process quite a degree of skill is required, because if the cane is colored in a tasteful shade it will meet with a readier sale. To achieve this result the mixing of acids and color in the staining compound must be very delicately done. Some of the canes, instead of being stained by a liquid, are "fired." This operation is performed by moving the cane backward and forward in a gas jet flame, elongated by means of a blower, which forces a current of air through it. The work has to be done very carefully by hand, so that the heat produces a uniform effect upon the wood. Then the cane is ready either for varnishing or polishing by chemical process, whichever it may be.

After it is polished the cane goes into the hands of a trimmer, who prepares it for whatever additional ornamentation it is to receive. The handle is then carefully shaved down to fit the silver plate, which will be soldered onto it, and the foot is shaped ready for the ferrule. After this manipulation the cane goes to the finishing department, where the silversmiths put on whatever trimmings are required.

NOW THE SHAKER BONNET.

Quaint Headgear Likely to Follow the Revival of the Poke.

Fashionable milliners are generally looking forward to the time—and at no far distant day, either—when the shaker bonnet will be all the rage. The revival of the poke has prepared the public eye for the revival of other quaint styles of headgear, and the milliners have thoughtfully arranged that the public eye shall not be disappointed. Other quaint fashions have followed it. Bonnets which would be shaker in plain circles, are making their appearance with trimmings which place them in the front ranks of fashion. One of the prettiest modifications of the bonnet beloved of the Friends, is of pale gray straw, trimmed with gray tulle and soft pink faille and given a touch of worldly brilliancy by three rhinestone buckles. The pink faille forms a bow on one side and folds decorously over the front to the other side, where gray tulle is bunched into a big rosette. The round buckles trim the bonnet's edge, and broad strings of tulle tie slightly on one side beneath the chin. With this demure little bonnet a pretty jacket is designed to be worn. It is of gray cloth made in an elongated Eton shape, and embroidered with silver and pink beads. It is lined with pink silk, which shows in tabs and lapels.

Spider-Crabs of Japan.

The crab spider inhabits the ocean bed, terrifying the submarine world. It is hideous in appearance and habits. It is the most formidable and repulsive creature in the seas.

More than one daring pearl diver and coral hunter has battled with this hairy monster and been driven to seek the safety of a boat's deck.

Though frequently found in cool waters, the great spider-crab flourishes and attains his greatest size in the waters of the Japan seas.

Though often encountered by coral and pearl hunters, the monster is seldom trapped, and so only four specimens of full-grown spider-crabs are to be found in this country.

A fine specimen is in Rutger's College Museum of Natural History. Two are in the collections of the Leland Stanford and Cornell Universities. The fourth specimen is in a private collection in Philadelphia.

While the largest and most ferocious of deep-sea crustacea, the spider-crab is the most defenseless. Nature has not provided it with a single weapon of defense against its many enemies.

Still, the appearance of the spider-crab is his best defense, and he is master of the scaled and finned things that live in the ocean's depths.

The spider-crab is so named because of its strong resemblance to the familiar spinning insect. Its habits are, however, those of the crab family. The long legs, which often exceed forty feet in length, are thickly covered with coarse black hair. The body, often fifteen feet in circumference, is also covered with hair, in which barnacles, seaweed and tiny shellfish make their home.

The spider-crab when attacked exudes an overpowering odor, which permeates the water around it, while it lashes its long, hairy, fearsome arms until the water seethes.

The food of the spider-crab is for the most part decayed animal matter. The creature is abnormally indolent. It will fasten on a clump of coral and remain there immovable for many hours.

The Japanese pearl divers assert that the touch of the spider-crab is as fatal as the sting of a cobra's fang, but the usual fighting method of the monster is to embrace its enemy, fish or human, in its huge, hairy tentacles, where death by smothering comes slow but sure.

The spider-crab's human victims are not numerous, though just how many coral and pearl hunters have been suffocated in its terrible arms no one will ever know.

Spiders that Trap Birds.

Kangaroos are not the only curious animals to be found in Australia. Spiders of enormous size and strength grow there. W. J. Rainbow, the naturalist, who has devoted his attention to the animals of that country, tells of spiders as large as birds which construct webs of enormous size, some measuring as much as thirty feet across.

In building the webs the spiders use two kinds of silk. One white, dry and somewhat brittle, is used for the framework of the net and for the guys and supports. The other kind is yellow, exceedingly viscid and elastic. Sometimes the nets are close to the ground, and at other times several feet high, but they are always constructed so as to be exposed to the rays of the sun.

While the traps are set for insects, they are strong enough to hold small birds which become entangled in the clinging strands, and are soon helpless and are easily dispatched by the spiders.

Mr. Rainbow says that he does not believe that the spiders eat the birds after catching them. Spiders have been known to attack birds which have thus been caught and speedily put them to death, but it is thought that this is done to prevent injury to the webs, and not with a view of securing the bodies of the feathered victims.

It seems that these large spiders eat largely for the pleasure it affords them. They are exceedingly voracious, and will consume several times their own weight in food within twenty-four hours, when it can be had. But if forced to do without, they can live for many days without either food or water. This indicates that they disobey the old maxim and live to eat, instead of eating to live.

Nearly all tropical countries produce giant spiders, the Fiji Islands being particularly well stocked. Graffe tells of a net he found there which was more than thirty feet across, and must have contained several miles of silk. The labor of spinning the web as well as of arranging it was something enormous. The spiders are fairly intelligent and are easily tamed.

The Ideal Female Arm.

"I find great difficulty in getting a model with good arms," said a well-known sculptor recently. "It is astonishing how very few women have arms that conform to the standard. A perfect arm measured from the armpit to the wrist joint should be twice the length of the head. The upper part of the arm should be large, full and well rounded. The forearm must not lie too flat, not nearly so flat as a man's, for example. A dimple at the elbow adds beauty to a well-proportioned arm.

"From a well-molded shoulder the whole arm should taper in a long, graceful curves to a symmetrical and rounded wrist. It is better to have an arm that harmonizes even if the parts do not follow the generally accepted lines. For instance, a full, round upper arm which is joined to a flat or thin forearm has a very bad effect. It is only a degree worse, however, than a graceful, well-molded forearm tacked on to a thin, scrawny upper arm.

"Correctness of form is not the only thing necessary for a good arm. The owner must possess the power of expression in her arms. As a general thing American women are deficient in this. Those nationalities which show the most expression in their arms are the Spanish, French and Italians. The warmest admirer of Sarah Bernhardt would not claim that she had beautiful arms, yet no one can say that the divine Sarah ever appears ungainly in consequence. Much more lies in the faculty of arm expression than is generally supposed."

Shaving.

Man is said to be the only creature that shaves. But this is not so. A South American bird called the "motmot" actually begins shaving on arriving at maturity. Naturally adorned with long blue tail feathers, it is not satisfied with them in their natural state, but with its beak nips off the web on each side for a space of about two inches, leaving a neat little oval tuft at the end of each.

Lions and Tigers.

Caged lions and tigers, pumas and jaguars take no notice of the men and women passing in front of them, but if a dog be brought anywhere near the cage they show their savage nature at once.

OFFICIAL PAPER OF DeKALB COUNTY

JAMES A. BARNS, Editor.

Registered at the Auburn, Indiana office as second-class matter.

THURSDAY.....JULY 16, 1896

BRYAN.

William J. Bryan has served two terms in congress. He was a member of the House in the fifty-second and fifty-third congresses and would probably still be a member if the republicans had not gerrymandered the first district of Nebraska, which he so ably represented In each of the congresses in which he sat he had the honor, although he was one of the youngest members, of making the speech which was most widely circulated. The first of those speeches was delivered March 16, 1892, and was against the McKinley tariff law, That speech made his fame, and may be considered as having been one of the direct causes of his having been nominated for president by the Chicago convention, and was more widely distributed as a campaign document by the democratic congressional campaign committee than any other speech on the subject, and he became in a day one of the most talked about men in congress. The other speech was made at the extra session of congress, called to repeal the purchasing clause of the Sherman silver law, and was against repeal. That speech was at the time and is still regarded as one of the ablest arguments ever made in either branch of congress for the free coinage of silver, and millions of copies have been sent ont by the silver men, and it will probably be even more widely circulated during the coming campaign.

Bryau Clnb.

Last evening, in response to a call in the COURIER, a meeting of about fifty democrats, and those who propose to act with them, met in the new room under the opera house, and proceeded to organize a Bryan Campaign Club. John Robbins was made temporary chairman and D. M. Link temporary secretary. The by-laws were read and those present, then signed as members, the total being forty-seven names. Several others were present a part of the time, but not when the signatures were taken. The permanent organization is D. M. Link, president; Jay Love and P. D. West, vice-president; Milo Husselman, sec.; Will Kessler, treas.; Frank Lahnum, marshal. There was also appointed a committee on program and entertainment with W. B. Brown, Dr. Hines and Geo. Lanning as its members. The executive committee will be appointed at next meeting. The next meeting will be Tuesday evening of next week and each Tuesday thereafter till the polls close in November.

HON. J. M. ROBINSON

It will be remembered, that at the congressional convention at Kendallville, Hon. J. M. Robinson, the nominee, was urged to make a statement of his views on the silver question. He declined, as at that time, no one could foresee what might be the action of the state and national conventions. However, he frankly told them he was strong enough in the democratic faith, to believe his party would take the proper course and that he would follow his party, believing it now, as ever, in the right. Now, since both state and national convention have declared for free silver, he makes a plain, fair statement, that he is in full accord with the party on the silver plank. This is what all have expected. Mr. Robinson is a democrat, and of the kind to gain and hold the affections of the people. We look to see him get a vote larger than the state ticket. He is popular everwhere, and justly so, for he is a man of the people.

DECLARATION OF PRINCIPLES.

We the undersigned members of the Auburn Bryan Club most heartily endorse the action of the Chicago convention in placing upon our national ticket as candidate for president of the United States, that grand, eloquent and untiring champion of the people's cause, William J. Bryan. We believe that the interests of the great masses of our people can be best served by our full and hearty support of the candidates nominated and the platform adopted in the Chicago convention. We believe that the great questions that are to be fought out in this campaign can be best met by a thorough organization of all patriotic lovers of sound money and good government. We maintain that the same legislative body which in 1873 demonetized, debased and debauched the best money the world ever knew and thereby filled our land with pauperism and tramps has the right and owes it to the great masses of the people to restore that money its former full legal tender value, thereby restoring to labor and farm products their true value. Believing also that it is cowardly and unamerican to say that we will await the pleasure of foreign countries as to what kind of money we shall use, we instead assert our rights as American freemen and rely upon our own strength, our own wisdom, our own integrity and our own patriotism as we did in the early morning of our national history and declare ourselves free and independent of every nation on earth financially as well as politically, and we believe that when this is done by proper financial legislative action our people will become again happy and prosperous.

The Ticket.

As noted in Saturday's DAILY, the national ticket was completed by making Arthur Sewall of Maine, the nominee for vice-president. He is a wealthy shipbuilder and a free silver man. The eastern states were given this in order to carry the free silver sentiment into that section if possible. Personally, both are good men, and no one would complain of them or refuse to support them as far as that is concerned. But we regret to say there has arisen a great deal of ill feeling, as the result of the way the convention was conducted as well as some dissatisfaction with the extreme stand taken in the platform. If more pains had been taken to show friendly feeling for the more moderate democrats, there would not have been 185 delegates, refusing to vote on the first ballot, and 162 on the last, in the vote on president. Again there were others, who objected to see such men as Altgeld and Tillman controlling a democratic convention and refusing at least some little credit to a domocratic administration. All these causes have combined to create a good deal of dissatisfaction, and many prominent men and newspapers have declared they cannot support the Chicago platform and nominees. Just what the result will be, cannot now be fore-seen. We can only wait, and hope that all may turn out right in November.

Name Rhymes.

Ever since McKinley was nominated his admirers have been trying to find a word that will rhyme with his name. The only one they have found so far is "thinly," and they refuse to use that, leaving it for the democrats to use Bnt when it comes to Bryan we're all right as witness the following, which are fresh from the mint:

What's the matter with Billy Bryan?
He'll beat McKinley with out tryin'!

Or

Here stands our leader Billy Bryan;
There stands McKinley, the fat a fryin'.

Or

Long live the boom of Billy Bryan,
McKinley's boom is slowly dyin'.

Or

Here soars the eagle, Billy Bryan,
McKinley sees it's no use flyin'.

Or

Here are the friends of Billy Bryan,
They're on the laugh; McKinly's cryin'.

Or

From east and west they'll vote for Bryan,
His votes come free, McKinley's buyin'.

SAME THING.

The Dispatch says:

No one perhaps should blame the owner of a silver mine for wanting free and unlimited coinage of silver. It would double the value of his possessions perhaps, but no oue else would be benefited.

And we wish to add that it is no worse for a mine owner to ask for a law to enable him to raise the price of his product, than it is for a manufacturer. They are both doing the same thing. And there are other miners besides silver miners, into this business. Look at the greet copper mine owners, who have for thirty years been protected by the McKinley plan so that immense fortunes have been made over and above an honest profit such as they would have had without protection. No use to kick if silver does ask protective laws.

Junction Fires.

John Harris' Barn Burned last night and Hoops Burned Yesterday

Our thriving and business like suburb, the Junction, was the scene yesterday of two fires which, had they not been discovered at any early hour, would have caused quite a loss of property. The first but not largest conflagration was discovered in a car load of dry hoops which Liniger & Co. had ready for shipment. The work train on the Lake Shore had just passed and in a few minutes smoke was coming out through every opening in the car. It was found that the fire originated in the end of the car and to get to it, it was necessary to remove a lot of hoops. But this was done in double quick time and the flames were extinguished. The loss to the company will be about 1000 hoops.

At an early hour this morning the COURIER reporter received a telephone message from the Junction stating that John Harris' barn had burned last night at about 9:40. Soon as the fire was discovered a couple of hobos were seen leaving the barn and the supposition is that they set the building on fire. The barn contained about a ton of hay, sleigh, and other articles which burned up. Mr. Harris informs the COURIER that he had no insurance. He estimates the loss at $300. It required quite a lot of work to keep the fire from spreading to the adjoining buildings.

SOCIAL AT CORUNNA.

The ladies of the Christian church will give an ice cream festival next Suturday night July 18, at Corunna in the new brick building of Milo Thomas. Other refreshments will be served. Come one and all and enjoy a pleasant evening.

COMMITTEE.

WORK OF LIGHTNING

The Armature at the Electric Plant Completely Destroyed.

The severe electrical storm last night caused considerable damage everywhere. The armature at the electric light plant burned out, making a loss of three or four hundred dollars to the company. Mr. Davenport wishes us to state that all persons using lights should get along to-night with just as few as possible. If all are turned on the result will be that the town will be in absolute darkness.

The Central Union telephone company also had several fuses burned out and this morning they had no wire to Waterloo and only one to Fort Wayne.

The Western telephone company also had five fuses burn out, but Mr. Stimely replaced them quickly so there was no break in their service.

The small frame barn of Mr. Gall, who lives two miles southeast of town, was also completely destroyed by lightning last night.

Tuesday the bank barn of C. B. Kagey, who lives south of Corunna, was struck by lightning and burned to the ground. He had about $1,300 insurance.

CORUNNA.

Dr. Rudolph has located in Corunna again.

Jeff Orr returned last Friday from a week's visit in South Whitley.

The ladies netted over twenty dollars at their festival on Saturday evening.

Austin McKee is down with a fever and at writing is a very sick boy.

A converted Jew preacher in the Christian church here on Sunday last at 11 a. m. and 8 p. m. and lectured on Monday and Tuesday evennngs.

Jason Childs' son who had a limb broken sometime ago, is getting along nicely under the care of Dr. Phillips.

The third quarterly conference of the Liberal branch of the U. B. church was held here last Saturday and Sunday, and the Radicals held theirs at Maple Grove the same date.

Mrs Barbara Luttman's obituary appears in another part of this paper.

Obituary.

Barbara Groff, wife of David Luttman was born in Lancaster Co. Penn. May 12, 1828. She was united in marriage with David Luttman Sept. 30, 1850. With her husband she removed to Corunna, Ind., April 1, 1864, where she has since resided. In 1872 she united with the U. B. church at Corunna, Ind. she had great reverence for the word of the Lord, she was a devoted wife and highly esteemed by all who knew her, living not so much for herself as for others, ever ready to assist the needy and relieve the suffering. Peacefully she departed this life Thursday morning July 9, 1896, age 68 years 1 month and 27 days. She leaves a husband, two brothers, nine children and a large circle of acquaintance and friends who mourn their loss.

The funeral services were held in the U. B. church, July 11, at 10 a. m. the choir furnishing excellent music.

Services conducted by Rev. Barton assisted by Rev. Yager. The remains were laid to rest in the Corunna cemetery.

G. W. Reader.

Mr. Reader was born at Alexandria, Madison Co. Ind., May 3, 1845, and died at Logansport, Ind., July 10, 1896 at the age of 51 years, 2 months and 1 day.

He served in the late war in Co. G 47th Ind. and was always prompt and ready in his duties as a soldier. At the close of the war, he returned to Alexandria, and Dec. 25, 1867 he was married to Miss Mary E. Baldwin. To them were born six children. Mrs. Reader preceded him to the spirit world, and he was left to care for the family helpless with him. Sept. 16, 1882 he married Elizabeth E. McDonald one child being born to them. She, however lived but a short time. Since he came to Auburn, he has been in the employ of the Auburn Foundry but recently, his mind seemed to be failing and he was taken to the asylum at Logansport where he has been under treatment eleven months. He was brought home for interment which was in the Eel River cemetery. The services were by Rev. J. W. Stringfellow.

Rosebery's Unbridled Tongue.

Lord Rosebery, in the opoinion of the London World, has never been able to rid himself of a certain giddy rattlepatedness that is constantly making him say things he did not intend and which he has to unsay the next day. "If," it adds, "he is like Burke, 'tongue with a garnish of brains,' the proportion of the tongue and the brains in the two cases is very different."

GOOD FORM FOR COLLECTORS.

Tom Hannum Stood on Ceremony and Was "Not at Home."

The death of Tom Hannum, one time a well-known habitue of the press galleries on both sides of the capitol, was sincerely deplored among old-time members yesterday and some amusing anecdotes were told of the popular newspaper man by his friends in the course of the day, says the Washington post. One of the best is worth repeating.

Hannum was in the habit of taking a late breakfast at the Press Club every morning. On one occasion, while he was vigorously discussing a hearty repast of ham and eggs, a bill collector suddenly walked up to Hannum's side and laid his account before him. Hannum looked at the bill and then at the collector and in a deliberate tone began:

"You blamed fool, can't you observe the amenities of ordinary civilized society? Don't you know that a man's club is like his home and that you are in danger of being summarily ejected for coming in here without being introduced? The rules of this club require that if you have business with a member to wait in the lobby outside until a waiter takes in your card and ascertains whether the gentleman with whom you have business is present. Now, you go into the lobby—take this bill with you—and comply with the rules of this club."

The collector apologized for the infraction of the rules of the Press Club, which, to tell the truth, were never enforced on anything, and waited until the steward came to ascertain his wishes.

"Please announce me to Mr. Hannum," said the collector.

The steward told him to wait and he carried the man's card to Hannum, who looked at it carefully, then handed it back to the steward and said: "Not at home."

DRESSMAKERS TO THE WORLD.

There Are 65,000 of Them in the French Capital.

Paris is the city where the dressmaking trade flourishes as it does in no other spot in the world. In 1850 the number of couturieres, as given in the "Annuaire du Commerce," the commercial directory of those days, was only 158. There were besides sixty-seven shops for the sale of ready-made feminine apparel, but there were none, as there are to-day, which sold lingerie or certain articles exclusively. In the "Bottin" (as the Paris directory is familiarly known) of 1895 there are 1,636 couturieres and 296 commercial houses for the sale of ready-made garments, besides many establishments which manufacture and sell "jupons de desous" or under petticoats alone. The number of working dressmakers in Paris is estimated at 65,000. In all France, according to M. Georges Michel, the industry of manufacturing the various articles of woman's dress is in the hands of 81,400 male and 143,648 female owners of shops or factories. These furnish employment to 700,801 persons, of whom over 500,000 are women. In addition to these there are 925,855 persons who make their living from industries which are tributary to that of the manufacture of feminine apparel. The total value of the product of this labor from so many hands is estimated at £50,000,000.

New and Peculiar Mineral.

The news has reached this city of a peculiar kind of mineral called apyrite. It is about 93 per cent silica and is consequently very hard to work It is being worked, however, in Bavaria. It is said that when mixed with water it forms a plastic, sticky mass, which, when dried, becomes firm and resisting, while its volume does not change when exposed to the fire; further, melted metals and scoria do not cling to it, and so apyrite has been found useful for lining furnaces. In the neighborhood of the mines apyrite tempered with water is used instead of lime water and also for plastering. It has in some places superseded fire-brick lining, as in the case of various furnaces. The cupola of a large foundry can be thus lined in a day by two men and it is said that such a lining lasts longer than one of the same material made up into bricks. The substance has been proved useful for repairs to the firework lining of furnaces.—Pittsburg Dispatch.

The Undergraduates, Oxford.

As for the modern undergraduate, as a rule he is the most quiet and peaceable of mortals and has long since given up such violent delights as wrenching off door-knockers, assaulting policemen or squaring up to bargees. Not that he is the least deficient in spirit or courage, as those who have watched the football matches in the parks will readily testify, but, except at such licensed saturnalia as a college "Rag" or a bump supper, he keeps his voice and temper under perfect control and cultivates a dignified repose of manner which would do credit to a member of White's or Arthur's. Anything like loudness or ostentation is vetoed as bad taste and it may be added that his dress is as quiet as his deportment.

Ripened Wisdom.

"Yesser," said little Ben Peachblow. "W'en I gits er big man I's gwinter be a artic 'splorer, sho's yer bawn."

"Shet up dat talk right now," said his father, severely. "Whut foh you gwine 'splorin'?"

"Gwinter fin' de nawf pole."

"Sonny, yoh hyur me say dis: Lef de nawf pole lone. Git yerse'f a good razzer an' er strop. Den go out in s'arch of er fus-class barber pole an' yez gwinter to be jes' ez much use in de commun'ty an' inj'y a heap o' comfort."—Washington Star.

MISS ALCOTT'S PHILOSOPHY.

Author of "Little Women" Wrote that Women Need a Religion.

Letters written at intervals during the last few years of Louisa M. Alcott's life to five "little girl friends," edited by Edward W. Bok, are printed, for the first time, in Ladies' Home Journal. The author of "Little Women" in these letters chats with delightful freedom about her work, her cares, her early struggles and influences, and of her religious faith. In writing to one of her "little girls" who had just lost a sister—one of the five correspondents of earlier years—Miss Alcott says with characteristic charm and loving candor:

"* * * I think you need not worry about any name for your faith, but simply try to be and do good, to love virtue in others, and study the lives of those who are truly worthy of imitation. Women need a religion of their own, for they are called upon to lead a quiet, self-sacrificing life with peculiar trials, needs and joys, and it seems to me that a very simple one is fitted to us whose hearts are usually more alive than heads, and whose hands are tied in many ways. Health of body helps health of soul; cheerful views of all things keep up the courage and brace the nerves. Work for the mind must be had, or daily duty becomes drudgery, and the power to enjoy higher things is lost. Change of scene is sometimes salvation for girls or women, who outgrow the place they are born in, and it is their duty to go away, even if it is to harder work, for hungry minds prey on themselves, and bodies suffer for escape from a too pale or narrow life. I have felt this and often gone away from Concord to teach, which I never liked, because there was no food for my mind in that small conservative town, especially since Mr. Emerson died. Food, fire and shelter are not all that women need, and the noble discontent that asks for more should not be condemned, but helped if possible. At twenty-one I took my little earnings ($20) and a few clothes, and went to seek my fortune, though I might have sat still and been supported by rich friends. All those hard years were teaching me what I afterward put into the books, and so I made my fortune out of my seeming misfortune. I speak of myself because what one has lived one really knows and so can speak honestly."

Reverence for the Bible.

There is a sin prevalent in our households of which we take little note, which, in fact, we encourage either by an indifference to it, or by an active participation in its folly and wickedness: the use of the Word of God for the purpose of making riddles, conundrums, puzzling questions, anagrams, etc., etc., out of it. If we really believe in the Divine origin of the Bible can it be right to give it to children that they may construe its words into odd connections, and make sport and laughter and mental legerdemain from its pages? Is it likely they will reverence on other occasions what has previously been food for their amusement? It is not, and we need not be astonished if the boys and girls who have been permitted to turn the leaves of their Bibles for pastime and entertainment, turn them in after years to find pretext for their infidelity.—Amelia E. Barr in Ladies' Home Journal.

Religious Liberty.

The great triumphant principle of our American Christianity is that it is an independent, self-supporting, self-governing church in a free country, existing independently of the church, but at the same time in perfect harmony and friendly relationship with it. By our American principle persecution is made impossible, because man has religious liberty in the fullest sense, in thought, speech and action so long as he does not interfere with public peace and order. America recognizes religion as purely voluntary. She accords the same freedom to religious liberty that she does to civil liberty, without regard to creed, sect or party.—Rev. S. N. Ussher.

The U. S. Gov't Reports show Royal Baking Powder superior to all others.

A MONSTER PUDDING.

It Was Built on Savage Island, in the Village of Liku.

I had been ten years on Savage Island and meant to come to England on a visit, says a writer in the Spokane Review, but before leaving went to each village to say "good-by" to the people. We had been three weeks from home when we got to a little village called Liku. The evening after our arrival there was a terrible commotion—men, women and children were running about, carrying stocks, some logs of wood and some big stones.

The men began digging a long, shallow trench with their sharp-pointed sticks. The boys brought big stones and firewood. These were piled up all along one side of the trench. The wood was then set on fire and was soon blazing, while the stones on the top were getting hot. While the fire was burning one side little bundles of something white and soft were being undone from the clean leaves that contained them. This was the paste out of which the pudding was to be made.

There was no flour, suet, eggs, milk, plums or currants in it. It was the paste of a native vegetable called taro, and old cocoanut, both grated very fine and mixed together. A long pudding cloth was laid along the side of the trench and in it the pudding was carefully wrapped. It was not calico or linen, but nice, clean banana leaves. Over this long cocoanut leaves were plaited.

When the stones were hot enough some were quickly laid along the bottom of the trench, then the long pudding laid on top of them and then some more stones at the sides and on the top. Some girls had brought heaps of leaves to lay over the top to keep the heat and steam in, and the earth which had been dug out of the trench was thrown over the top. Then the cooks and pudding-makers went to sleep and left the stars to watch their cookery. Next morning at 8 the whole village was astir—men, women and children, all in holiday attire.

It was soon uncovered and was found to be well done. Long poles were brought and laid the whole length. These were fastened to the pudding by small vines, canes, etc. It was then rolled out of the trench on one side; short sticks were made fast cross-wise to the poles and all was ready for taking up. About 100 men and boys then raised it on their shoulders and with one tremendous shout started toward my house, accompanied by the whole village.

I measured it before carving it and found it was 200 feet long—two feet longer than the monument of London is high. It was soon carved into pieces four yards long, and these were distributed all over the land, men carrying as much pudding as their strength would allow to distant villages.

HEADSMAN OF NAPLES.

Death in Exile of a Man Who Had Taken Many Lives.

On the little island of Ustica, forty miles from Palermo, Italy, there died the other day a man who was for years the terror of the people of Naples and the kingdom of the Two Sicilies, says the New York Tribune. He was Gaetano Impellizzeri, once the headsman under Ferdinand II. of Naples. The useless executions attributed to Impellizzeri are countless and, with the cruelty he showed, led to his denunciation by Mr. Gladstone forty years ago in the philippics which the statesman directed against Ferdinand.

The executions were only in part public; it was the executions in secret—usually at night—which gave the man his power. It was he who executed in San Francisco place, Naples, the Calabrian Agistilas Milanoque, who, on December 9, 1856, made a bayonet thrust at King Ferdinand II., and patriots innumerable became his victims.

When Garibaldi entered Naples in September, 1860, the excited populace went in search of the hated headsman, but he cared much for his own life, although he thought little of that of others, and escaped with his wife. Later he was imprisoned on the island of Ustica, where he became an officer of the fort built in those days to protect the island against pirates. He was in receipt of a pension of 15 a month—much more than he deserved. He was 81 years old at the time of his death.

—We ar anxious to do a little good in this world and can think of no pleasanter or better way to do it by recommending One Minute Cough Cure as a preventative of pneumonia, consumption and other serious lung troubles that follow neglected colds. Davenport, the druggist.

—Bucklen's Arnica Salve.—The best salve in the world for cuts, bruises, sores, ulcers, salt rheum. fever sores tetter, chapped hands, chilblains, corns and all skin eruptions, and positively cures piles or no pay repuired. It is guaranteed to give perfect satisfaction, or money refunded. Price 25 cents per box. For sale by Robbins & McCord. tf

—It would be hard to c nvince a man suffering from bilious colic that his agony is due to a microbe with an unpronounceble name. But one dose of DeWitt's Colic & Cholera Cure will convince him of its power to afford instant relief. It kills pain. Davenport, the druggist.

—F. W. Brandt, the man who successfully operated the first electric light plant in this section, is now doing wireing of buildings by contract and selling high grade electrical appliances. For safety and satisfaction drop a card to F. W. Brandt, Garrett, Ind. wwtf

—When we consid r that the intestines are about five times as large as the body, we can realize the intense suffering experienced when they become inflamed. DeWitt's Colic and Cholera Cure sub dues inflammation at once and completely removes the difficulty. Davenport, the druggist.

—Albert Weaver may learn by the following from the Anderson Herald, that he is not the only man who came near being "carried off" by a tarantula: "An immense tarantula was captured on a bunch of bananas at Shackleford & Cowden's commission house yesterday. The insect is larger than a dollar and was able to run with great speed. When caught William Morris had his hand nearly on it. William Riley saw it and managed to take it prisoner. It is caged in a jar at the store.

—The South Bend Times remarks that one reason why people never pay any attention to signs and advertisements daubed on old fences, bridges and stables, is because they do not know whether they are reading the advertisement of some firm that is still in business, or one that has been dead for years. When people read advertisements in a newspaper that is up to date they know the advertiser is alive and doing business.

—Mr. and Mrs. J. D. Leighty have been in the a city a few days. They left last evening over the Wabash for Churubusco.

It takes a rich man to draw a check, a pretty girl to draw attention, a horse to draw a sleigh, a porous plaster to draw the skin, a fakir to draw a crowd, and an advertisement to draw trade.

—Chamberlain's Cough Remedy cures colds, croup and whooping cough. It is pleasant, safe and reliable. For sale by Davenport, the druggist. 2731

—Ira Brandon who has been working at St. Paul during the summer has returned home. He is undecided as to whether he will return to that city or remain in Auburn.

—It has been a long time since Auburn people witnessed such a continued rain as fell all day yesterday. It commenced at about seven o'clock in the morning and continued all day.

—Small in size, but great in results DeWitt's Litt e Early Risers act gently but thoroughly, curing indigestion, dyspepsia and constipation. Small pill, safe pill, best pill. Davenport the druggist.

—Patrons of the postoffice miss the familiar face of Mrs. Dills, who for the past three years has been a faithful and courteous helper there. As previously stated she has resigned her position as she was needed at home.

—The Ashley Times has been reduced from a seven to six column quarto. There are other papers in the county who had better do likewise and not use so much boiler plate.

—Dr. Baxter succeeded to-day in removing a tape worm from Mrs. Barbara Strow, and has it now in his office head and all preserved in alcohol. Two other doctors tried to remove this worm and failed, but Dr. Baxter was successful. It is about 30 feet in length.

—Mr. and Mrs. S. N. Olds, who have been visiting during the past three months with their son W. S. and wife at Plainwell, Michigan, will arrive in Auburn this evening for a short visit with their son A. B. and wife, before returning to their home at St. Joe.

—Mr. and Mrs. S. C. Snyder entretained about twenty Auburn people at their elegant home on north Main St. last night in honor of the Misses. Lizzie and Eula McConnell, Mrs. W. R. Dale and Miss Mable Rose of Angola. Those who enjoyed the hospitalities of Mr. and Mrs. Snyder report an evening of more than usual enjoyment.

Saturday's Daily.

—J. W. Metcalf remembered the old Reliable to-day in fine shape.

—Mrs. L. T. Rice and children, of Wabash, are in the city visiting in the family of her parents Mr. and Mrs. Jacob Walborn, —W. B. Campbell arrived to-day at noon from Anderson and joined Mrs. Campbell who has been visiting in the country a few days.

—Mr. and Mrs. S. M. George and daughters, of Concord, and Mrs. Willoughby, of Attica, and Pearl Hebler, Xenia, O., spent the day at Ft. Wayne yesterday.

—Mr. and Mrs. J. C. Henry started for Mt. Clemens, Mich., this morning on the 5 a. m. Wabash train. They will spend a few weeks at that famous health resort.

—Geo. Reader who will be remembered as the man who had the stroke of paralysis here some months ago died at the Logansport Asylum yesterday. His remains were shipped to C. C. Shaffer this morning. They will be taken to Churubusco to-morrow for burial.

—While at Chicago, T. H. Sprott and F. A. Borst got in sight of Right Reverend Geo. Hazzard, delegate from the state of Washington. He was in a crowd, and they were not able to give him that cordial grasp of the had that old-time relations would seem to call for. But it was the real simon pure George, name blown in the bottle and the bottle uncorked. George is liable to meet dear(?) friends anywhere.

—Garrett Herald:—We went to Auburn on the noon train the Fourth to participate in their celebration and have a good visit with friends from over the country. There was the largest crowd of people present that we ever saw in so small a town, several good judges estimating the number to exceed 10,000. It was the nicest behaved crowd we ever met. Not a sign of drunkenness did we see and no rows of any kind. Some estimate the number who went from Garrett at 1,000. One thing is sure, there was but few left in Garrett during the afternoon.

Monday's Daily.

—Father Young was over from Garrett to-day.

—Dr. Vesta Swarts reports an eleven pound girl born to Mr. and Mrs. B. M. Hastings this morning.

—Mr. and Mrs. Geo. Lackey were entertaining Mrs. Lackey's brother Mr. Henderson over Sunday.

—George Baxter, son of J. W. Baxter has been quite sick a few days. It seems to be a bilious attack of some sort.

—Sunday another was added to the population of our beautiful little city. Mr. and Mrs. Howard McCord are entertaining a new girl.

—Mrs. Emily A. R. Dills and daughter Miss Kitty leave at noon to-day for Lake Side, O. where they will spend the summer at that pleasant resort.

—Wm. Snyder of Butler township was here this forenoon. He and Mrs. S. are now almost alone once more, two of the girls and the son, being now married and Maggie only remaining.

—Mrs. J. E. Pomeroy was at Butler over Sunday the guest of her parents. She was accompanied home this morning by her sister Miss Nellie Bunge who will visit with her a week.

—Edward Willis came over from Waterloo this morning on his wheel. They are getting out the premium lists for the Waterloo fair now, at the Press office, and his business was in connection with that work. All possible efforts are to be made to make the fair a success this year.

—The northwestern yeast companys agent is around again with samples of the wonderful Yeast Foam which is better this year than ever owing to the new machinery being used for pressing out cakes. No excuse for having poor bread when you can get Yeast Foam, good flour and hot oven. 1td&w

—The COURIER representative talked with Ira Brandon to-day who has been in Dakota and Minnesota nearly all summer. He says he was at hundreds of towns and none are as desirable as Auburn as resident towns. And he also said that Auburn had more independent property owners than any western towns of its size. Money was more plentiful in the west.

—John Rohrbaugh at Fairbury, Neb., writes that he did not get his receipt for his last remittance to the COURIER. In reply, we say, the cash was received, and his paper marked paid to June 1st 1897. Thanks for same. Mr. R. never gets behind on his subscription.

—Dr. Heatwole of Goshen and Louis Kerr of Ligonier, both prominent republican politicians, are in the city, consulting Dr. Nusbaum. There must be some dissatisfaction that caused them to come here. We are under the impression that both gentlemen have sleeves big enough to conceal a good sized knife, and that the knife is there.

—Mr. and Mrs. W. C. Hartman spent a pleasant day Sunday. They went over to Cedar Beach on the early train and spent the day with our friend Jones, at Jones' Landing. They put in a part of the day on the lake of course. Mr. Jones has a big patronage of summer guests at his hotel, and they agree that he sets a good table.

—Rev. J. D. Brosy will return from his vacation and fill his pulpit at the Lutheran church as usual next Sunday morning and evening.

—J. H. Pyle has thanks for a big lot of harvest apples, ripe and fragrant. He knows that the people in the COURIER office are very "apple-pious."

—The ladies of the Lutheran church will hold their nickel social Friday afternoon at the home of Mrs. G. W. Moss on west 11th street. All invited.

—James F. Reed has sold the farm he has been advertising in the COURIER, to A. C. Guilford, Mr. Guilford having sold his farm to Amanda McCrory.

—A jolly crowd of thirteen young people went to Waterloo last evening on their wheels, chaperoned by Mrs. Dr. Baxter. They just got back as the rain began to pour down.

—I. S. Kutzner is going down to Albany, where W. D. Rickel is, and expects to get employment there. Mrs. Kutzner will go out and stay with her father till things are ready for her at Albany.

—Bishop Castle is said to be one of the Greatest Pulpit Orators of northern Indiana. He will speak on the fair ground at Waterloo Thursday, July 23. Do not fail to hear him.

—Married July 12, 1896, at the residence of the officiating minister, elder James Barton in Richland, Jacob H. Crider and Miss Nevada Mathews both of Richland township, which will be their home.

—The Keeran Sisters will be prepared to serve dinner at their home on south VanBuren street two doors south of the Lutheran church on Saturday at the date of the republican county convention.

—The Dispatch says McKinley will make a few campaign speeches this year. If he does, then Bryan will take the stump, We heard Bryan's great speech, and we advise McKinley to get into his Ohio cyclone cellar and stay there.

—Augustus Bartles, of the County Home, was in town this morning and reported five calves killed on the farm last night by lightning. They were lying around an apple tree and were evidently killed by the shock, as there were no marks on them nor on the tree, but there was a hole torn in the ground at the roots. They were valuable calves.

—Rev. Will E. Grose was here yesterday in the interest of the Island Park Assembly. He was some years ago a newspaper man being publisher of the Middlebury Record. But like J. F. Snyder of the Lagrange Democrat he quit newspaper work for the ministry. He is devoting all his time at present to the interests of the Assembly.

—Bro. Higley, of the Butler Record, sends out a recommendation signed by J. E. Dodds, president of the Lafayette Normal. But we are not ready to receive that as a valuable recommend till Dodds pays a a long due bill that institution owes the COURIER for advertising. Till that is done we reserve the right to cast our vote for J. H. W. Krontz for surveyor, and we'll wager 16 to 1 that Krontz is our next surveyor.

—We notice in the Inland Educator the announcement of the death of Prof J. A. Marlow of Anderson, Ind. as follows:—"We are pained to announce the death of Prof. J. A. Marlow, State Agent for the Ind. School Book Co. On June 30, Prof. Marlow was run down by the Big Four train at Shelbyville and killed. He was well known over the state and had a large number of friends among educators. He was for a long time superintendent of the Sullivan Co. schools. At one time he figured prominently as a candidate for the state superintendency on the Democratic ticket."

A GOOD DINNER.

The Woman's Relief Corps will give you a good dinner for 20 cents, south of the public square during the republican convention Saturday. They will also serve supper, price 10 cents.

Christian Rally

There will be a grand christian rally on the fair ground at Waterloo Thursday July 23. Choice songs recitations with Bishop Castle orator of the day. Come bring your baskets and enjoy the day with us.

SIMMONS LIVER REGULATOR

THE BEST

is SIMMONS LIVER REGULATOR—don't forget to take it. The Liver gets sluggish during the Winter, just like all nature, and the system becomes choked up by the accumulated waste, which brings on Malaria, Fever and Ague and Rheumatism. You want to wake up your Liver now, but be sure you take SIMMONS LIVER REGULATOR to do it. It also regulates the Liver—keeps it properly at work, when your system will be free from poison and the whole body invigorated.

You get THE BEST BLOOD when your system is in A1 condition, and that will only be when the Liver is kept active. Try a Liver Remedy once and note the difference. But take only SIMMONS LIVER REGULATOR—it is SIMMONS LIVER REGULATOR which makes the difference. Take it in powder or in liquid already prepared, or make a tea of the powder; but take SIMMONS LIVER REGULATOR. You'll find the RED Z on every package. Look for it.

80th Birthday.

There was joy and good fellowship in the "home on the hill" just north of town, at Waterloo, on Sunday, July 12, as that was the 80th birthday of the venerable proprietor, Uncle John Leas. So there was a big family reunion in his honor and the family, with relatives and friends to the number eighty-five gathered there to do him honor. All his surviving brothers and sisters were present, they being Dr. E. R. Lease of Angola, Mrs. Phil Parnel of Smithfield and Mrs. Yeagy of Waterloo. It was a most pleasant gathering in honor of a most worthy man, and though in feeble health he emjoyed the occasion with the happiest of them. And it was an occasion long to be remembered, and the great company separated for their several homes, with a world of good wishes for his continued health and happiness.

SAD DROWNING

Of Young Troup, who Lived near Altona Sunday.

Sunday a load of sixteen boys from Altona and vicinity drove down to Perry Fitch's, southeast of New Era and went in bathing just west of Mr. Fitch's house in the swimming hole in Cedar Creek. The water is deep at this point and is a desirable place to go in bathing as a spring board has been fixed there. The crowd of boys were all enjoying themselves when suddenly they noticed young Troup had disappeared. It is suposed that he took cramps while in the water. He was about 17 years of age.

In One or Two Days.

In the vicinity of Boquet, Westmoreland county, Pa., almost any one can tell you how to cure a lame back or stiff neck. They dampen a piece of flannel with Chamberlain's Pain Balm and bind it on the affected parts and in one or two days the trouble has disapperred. This same treatment will promptly cure a pain in the side or chest. Mr. E. M. Frye, a prominent merchant of Boquet, speaks very highly of Pain Balm, and his recommendations have had much to do with making it popular there. For sale by Davenport, the druggist. 2731

FIVE BALLOTS TAKEN

Platform Declares for Free Silver at 16 to 1.

Great Democratic Gathering at Chicago Indulges in a Battle Royal—Four Michigan Gold Delegates Unseated—Majority and Minority Platforms Presented—Debate by Party Leaders—Hot and Noisy Night Session—Wild Throng in the Coliseum—Convention Scenes and Incidents.

William Jennings Bryan, of Nebraska, was nominated for the Presidency by the Democratic national convention amid scenes of the wildest enthusiasm. The result was reached Friday afternoon on the fifth ballot. When the result of the deciding ballot was announced the vast concourse that filled the Coliseum burst into a storm of cheering and applause that made the great girders of the building tremble. Standing on chairs and climbing on one another's shoulders, the people yelled and screeched and waved hats, canes and handkerchiefs. Swept away by such enthusiasm, nearly all the delegates joined in the wonderful demonstration, whether they had voted for the "boy orator of the Platte" or not.

There were but few demonstrations before the convention was rapped to order Friday morning. The leaders came in quietly. At 10:57 Chairman White of California called the convention to order. Rev. Dr. Green offered prayer. Chairman White then announced that the convention was still on the call of States for nominations. Thereupon Mr. Harrity Pennsylvania placed in nomination ex-Gov. Robert E. Pattison. This evidence that Pennsylvania would stand by the platform and participate in the nomination drew a cry of delight from the silver men, and Pattison's name got a swinging round of applause from the galleries. Mr Mattingly of the District of Columbia seconded the nomination of John R. McLean of Ohio. Delegate Miller of Oregon added to the list of nominations the name of Sylvester Pennoyer of Oregon.

Such a family of favorite sons as the convention showed up after the first ballot has rarely been equaled in a national convention. Until the roll was nearly finished there were thirteen of them and somebody put in an extra vote for Hill. That made fourteen and their relative seniority in point of strength was as follows: Bland, Bryan, Pattison, Boies, Blackburn, McLean, Tillman, Pennoyer, Teller, Stevenson, Russell, Campbell and Hill. The convention proceeded to ballot, with the following result:

FIRST BALLOT.

Bland	223	Pennoyer	10
Bryan	105	Tillman	17
Pattison	95	Russell	2
Boies	86	Campbell	2
Matthews	37	Hill	1
McLean	53	Teller
Blackburn	83	Not voting	1
Stevenson	3

SECOND BALLOT.

Bland	281	Matthews	34
Bryan	197	Pennoyer	8
Pattison	100	Stevenson	10
Black	41	Teller	8
Boies	87	Hill	1
McLean	53

THIRD BALLOT.

Bland	291	McLean	54
Bryan	219	Matthews	34
Blackburn	27	Stevenson	9
Pattison	97	Hill	1
Boies	36	Not voting	162

FOURTH BALLOT.

Bland	241	Blackburn	27
Boies	38	McLean	47
Bryan	275	Stevenson	8
Matthews	35	Hill	1
Pattison	96	Not voting	161

On the fifth ballot Bryan received 560 votes, 48 more than the required two-thirds.

FIRST DAY.

The convention hall doors were opened at 11 o'clock, and those entitled to admission permitted to enter. At 12 o'clock the Seventh Regiment band took its station in the balcony over the chairman's desk, and discoursed sweet harmony till he arrived to call the convention to order.

At 12:50 o'clock Chairman Harrity, of the National Democratic Committee, with the convention gavel in hand, rapped loudly for order and introduced Rev. E. M. Stires, who raised his hands to heaven in an invocation for wisdom, peace and good-will among the assembled Democracy of the nation. The vast assemblage, numbering over twelve thousand people, rose and remained standing during the devotions.

At the conclusion of the prayer the chairman announced that the National Committee had reported Hon. David B. Hill of New York for temporary presiding officer of the convention. Then he was interrupted and the silver men had their chance. Chairman Harrity recognized National Committeeman Clayton of Alabama. As he rose the silver men sent a mighty roar of applause. Before he had opened his mouth the crowd knew what was coming, and for two minutes kept up a hubbub that drowned out his voice.

It was well known Mr. Clayton intended to oppose the national committee by a minority report favoring Senator Daniel for temporary chairman. Senator Daniel's name was wildly cheered, silver delegates rising from their seats and tossing their hats in the air. A hasty review of the floor covered by the excited delegates speedily showed that in point of numbers the minority report was the favorite; it was really the first slogan of the silver forces.

When order had been restored Allan McDermott of New Jersey made an impassioned plea for Senator Hill. Mr. McDermott said that it would not be proper to overturn the traditions of the Democratic party in a thoughtless manner. He argued against turning down a man who for years had been prominent in the Democratic party, and whose words, "I am a Democrat," are known the length and breadth of the land. He declared that free silver was a sufficient novelty in the campaign without striking out at the beginning at the very foundation principles of the party. Mr. McDermott was given generous applause.

Then ex-Governor Waller of Connecticut stepped upon the platform and lent his oratory to what the delegates thought was a conciliatory speech. He declared that both Hill and Daniel were great men. Their names should be spoken together, cheered together and voted together. He then threw out the olive branch, which the delegates were quick to see, by advocating that Hill be made temporary chairman and Daniel permanent chairman

Mr. Whitney and his fellow delegates from New York applauded the declaration that Hill and Daniel should be cheered together, and there was an attempt at a demonstration when Waller shouted that he would be the last man to bolt and would stay with the janitor when every other man had left the Democratic hall.

C. S. Thomas, the national committeeeman from Colorado, was then introduced amid the plaudits of the silver men. He declared it was an unheard of procedure for the national committee to attempt to force upon the convention a chairman in opposition to the ascertained will of the majority. This was the reason no minority report had ever been presented before at a convention. As he proceeded the silver delegates cheered, especially when he openly declared that he and others of the West had long become indifferent to what the national committee did.

He made a strong point when he told the convention that four years ago he had advocated Mr. Hill's nomination for President, and he and others like him had been refused a hearing. They had been cried down; Senator Daniel had been cried down, because Mr. Hill's opponent, Mr. Cleveland, had control of the convention. The majority of the convention had a right to name the temporary presiding officer.

The impatience of the silver men vented itself in cries of "vote" when Mr. Thomas finished, but Chairman Harrity called for Charles E. Waller, of Alabama. Mr. Waller proved himself to be a fiery Southerner, and he showed feeling when he told how he had been made to swallow bitter medicine four years ago when another New York Democrat had been thrust over the head of Senator Hill. This was the first reference to President Cleveland; it was unfriendly, and it passed without notice at the hands of the convention.

Michael S. Tarpey, of California, followed in favor of minority report.

"The money question," said he, "is the only question in which the Democracy of the country has an interest in this campaign. We want the temporary chairman of this convention to sound the keynote of this convention and to go to the country as a declaration of our views. We are determined that that keynote will be a silver speech in harmony with the views of this convention." A volley of cheers greeted this brief and outspoken declaration.

The galleries rose to peer over into the pit to discover the meaning of the cheers, that began sputtering like firecrackers. They saw a short, round man, with a red, chubby face and curly gray hair, pushing his way out from a group of New York delegates in the corner where Whitney, Hill, Tracy, Grant and Sheehan were. It was John R. Fellows. Three cheers were started when he flung at the majority the taunt that it proposed to begin the convention by adopting a Republican precedent, "disowned, dishonored, flouted by Democrats always and everywhere."

Mr. Ladd from Illinois addressed the convention. He said: "There is no antagonism to Senator Hill—a great man, an able man, an honest man. It is not to turn down Mr. Hill, as has been said, but it is to be recognized as a majority of the Democratic party of the United States, and that is all. If the committee has made a recommendation that we do not like, may we not vote against it, and when we do it exercise the greatest democratic privilege in the world of voting as we please?"

Mr. Harrity then put the vote upon the motion that the name of John W. Daniel, of Virginia, be substituted for that of David B. Hill, of New York, for the position of temporary chairman of the convention. The vote resulted: Yeas, 556; nays, 349; not voting, 1.

Escorted by the committee, the temporary chairman, John W. Daniel, of Virginia, passed up to the platform, where, when he appeared, he was received with an immense eruption of cheers and yells. While the delegates and everybody else in the house were yelling and cheering Chairman Harrity passed the gavel over to Mr. Daniel, who took it and then addressed the convention.

When Mr. Daniel had concluded, the secretary called the roll of States and territories for the appointment of committees, after which the convention adjourned until 10 o'clock Wednesday morning.

SECOND DAY.

The crowds began pouring into the Coliseum shortly after 9 o'clock Wednesday morning, but the heavy-eyed delegates, many of whom had had an all-night vigil, were late in arriving. At 10:44 o'clock Temporary Chairman Daniel called the convention to order and directed that the aisles be cleared. Rev. Dr. Green, of Cedar Rapids, Iowa, offered prayer, at the conclusion of which Chairman Daniel called for the report of the committee on credentials. The committee was not ready with its recommendations and by unanimous consent no business was transacted until the report was received.

The convention tired of inactivity and shouted for speeches. Ex-Gov. Hogg of Texas was called and spoke for half an hour. He urged harmony and raked the Republicans fore and aft.

Senator White, of California, who had been selected for permanent chairman by the silver men, then relieved Mr. Daniel of the gavel and asked the further pleasure of the convention. The galleries shouted for Blackburn, Hill, Bryan and Altgeld. "Kentucky Joe" made a vigorous speech for free silver. Senator Hill and Mr. Bryan were not present. The crowd shouted vociferously for Gov. Altgeld The Governor spoke for nearly half an hour, and from start to finish his address was a bitter denunciation of the capitalists, far and near. J. F. Williams, of Massachusetts, followed with a free silver speech. He, too, attacked the railroads, the corporations and Wall street.

Five minutes later the committee on credentials filed into the hall. Delegate Atwood, of Kansas, chairman of the committee, read the report. It confirmed the action of the national committee in every detail except Nebraska and Michigan. In the former case the action of the national committee was reversed, thus seating the Bryan delegates. In regard to Michigan, the committee decided to leave the matter open for future action. Chairman White put the motion to adopt and declared it carried by a viva voce vote. The seating of the Bryan delegates was received with tremendous cheers by the convention, and the Nebraskans, with Wm. J. Bryan on their shoulders, marched into the hall 'mid a remarkable reception. The gold delegates from Nebraska retired to seats in the audience On motion of Gov. Altgeld the convention then adjourned until 5 o'clock.

Wednesday Evening Session.

The delegates reassembled for the evening session a little before 6 o'clock, and, although the sunshine falling through the western windows gave the convention hall an air of beautiful peace, it did not extend its soothing influence to the hearts of the Democrats on the floor. They were tired, and many of them were hungry.

The issue was precipitated when the committee reported in favor of seating four contesting delegates in Michigan. This change gave the silver men a majority, and under the unit rule they could cast the vote of the entire delegation for the white metal. A minority report was presented and followed by speeches from Gov. McLaurin of Mississippi, Saulsbury of Delaware, Stevenson of Michigan, and others. Stevenson scored the committee and the contestants in vitriolic arguments, Blake of Texas declared the contested seats were tainted with fraud of which the committee had evidence, and McKnight of Michigan refuted the accusations.

Amid much confusion, the roll was called upon the substitute. The excitement grew as the vote proceeded. Seven delegates from Alabama put themselves on record as opposed to unseating the Dickinson delegates, and eleven Californians, led by Senator White, did the same thing. The silver men sent up a wild cheer when A. S. Trude announced the vote of Illinois as 48 against the substitute. Senator Hill rose when New York was called and announced "Seventy-two votes aye." The announcement inspired a great demonstration in the galleries. The gold men rose from their seats with flying hats and handkerchiefs, and cheered continuously for over five minutes. The gold delegates got up on their chairs, New York and Massachusetts leading. But, only one-third of the convention rose. The other two-thirds sat silent and stern. The demonstration which succeeded the announcement of the vote was in marked contrast. In one case the gallery led; in the other the delegates. The galleries shouted for gold, but the delegates voted for silver. When the chairman declared the amendment lost by a vote of 558 to 368 the silver delegates leaped to their chairs in demonstration, turning defiantly toward the audience as they cheered.

The silver men had won battle number two and the non-contentious business of electing permanent officers followed. Senator Stephen M. White, of California, was escorted to the chair. The crowd knew him from his appearance at the morning session, where he had temporarily relieved Chairman Daniel, and they listened intently to his very short speech.

The convention adjourned for the night after scenes of wildest confusion.

THIRD DAY.

Shortly before 11 o'clock Thursday morning the convention came to order. Rebellion hung like a pall above the great body, and 20,000 people ranged the sloping hills that overlooked the arena to watch the battle of the wrestling giants. The silver leaders entered with light and buoyant step. The faces of the gold leaders were grim, grave and defiant. The managers of the several candidates were marshaling their forces. Chairman White was so hoarse he could scarcely speak, and he handed the gavel over to Congressman Richardson of Tennessee, who announced that the committee on resolutions was ready to report, and called to the platform Senator Jones of Arkansas to make the committee report.

The platform as reported by the committee declares for the free and unlimited coinage of silver at the ratio of 16 to 1. The issue of bonds in time of peace is denounced. National banks to be deprived of the power of issuing notes. A tariff for revenue only is demanded and the declaration made that a revival of the McKinley law would be disastrous to the country. An income tax law is declared for, to be effected by constitutional amendment. Sympathy for the Cubans is expressed. It is demanded that pauper immigrants be excluded. Liberal pension appropriations are favored. Senator Hill's bill prohibiting punishment in contempt cases is approved. The Pacific railroad refunding bill is denounced. The third term idea is opposed, and the declared extravagance of the last Republican Congress is denounced.

The platform concluded, the report for the minority was read by J. H. Wade, of Ohio, and the gold people rose and cheered, but their efforts were faint. The indorsement of the Democratic administration which Senator Hill had made a losing fight for in the committee on resolutions, brought down a yell from the galleries. New York delegates stood and waved their hats. The issue was drawn. Senator Tillman, of South Carolina, opened the great debate in behalf of free coinage. On one lapel of his coat he wore sage.

Senator Jones followed Tillman. Then came Senator Hill, who began by saying, "I am a Democrat, and South Carolina with all her power cannot drive me out of the party. We are here to unite, not to divide Democracy, but we cannot safely ignore the monetary systems of other nations I know, indeed, that it is the way of the majority that we care not what other countries may do; but I say to you that you might as well do away with all international agreements."

A sensational wave of enthusiasm for ex-Congressman William J. Bryan, of Nebraska, was aroused by his brilliant speech on the adoption of the platform.

When the debate was finished the convention came to the real vote of the day. The motion to adopt the majority report making the Democracy a free silver party was before the house and the roll was called, with the following result::

A recess was then declared until 8 o'clock.

Thursday Night Session.

At the night session, in the presence of fully 25,000 people, the nominating speeches were made, and there was a repetition of the exciting scenes of the afternoon. The Bryan enthusiasm continued. The galleries went frantic at every mention of his name, and the wild demonstration of the afternoon was duplicated when he was placed in nomination by H. T. Lewis of Georgia, and seconded by W. C. Klutz of North Carolina, George Fred Williams of Massachusetts, and Thomas J. Kernan of Louisiana. Senator Vest placed the Missourian in nomination, and Gov. Overmeyer of Kansas seconded the nomination. The name of Gov. Claude Matthews of Indiana was presented by Senator Turple of Indiana, and seconded by Delegate Trippett of Colorado. Fred White of Iowa placed Boies in nomination, and the Waterloo statesman owed a magnificent ovation to the enthusiasm of Miss Winnie Murray, a young woman from Nashua, Iowa, who led the Boies demonstration as Mrs. Carson Lake did the Blaine demonstration at Minneapolis four years ago. Senator Joe Blackburn of Kentucky was placed in nomination by John S. Rhea, a brilliant Kentucky orator, and seconded by Gen. St. Clair of West Virginia, and W. W. Foote of California, and McLean of Ohio was nominated by Delegate Patrick of the Buckeye State.

The crowd of the evening was the largest probably ever seen at a national convention. It seemed as great as the enormous multitude which gathered at the dedication of the World's Fair in the Manufactures Building. It completely filled the hall, and the effect of the bright rays of the electric lights upon the upturned faces and the swaying bodies as some incentive—the playing of the band, the arrival of a prominent man or the display of a familiar lithograph—moved the crowd to a nervous outburst was most curious, and at times extremely disquieting, for no one could escape apprehension lest a sudden fear should send this great mass tumbling across the amphitheater. Long after the hall was crowded until the walls threatened to burst at their joints a turbulent and angry crowd raged at the doors. The hour named for reassembling was 8 o'clock, but it was half an hour later before the rush of feet and the roar of voices in the galleries subsided sufficiently to permit Mr. McClellan, who again occupied the chair in the place of the permanent chairman, Senator White of California, to compel order.

At the adjournment, half an hour after midnight, all arrangements had been completed for the balloting to begin at 10 o'clock the following morning.

Herman Friedmann, director of the Rheinisch Westphalian Bank, Berlin, of which Dr. Fritz Friedmann was chairman, was sentenced to six years' imprisonment and seven years' loss of civil rights, after having been convicted of forgery and embezzlement.

THE DEMOCRATIC NATIONAL CONVENTION IN SESSION.

WILLIAM JENNINGS BRYAN.

PERMANENT CHAIRMAN WHITE.

SCENE WHEN BRYAN'S NOMINATION WAS ANNOUNCED.

DEMOCRATIC PLATFORM.

The platform as reported by the Committee on Resolutions to the Democratic National Convention in Chicago is as follows:

We, the democrats of the United States, in national convention assembled, do reaffirm our allegiance to those great essential principles of justice and liberty upon which our institutions are founded and which the democratic party has advocated from Jefferson's time to our own—freedom of speech, freedom of the press, freedom of conscience, the preservation of personal rights, the equality of all citizens before the law, and the faithful observance of constitutional limitations.

FINANCIAL PLANK—Recognizing that the money question is paramount to all others at this time, we invite attention to the fact that the federal constitution names silver and gold together as the money metals of the United States, and that the first coinage law passed by congress under the constitution made the silver dollar the unit of value and admitted gold to free coinage at the ratio measured by the silver dollar unit.

We declare that the act of 1873 demonetizing silver without the knowledge or approval of the American people has resulted in the appreciation of gold and a corresponding fall in the prices of commodities produced by the people; a heavy increase in the burden of taxation and of all debts, public and private; the enrichment of the money lending class at home and abroad; prostration of industry and impoverishment of the people.

We are unalterably opposed to the single gold standard, which has locked fast the prosperity of an industrial people in the paralysis of hard times.

Gold monometallism is a British policy, and its adoption has brought other nations into financial servitude to London. It is not only un-American but anti-American, and it can be fastened on the United States only by the stifling of that indomitable spirit and love of liberty which proclaimed our political independence in 1776 and won it in the war of the revolution.

We demand the free and unlimited coinage of both gold and silver at the present legal ratio of 16 to 1 without waiting for the aid or consent of any other nation. We demand that the standard silver dollar shall be a full legal tender, equally with gold, for all debts, public and private, and we favor such legislation as will prevent the demonetization of any kind of legal tender money by private contract.

We are opposed to the policy and practice of surrendering to the holders of the obligations of the United States the option reserved by law to the government of redeeming such obligations in either silver coin or gold coin.

BONDS—We are opposed to the issuing of interest-bearing bonds of the United States in time of peace, and condemn the trafficking with banking syndicates, which, in exchange for bonds and at an enormous profit to themselves, supply the federal treasury with gold to maintain the policy of gold monometallism.

Congress alone has the power to coin and issue money, and President Jackson declared that this power could not be delegated to corporations or individuals. We therefore demand that the power to issue notes to circulate money be taken from the national banks, and that all paper money shall be issued directly by the treasury department.

TARIFF AND TAXATION—We hold that tariff duties should be levied for purposes of revenue, and that taxation should be limited by the needs of the government honestly and economically administered. We denounce as disturbing to business the republican threat to restore the McKinley law, which has been twice condemned by the people in national elections, and which, enacted under the false plea of protection to home industry, proved a prolific breeder of trusts and monopolies, enriched the few at the expense of the many, restricted trade and deprived the producers of the great American staples of access to their natural markets. Until the money question is settled we are opposed to any agitation for further changes in our tariff laws, except such as are necessary to make the deficit in revenue caused by the adverse decision of the Supreme Court on the income tax. There would be no deficit in the revenue but for the annulment by the Supreme Court of a law passed by a democratic congress in strict pursuance of the uniform decisions of that court for nearly one hundred years, that court having sustained constitutional objections to its enactment, which has been overruled by the ablest judges who had ever sat on that bench. We declare that it is the duty of congress to use all the constitutional power which remains after that decision, or which may come from its reversal by the court as it may hereafter be constituted, so that the burdens of taxation may be equally and impartially laid, to the end that wealth may bear its proportion of the expenses of the government.

We hold that the most efficient way of protecting American labor is to prevent the importation of foreign pauper labor to compete with it in the home market, and that the value of the home market to our American farmers and artisans is greatly reduced by a vicious monetary system which depresses the prices of their products below the cost of production and thus deprives them of the means of satisfying their needs.

REPUBLICAN CONGRESSES—We denounce the profligate waste of the money wrung from the people by oppressive taxation and the lavish appropriations of recent republican congresses, which have kept taxes high while the labor that pays them is unemployed and the product of the people's toil are depressed in price till they no longer repay the cost of production. We demand a return to that simplicity and economy which best befits a democratic government and a reduction in the number of useless officers, the salaries of which drain the substance of the people.

FEDERAL INTERFERENCE—We denounce the arbitrary interference by federal authorities in local affairs as a violation of the constitution of the United States and a crime against free institutions, and we especially object to government by injunction as a new and highly dangerous form of oppression by which federal judges, in contempt of the laws of the states and rights of citizens, become at once legislators, judges and executioners; and we approve the bill passed at the last session of the United States senate and now pending in the house relative to contempts in federal courts and providing for trials by jury in certain cases of contempt.

PACIFIC FUNDING BILL—No discrimination should be indulged in by the government of the United States in favor of its debtors. We approve of the refusal of the Fifty-third congress to pass the Pacific railroad funding bill; denounce the effort of the present republican congress to enact a similar measure.

PENSIONS—Recognizing the just claims of deserving union soldiers, we heartily indorse the rule of Commissioner Murphy that no names shall be arbitrarily dropped from the pension roll, and the fact of enlistment and service should be deemed conclusive evidence against disease and disability before enlistment.

SYMPATHY FOR CUBA—We extend our sympathy to the people of Cuba in their heroic struggle for liberty and independence.

CIVIL SERVICE—We are opposed to life tenure in the public service. We favor appointments based upon merits, fixed terms of office, and such an administration of the civil service laws as will afford equal opportunities to all citizens of ascertained fitness.

AGAINST THIRD TERM—We declare it to be the unwritten law of this republic, established by custom and usage of one hundred years and sanctioned by the examples of the greatest and wisest of those who founded and have maintained our government, that no man should be eligible for a third term of the presidential office.

Confiding in the justice of our cause and the necessity of its success at the polls we submit the foregoing declaration of principle and purposes to the considerate judgment of the American people. We invite the support of all citizens who approve them and who desire to have them made effective through legislation for the relief of the people and the restoration of the country's prosperity.

FOR A NATIONAL FLOWER.

The Columbine's Claims to Be Selected as Our Floral Emblem.

Gertrude Christian Fosdick, in the Ladies' Home Journal, advocates the adoption of the columbine as our National flower, and considers its many commending points: "First, its very name suggest Columbia," she writes. "Nor is this, as may appear, a mere trivial play upon words. We know that the word Columbus means dove, a fact full of poetic significance when we remember how Columbus, like Noah's messenger of old, was sent forth to discover a new land. We also know that the columbine took its name from the resemblance which one view of the flower bears to a group of doves. This form grows wild in the region where Columbus was born, as well as in our Rocky Mountain States. Then, too, the botanical and horticultural name of the flower is Aquilegia, which is connected with the Latin aquila, an eagle, and was so named because the flower reversed suggests an eagle's talons. Thus we have the thought of our American eagle, emblematic of fearless power. Again, a front view of the flower shows the outline to be a beautiful five-rayed star, emblematic of the stars of our flag, while the leaf terminates in thirteen lobes, the number of the stripes, as well as of the number of original States in the Union. Another point is that while the columbine grows in many colors, three colors—the brilliant red, pure white and the exquisite cerulean blue—are the American variety of the flower. Once more, a single petal of one of the long-spurred variety is the shape of a horn of plenty, significant of this fruitful land, while the short-spurred petal forms a perfect little liberty cap. Lastly, it grows in every State of the Union, from the Atlantic to the Pacific, and from Canada to the Gulf. It point of hardihood it compares favorably with the rose. Our wild columbines are in full bloom by Memorial Day, and have not all disappeared by the Fourth of July."

Jilted by Famous Men.

It is a curious fact, says a Washington correspondent, that there are several women here who find a source of gratification in advertising that they have been jilted by famous men. A former sweetheart of John C. Calhoun is an inmate of Louise Home. She has a ring that he gave her, a lock of hair, and other mementoes of an early engagement, and she likes to tell the story of her love affair.

Another woman here was once engaged to James Buchanan, and might have been mistress of the White House had she been so inclined. She does not advertise the fact, however, but the story is related by her friends to explain the reason why she prefers to remain a recluse rather than occupy the social position which her wealth and accomplishments would comamnd.

Family Life.

Family life sustains national life—that is, by lightening the duties that would otherwise fall heavily upon the State. No one can compute the degree to which the family circle, with its ever-prevading influence, anticipates wants, prevents crime, promotes industry and independence, and thus holds back many of the burdens that would otherwise be borne by the State. It is safe to say that there would be a tenfold necessity for laws and penalties all through the country were it not for the controlling and guiding influence of the home.

Electricity from the Sea.

At first glance there seems to be no connection between the breaking of sea waves and the electrical condition of the air. Recent investigations, however, show that the shattering of the waves and the scattering of the spray have the effect of imparting positive electricity to the atmosphere. Visitors to the seashore experience a stimulation from the ozone contained in the air, and the presence of this is ascribed to the electrifying action of the spray from the breaking waves. This same effect, from the same cause, is noticed near waterfalls.

The Cat's Stretching.

The old family cat awoke from a nap before the fire and stretched himself in the manner common to cats. Margie looked at him with distended eyes.

"My doodness!" she exclaimed; "I dess ze cat's doin' t' boil over."—Judge.

THE POET'S SONG.

The soul of the poet is haunted
By a song so strange and sweet
That, if the world could hear it,
Its restless heart would beat
To grander and nobler measures,
And those bowed down with pain
Would half forget their sorrows
In listening to the strain.

But he cannot voice the music
That haunts his poet-heart.
If he could, the souls who heard him
Would break their bonds apart,
And up to the heights would follow
This singer as he sung,
And earth would win back the glory
It had when it was young.

He hears in the wind, in the pine tree,
And the sorrowful plaint of the sea,
The cry of a captive spirit
That is struggling to be free.
So ever the soul of the poet
By its captive song is stirred,
The sweet and unearthly music
No ear but his has heard.

Sometimes you will hear him singing,
And count the song most sweet;
But when he sings the sweetest
He feels the old defeat.
It is only the poor, weak echo
Of the music he would make,
And because he cannot voice it
It seems that his heart must break.

I think that the heart so haunted
On earth is always dumb,
But the language that it longs for
Some day will surely come.
High on the hills of heaven
The soul of the poet will sing
The songs that it could not utter
In his earthly wandering.

—Eben E. Rexford.

THE EMPRESS'S AUTOGRAPH.

Scarcely had the postman gone out of the house, after having left the morning letters, when Jules Dupre, who was watching from his sixth-story window, descended hurriedly to the porter's office.

"Any letters for me?" he asked.

The porter put on his spectacles, gathered up the letters which had just come in, looked them over one by one, and replied, laconically:

"None."

"Thank you," said the young man, and he slowly remounted the stairs, where his friend, Armand, was waiting for him.

Through economy, the two young men lived in the same room. There were to be seen all their furniture, all their books, and all their papers. There were more papers than anything else, because both of them ran manuscript mills. We regret to say that while the two young men turned out a great deal of manuscript, they succeeded in placing very little. Once in a while, one of them would get an article inserted in one of the papers, but they scarcely made enough to live on, even by making a partnership of their assests—and liabilties.

"Well?" said Armand, seeing his companion enter.

"Nothing, as I told you. We shall have to wait until the end of the month. My uncle is man who is a believer in fixed dates."

"The deuce! We have five days yet to wait. Still, I would not object to breakfasting to-day instead of five days from now."

"We needn't breakfast."

"I am as hungry as a wolf. You know we had rather a light supper yesterday."

"Yes, it is true that a smoked herring for two is scarcely gluttony."

Armand, his hands in his pockets, walked up and down the room reflectively.

"See here," said he, "don't you know anybody who could loan us a hundred francs?"

"Yes, I know lots who could, but I know no one who would."

Armand suddenly cried out: "I have an idea."

"Is it a good one?"

"Listen. Have you not often spoke to me of an old collector of autographs who lives in this house?"

"Yes. He lives on the first floor, a man named Bridoux."

"What sort of a man is he?"

"Well, I don't know. I have scarcely seen him more than a couple of times."

"Suppose we try and sell him something?"

"That is a good idea. It is true we have plenty of autographs, but they are mostly our own. He wants historic ones."

"Are you sure no celebrity ever wrote to us?"

"I don't think so, but there is the correspondence coffer. Look through it."

Armand seated himself at the table, emptied the box upon the table, and began to go through the letters. For at least half an hour he carefully turned over the sheets of paper.

Suddenly he crid out:

"Eureka! I have found it—a letter from the Empress Marie Louise."

Feverishly he waved in the air a yellowing sheet of paper almost cut in two by the folds.

Jules looked at it. "Why, I recognize that!" said he. "It is a note from little Marie Louise, who used to be a saleswoman at the lace-counter in the Louvre. I got that letter from her when I was serving my volunteer term of a year, with the grade of corporal."

"I tell you, old man, that it is from the Empress Marie Louise, and it is addressed to the great Napoleon."

"And dated 1873?"

"1813, my dear fellow. The seven looks exactly like a one. It is after the victorious battle of Lutzen, and this is what the empress wrote:

"'My Little Corporal: You have won enough of laurels for the moment. Leave your army, and come to me at the Louvre, where I am yawning in the midst of billows of lace.

Marie Louise.'"

"And you think you can sell that to our neighbor Bridoux? Why, you are joking. It would be a swindle."

"You can aid me. Have you that false beard that you wore at the masquerade last year?"

"Yes, I think it is around somewhere."

"Listen, then, and I will teach you your role."

In a few words Armand instructed his friend what he had to do, and then putting the precious autograph in his pocket-book, said: "Do not forget. Knock in a quarter of an hour."

Armand repaired at once to the apartment of Bridoux. The autograph-collector lived alone. He was a man of about sixty years of age. Armand looked at him critically.

"I wish to speak to M. Bridoux."

"That's my name, sir."

"I wish to see you on a serious affair."

"Come in," said Bridoux.

Armand entered, and Bridoux offered him a chair.

"Sir," said Armand, "I have heard of you as being one of the most erudite autograph-collectors in Paris, and I wish to show you something very rare—an autograph of the Empress Marie Louise."

So saying, Armand unbuttoned his coat, carefully took out his lank pocket-book, and from it took the letter, which he placed under the eyes of the autograph-collector.

Bridoux read it, mused, and said:

It is very short. You say that those characters are from the hands of the Empress Marie Louis? Her autographs are very rare.

"It is authentic. The empress addressed it to the great Napoleon the day after the battle of Lutzen."

"But the emperor lived at the Tuileries then."

"Certainly, sir, and that observation proves your intimate knowledge of the history of the time. But, if you will remember, during the absence of the Little Corporal, as he whirled from battle-field to battle-field the empress was in the habit of retiring to the Louvre."

Bridoux was evidently flattered at his historical knowledge being praised; but, rubbing his nose reflectively, he said:

"How did the letter fall into your hands?"

"Oh, in the most natural manner in the world. I got the letter from my father, who got it from my grandfather. My grandfather—a soldier of the Empire, and a fanatic admirer of Napoleon—picked up this letter one day when it had fallen from the pocket of the great man, and preserved it as a precious relic. Sir, nothing but the most urgent need would force me to sell it. But I must have one hundred francs. It is for me a question of life and death. Nevertheless, I beg you to believe I am patriotic, for if I come to you, it is because you are French, and because, if you purchase it this precious document will remain in my country. I could have had ten times the price I asked you. Just now an Englishman tried to buy it on any terms. He followed me, even dogging my steps to the door of this house."

But Bridoux evidently did not appear in a hurry to bind the bargain.

"I would willingly buy it, but I wish to consult an expert first."

"I regret, sir," replied Armand, "that I cannot wait." He turned cold, inside as he said to himself: 'This affair is going to fall through if Jules does not hurry up."

At this moment the door-bell rang. Bridoux went to open it. Jules entered. He was unrecognizable. His hat was on the back of his head, his coat was buttoned to the chin, and he had on a pair of long red whiskers not unlike those which adorn the English tourists who travel around with those queer "personally conducted" parties.

At the sight of this curious personage, the autograph-collector stared in stupefaction.

"Pardon me," said the false Englishman. "I wish to speak to the gentleman woh just came into your house."

Bridoux was about to reply, when Armand interrupted.

"How," said he, "you here again, man?"

"Yes. I will give you two hundred francs for your letter."

"But I told you I would not sell it."

"I will give you five hundred francs."

"I tell you, sir, that I am already making a bargain with this gentleman."

"I will give you a thousand francs."

"I beg you, sir, to leave the room."

"Very well," said the false Englishman, "I will wait for you outside the door, but I must have that autograph," and he left.

"You see," said Armand to Bridoux, "the price that Englishman attaches to this precious document. Don't force me to let it pass into his hands when I ask you only one hundred francs."

The autograph-collector was at last convinced. He took out of his secretaire a bank-note for one hundred francs, and gave it to Armand, who thanked him and withdrew.

Not long after that the two young men made a raise, and the first thing they did was to put a bank-note of one hundred francs into an envelope with this document: "Restitution and thanks," and addressed it to Bridoux.

But Bridoux never knew what it meant. He simply covered the hundred francs into his treasury, and for him the note of the little saleswoman at the Louvre lace-counter is still an authentic autograph of the Empress Marie Louise.—From the French in Argonaut.

An Intricate Machine.

Hooks and eyes formerly were made by hand, the wire of which they are formed being bent into the proper shape with pliers; now, however, they are entirely made by machines of great simplicity and beauty. With a pair of the latter it is possible to make two hundred hooks and the same number of eyes in one minute. The operations of the machine are first, to draw the wire forward from the supplying reel, then cut off the length required for hook or eye, as the case may be; a sinker then descends and forces it into a slot, by which it is bent, and two projecting cams, acting at the same time on the two ends, bend them over so as to form the lateral loops used for sewing the hook or eye to the garment then, in the case of the hook, it is passed under another sinker, which forces the double wire into another slot and forms the hook part; one side of the slot, being movable, is made to strike the bent portion of the hook sufficiently to flatten it. It is then complete, and drops out to make room for another.

"Knock-Out" Honey.

Mrs. C. Riddle, who gave her residence as Delaware, O., told the police of Columbus a queer story the other day. She said that while on the train a well-dressed stranger handed around a jar of clarified honey. She smelled of it, fell asleep and when she awoke her pocketbook with all her money was gone. She says that the honey had been doctored.

Hill in Holland.

It seems absurd to speak of a hill in Holland, for if the best guessers are right, the name of the country is from our word hollow, meaning a depression in the land; but Captain Knight found at Groningen a hill that was the showplace of the town. It was artificial.

"There is a fine hill in the Plantaage," said my companion, "and from the summit of it you will be able to see the country for a great distance around."

It interested me greatly to hear that there was such a thing as a hill in Holland.

"But where is it?" I asked, looking round the interminable plain. "I can see no hill."

"It is just over there, but you can not see it, for it is hidden by that bush."

I ascended this fine hill, which proved to be an artificial mound not twenty feet in height, but the natives are very proud of it, and speak of it as if it were some huge mountain. As an instance of how successfully a Groninger is deceived by his admiration for it, I may mention that my companion heaved a deep sigh, mopped his face, and dropped exhausted into a chair—thoughtfully placed there by the corporation for this object—when he reached the summit. But to do this eminence justice, it must be allowed that the hill is beyond dispute above the level of the sea.

"Nothing Extraordinary."

Col. W. K. Stuart tells the following story of a Scotch subaltern at Gibraltar. The latter was one day on guard with another officer, who, unfortunately, fell down a precipice four hundred feet, and was killed.

Non-military readers should understand that in the guard reports there is a small addendum—viz., "N. B.—Nothing extraordinary since guard mounting"—the meaning of which is that, in case anything particular should occur, the officer commanding the guard is bound to mention it.

Our friend, however, said nothing about the accident that had occurred to his brother officer, and, some hours after, the brigade-major came to his quarters, on the part of the officer commanding, with the report in his hand, to demand an explanation.

The brigade-major, addressing him, said, "You say, sir, in your report, 'N. B. Nothing extraordinary since guard mounting,' when your brother officer on duty, with you, has fallen over a precipice, four hundred feet, and been killed.

"Weel, sir," replied B——, "I dinna think there's anything extraordinary in it ava; if he'd faun doon a precipice four hundred feet, and no been killed, I should ha'e thought it vary extraordinary, indeed, and wad ha'e put it doon in my report."

Fabulous Profits of Foreign Artists.

The amount of good hard American dollars that is carried out of this country every year by foreign artists is enormous and almost exceeds belief. Here is a list which includes the amount of money carried away from our shores by the best known foreigners: Paderewski tops the list with $240,000. The Decreskes easily took away $10,000; while Maurel, Calve and Melba divided 225,000 between them. Plancon the tenor, and Mme. Nordica are 50,000 ahead on the season. Bernhardt is 100,000 richer for her short stay here Henry Irving 170,900, and Eleonora Duse $80,000. Yvette Guilbert, the Paris concert singer and Chevalier, of costermonger fame, pocketed 24,000 and $18,000 respectively. There are plenty of others who have added handsome sums to their bank accounts through their brief sojourns in Uncle Sam's domain.

Valuable Franchise Secured.

The franchise of easy digestion—one of the most valuable in the gift of medical science—can be secured by any person wise enough to use Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, either to suppress growing dyspepsia, or to uproot it at maturity. Bilious, rheumatic, and fever and ague sufferers, persons troubled with nervousness, and the constipated, should also secure the health franchise by the same means.

A Successful Horseless Carriage.

Foreshadowing of the horseless age may be seen every night on the boulevard, in New York, and frequently on Fifth avenue. A motor carriage makes regular trips to the wonderment of those out to see the wheels. It is similar to a small runabout with room for two, and the wheels are rubber-tired. The machine is noiseless save for the slight "Puff puff" of the exploding gasoline which furnishes the power. It can stop within its own length and go backward at the will of the occupants.

HEALTH IN OLD AGE.

A Reporter's Interesting Interview with a Lady of Seventy-two Years, Who Tells a Marvelous Story.

From the Union, Port Jervis, N. Y.

But a short time ago, in a distant part of the country, we heard of a cure by the use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, which seemed almost marvelous, and more recently another substantial evidence of their value reached our ears. Being of an inquiring turn of mind, and wishing to know just how much there was in the story, a reporter was sent to interview the person said to be thus benefited. If the narrative as it had reached our ears was true, it was only simple justice to let it be known—if it proved untrue, it would be well to know it.

The person alluded to above as having been thus greatly benefited by the use of Pink Pills is Mrs. Jane Hotalen, of Hainesville, N. J., a pleasant hamlet in Sussex County, about fifteen miles from this office. The reporter had no difficulty in finding Mrs. Hotalen. It was nearly noon when we reached her pleasant home, a double house, one part of which is occupied by her son. She is a pleasant-faced old lady, looking to be about sixty-five, but is in reality seventy-two years of age. After a few preliminary remarks in explanation of the call, she was asked if she had any objection to giving us the details of the case and how she came to try this now famous remedy.

"Not at all," said she. "If my experience can be of any good to others, I am sure they are welcome to it—it can do me no harm."

"When were you taken sick and what was the nature of the malady?" was asked.

"It was about two years ago. The trouble was rheumatic in character—sciatica, they called it—and it was very painful indeed. The difficulty began in my hip and extended the whole length of the limb, crippling me completely. I suffered intensely from it, and the ordinary treatment gave me not the slightest alleviation. I was under treatment about a month as stated, but grew worse instead of better, and was fast becoming discouraged."

"What brought Pink Pills to your notice?"

"My son called my attention to an article in a paper, in which it was stated that a Mr. Struble, of Branchville, a village in this county, had been greatly benefited by their use, and suggested that it would be a good plan to try them. But I was skeptical in regard to their value—in fact, I had no confidence in their efficacy and rather laughed at the suggestion. But the trouble increased and I was badly crippled. A few days later my son was about to visit a neighboring town and suggested again that it might be well to try this much-talked-of remedy, and I then consented. He bought me a box of them and I began taking them at once. At the end of a week I noted a marked improvement, and by the time I had taken the first box I was able to walk without a cane. I continued their use, taking several boxes, and am, as you see, in a very comfortable state of health."

"Have you had any return of the trouble?"

"Not as yet, though at my time of life, seventy-two, it would not be surprising if I should have. If it comes, I should at once begin the use of the pills. I suppose I inherit a tendency to troubles of this kind—my mother died from them."

"Did you ever note any ill effects from the use of Pink Pills?"

"None whatever. They never disturbed my stomach in any way or caused me any annoyance. Neither did I find it necessary to increase the dose, as the directions say may be desirable. I am able, as you see, to attend to my own work."

The reporter thanked Mrs. Hotalen for her courtesy and bade her good day. It is not often that one can witness such a complete recovery from such a pertinacious trouble at such an advanced age, and such instances cannot fail to produce a profound impression. Readers of the Union may rely on the absolute accuracy of all the statements here given—nothing has been exaggerated, nothing withheld.

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills contain, in a condensed form, all the elements necessary to give new life and richness to the blood and restore shattered nerves. They are an unfailing specific for all forms of weakness either in male or female, and all diseases resulting from vitiated humors in the blood. Pink Pills are sold by all dealers, or will be sent post paid on receipt of price, 50 cents a box, or six boxes for $2.50, by addressing Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Schenectady, N. Y.

TERMS OF SALE:—One-third of purchase money, cash; one-third in twelve months, and one third in eighteen months from day of sale. The deferred payments to be evidenced by promissory notes secured by mortgage on said real estate, with 6 per cent interest, and waiving valuation and appraisement laws.

Bids will be received at my office or residence in Auburn, Indiana, until sale is made.

JACOB SALBORN,
Commissioner to sell.

From The C. E's.

WASHINGTON D. C. July 8, 1896.

Dear Parents:

I have already written two letters. In this I will tell you in full my experience in the capital.

We are as near to the capitol building as you are, to Culbertson's house, we have a splendid view of the building and grounds. We board at the same place where Senator Tracy and several other senators boarded while congress was in session.

This morning we went through the capitol buildings, they are "out of sight," I was way up in the dome. "Don't get scared" it was perfectly safe, will hold several hundred and is of steel with a heavy iron railing as high as your head around it. We saw many fine paintings of the "Ex Big-Bugs" of the U. S. It has rained every day since we got here and before we were within three hundred miles of here. The scenery is grand between here and Pittsburg. We ran along a river almost if not all, of a hundred and fifty miles before losing sight of it, from a large stream with steamboats and barges at Pittsburg, to a river no larger than Cedar Creek.

We went through two tunnels each nearly a mile long. In the mountains I got off at Harper's Ferry and got a stone from John Brown's fort. There are more places of interest here, than I could tell you of in week. I wish I had John Crimmins here to tell me about some of the things I see.

I met Representative Nicholson, of Indiana, and shook hands with him today. There are people from all over the United States, thousands of them and they are coming in on every train.

We went to the White House but it was closed, so we will go again. We are going on to Baltimore in a couple days. We can go there and back for $1.25.

The streets here are like our cement sidewalks, and three times as wide; not much danger of getting run over with street cars, for they all have big nets in front, so it is impossible for a person to be run dowd. This ends to-day; continued to-morrow.

CHARLES O. BORST.

Eczema

A Cure guaranteed in every case or Money cheerfully refunded.

We would say to those suffering with this most dreadful and tormenting trouble: If they would like to be cured of it at once, come immediately to Hot Springs, Ark., and obtain the much desired relief. Our treatment is a positive cure for all Chronic Eruptions of the Skin, let it be called by whatever name it may. If it is not convenient for you to leave your home and business to come here and put yourself under our personal care, send for our treatment, with full directions how to use it, and cure yourself at home. Each treatment is both local and constitutional. It is sufficient to last thirty days, which is generally sufficient to perfect a cure in any case. If you send for the treatment and after using it ten days you are not entirely satisfied that it will cure you, you can return what is left of the medicine and your money that you paid for it will be cheerfully returned to you.

Correspondence solicited.

ing and waving flags and handkerchiefs. Half way up the long rise of seats at the south was seen a girl in white dress, frantically cheering for Boies. She waved a handkerchief in one hand, then soon after in both hands, then waved flags, and kept it up, till the crowd noticed her, and began to cheer her. The Boies delegates saw her, and some of them crowded up rom the delegate area, and helped her to cheer. Then they forced a path for her, down through the bellowing crowd, lifted her bodily over the railing and into the place where the delegates were. Then gave her the Iowa standard, and with her at their head, they twice made the circuit of the delegate area. They tried to get her to carry the standard up into the stand where the presiding and other officers were, but this she refused. It was a wild scene, but withal a very fine one. She proved to be Miss Minnie Murray the publisher of a silver-democrat she had been eligible, and a vote could have been taken then, she could easily have been nominated for the presidency.

GOV. MATTHEWS.

We know our people will feel humilated at the poor showing our popular and able governor made. No one doubts but he was the fittest man in the race. But his boom was allowed to die before it got to first base. Had the Indiana delegation worked as did the Boies, Bland and Bryan men he would have made a much more creditable showing. The only sensible thing they did was to obey literally, their instructions to stick to the end. And these instructions were so foolish that the delegation should have discarded them after the third ballot. And a stronger man than Turpie should have made the nominating speech. None but a big lunged speaker could be heard in such a crowd. Turpie was not heard. And this hurt Matthews. If Indiana expects favors, she must send a different set of men!

THE COLISEUM.

The great hall in which the meeting was held is eight miles from the court house, and right on the spot near the World's Fair ground, where Buffalo Bill had his show that year. It is an immense building, covering 5½ acres. About a third of it in the front or south end, is used as a sort of lobby where are various offices, lunch rooms, etc. etc. The north two thirds is the hall proper, and the size of this is 300 by 450 feet. It will hold about 25,000.

THE TICKETS.

Never before was this department so badly mismanaged. Some fellow with a "pull" could get all he wanted while we saw well known men trying in vain to get one. A chap from Indianapolis claims he got 50. A county fair is managed better.

THE UNIT RULE.

This absurd and offensive rule should be kicked out of democratic politics, and every delegate left to vote and have his vote recorded according to his wishes. What nonsense for a state with 28 votes, to have them all cast for one man, because 15 had voted for him. The other 13 saw their votes counted for a man or a platform they did not believe in. The next convention should do away with this.

Two Lives Saved.

Mrs. Phoebe Thomas, of Junction City Ill., was told by her doctors she had consumption and that there was no hope for her, but two bottles of Dr. King's New Discovery completely cured her and she says it saved her life. Mr. Thomas Eggers, 139 Florida St., San Francisco, suffered from a dreadful cold, approaching consumption. He tried without result, everything else, then he bought one bottle of Dr. King's New Discovery and in two weeks was cured. He is naturally thankful. It is such results, of which these are samples, that prove the wonderful efficacy of this medicine in coughs and colds. Free trial bottles at Robbins & McCord's drugstore. Regular size 50 cents and $1. 5

Summer Complaint.

Last summer one of our grand children was sick with a severe bowel trouble. Our doctor's remedies had failed, then we tried Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhœa Remedy, which gave very speedy relief. We regard it as the best remedy ever put on the market for bowel complaints—Mrs. E. G. Gregory, Frederickstown, Mo. This certainly is the best remedy ever put on the market for dysentary, summer complaint, colic and cholera infantum in children. It never fails to give prompt relief when used in reasonable time and the plain printed directions are followed. Many mothers have expressed their sincere gratitude for the cures it has effected. What a Pity.

Above All Things Do Not Steal Another Man's Wife.

Fred Myers who was an employe of the Paul Livery Barn at Garrett don't believe in spending any of his filthy lucre in getting license or paying the preacher, so he went to Waterloo and persuaded Mrs. Wes. Harris to take an overland trip to Garrett with him. Of course it was warm and later he hired a Waterloo liveryman to drive them to Garrett, but had only gone a few miles from that burg when they imagined that Wes. Harris was after them and they discharged the driver and took through corn and wheat fields till they finally reached Garrett. Harris swore out a warrant and Myers was arrested on a charge of adultery and taken before Squire Jaems N. McBride. He plead guilty and was fined $5:00 and cost, amounting in all $12:90. In default of payment he was brought to Auburn and put in custody of Sheriff Stroh. This morning he says he has got enough of married life and asks Garrett parties to bail him out.

Matrimonial Reunion.

And a Picnic In Which All May Participate

There are reunions but Rev. W. L. Meese proposes the latest novelty in this line, which is a reunion of all those now living whom he has united in marriage since he was licensed to perform such ceremonies. The reunion will take place in the beautiful grove on the fair ground east of Auburn, on Thursday, August 20, 1896. The reunion is to partake of the nature of a picnic, and all are requested to bring well filled baskets. There will be singing, speech-making and other entertainments to make all feel that with Rev. Meese's subjects "marriage has not been a failure." While everybody is most cordially invited to attend and to participate in this novel reunion, the friends of all the couples married and of Rev. Meese are urgently requested to do so. It is to be hoped that the press and the clergy of the county will give their hearty support. The grove is one of the most beautiful. A well of good water is within a hundred feet of where the largest picnic ever assembled in the county will meet. More than three hundred stalls on the fair ground can be used for horses.

Any further information can be obtained by addressing Rev. W. L. Meese Auburn, Indiana

Old People.

Old people who require medicine to regulate the bowels and kidneys will find the true remedy in Electric Bitters. He Came Back.

He Didn't Like Living at the Logansport Asylum.

Saturday's Daily.

Archie Rinehart, of Waterloo whom Sheriff Stroh took to Logansport a few weeks ago was home on a visit yesterday. That is, he didn't like the board at the asylum and one evening as they were going out to supper he ran away and walked home. He had scarcely reached Waterloo when Sheriff Stroh was sent for and he visited last night at the Hotel DeStroh. This morning Thomas Hallam left over the Wabash for Logansport where he will deliver the young man up to the proper authorities there again. He has a very ugly disposition and when was first seen yesterday, he carried quite a large club, with which he intended to defend himself. Mr. Stroh had no trouble in handcuffing him and we presume now he will be given more attention at the asylum.

Postmaster's Salary

The following are the changes in salaries of presidential postmasters in Indiana, taking effect July 1, based on receipts of the year ending March 31. lighted Trees.

A farmer in an Oregon paper says: Every year I hear of caterpillars destroying whole orchards, and there is nothing can be disposed of more easily. I bore a hole in the tree deep enough to reach the sap, fill it up with sulphur and then plug it up. The result is magical. Sap takes the sulphur to every branch and twig and the caterpillars at once die. I gathered the insects up by the pint under the trees that have been infested with them before I noticed it and destroyed them. I never knew this remedy to fail and I never knew a tree to be injured by it and have pursued this course for years.

Everything.

Says an Exchange Will Be Political For The Next Five Months

For the next five months the American atmosphere will be laden with political controversy. Every stump, rostrum, dry goods box, curbstone, fork of the road, saloon, street corner, place to water your horse, every suitable place, will have its valuable advocate of this, that or some other political question. And there will be no lack of hearers. The plow, the jackplane, the trowel, the yard stick and the ledger will intermit a stroke to hear what some political pie biter has to say about the subject in hand, or his opponents, and when the oratorical guest has blown a little sand in their eyes, the implements of industry will resume their accustomed tasks, some will be confined in their opinions but few, perhaps, will be converted. It is said that in war it takes $1,000 worth of ammunition to wound a man and $4,800 worth to kill. Political eloquence has much the same effect on an audience.

Depression of Spirits

so common in summer-time, accompanied by loss of energy, lack of thought-power, means a deficient supply of nourishment. The vital force is lost. It isn't a question of muscle and sinew, but of resistance and endurance. At any age, but especially in youth, it involves the risk of lung disease. Loss of flesh and a cough are threatening signs.

In One or Two Days.

In the vicinity of Boquet, Westmoreland county, Pa., almost any one can tell you how to cure a lame back or stiff neck. They dampen a piece of flannel with Chamberlain's Pain Balm and bind it on the affected parts and in one or two days the trouble has disappeared. This same treatment will promptly cure a pain in the side or chest. Mr. E. M. Frye, a prominent merchant of Boquet, speaks very highly of Pain Balm, and his recommendations have had much to do with making it popular there. For sale by Davenport, the druggist. 2731

Recovery Due to It.

—Mrs. Rhodie Noah, of this place, was taken in the night with cramping pains and the next day diarrhœa set in. She took half a bottle of blackberry cordial, but got to relief. She then sent to me to see if I had anything that would help her. I sent her a bottle of Chamberlain's Colic Cholera and Diarrhœa Remedy and the first dose relieved her. Another of our neighbors had been sick for about a week had tried different remedies for diarrhœa, but kept getting worse. I sent him this same remedy. Only four doses of it were required to cure him. He says he owes his recovery to this wonderful remedy.—Mrs. Mary Mary Sibley, Sidney, Mich. For sale by Davenport, the druggist. 2731

Epilepsy 20 Years.

Cured by Dr. Miles' Nervine.

A few years ago, Mr. L. W. Gallaher, was an extensive, successful expert manufacturer of lumber products. Attacked with epilepsy, he was obliged to give up his business. The attacks came upon him most inopportunely. One time falling from a carriage, at another down stairs, and often in the street. Once he fell down a shaft in the mill, his injuries nearly proving fatal. Mr. Gallaher writes from Milwaukee, Feb. 16, '95.

"There are none more miserable than epileptics. For 20 years I suffered with epileptic fits, having as high as five in one night. I tried any number of physicians, paying to one alone, a fee of $500.00 and have done little for years but search for something to help me, and have taken all the leading remedies, but received no benefit. A year ago my son, Chas. S. Gallaher, druggist at 191 Reed St., Milwaukee, gave me Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine, and I tried it with gratifying results. Have had but two fits since I began taking it. I am better now in every way than I have been in 20 years."

LONDON'S OLD DIARISTS.

Observed Every Circle of Society and Set Down Everything Seen.

The diarist was always on the move, opened every door through which he could gain admittance, listened to the talk of every circle and set down all that he observed and heard, says the Quarterly Review. As we read, the old London, which the fire swept away, rises from its ruins, as well as the more stately city which so speedily replaced it. We see the river alive with traffic (nervous people dreading the almost inevitable drenching as they "shoot the bridge") and feel almost as though present in person at the yacht races, pleasure trips to Greenwich or "Moreclacke" and the sumptuous water pageants which are so picturesquely described. The great palaces of the town, and its ancient churches reappear in their splendor; we are jostled along the narrow streets with their quaint signs and pick our way about the dirty squares. The life of the court and the city, the resorts of the learned, the haunts of the loungers, the excitements on 'change, the civic functions, the royal masques and balls, the "revels" at the inns of court, the festive dinners, the promenade in the parks and public walks, the recreations in the Mall, the diversions of Fox hall and Mulberry garden, the savage sports of the cockpit and of Southwark fair, the cruel sights of Tyburn and at Temple Bar, the pillory in Cheapside, the duels and street brawls, the accessories of the restored theater, the humors of "Fops' corner" and of Fleet alley, Slingsby's lottery, Lely's studio and Nell Gwynne's dressing room, all moved before us in living tints on the canvas of this marvelous panorama. We can watch our forefathers at church and market, and notice their "company manners" and follow them into the privacy of their homes. The customs of Twelfth Night, May Morning and St. Valentine's Day assume a fresh interest when we see how they were observed by our hapless ancestors who had yet to learn that time was money. We watch the hackney coaches ply their slow course over the stones, mark the gleam of the link which escorts the belated banqueters home at night and are roused by the monotonus call with which the sleepy watchman breaks the dull silence of the dawn.

Swiss Amusements.

"One of the pities about Switzerland of today is that the people are forsaking their picturesque costume and dressing more and more in a conventional way," remarked a much-traveled New Yorker the other evening. "They don't seem to be such a lively people, either, as they did ten years ago. Only in the large hotels, among the waitresses, or on holidays, do you see the women in what used to be their national garb. So far as I have observed, they are forgetting how to smile or yodel. I saw a statement in a Swiss paper the other day which leads me to think that these people keep all their jollity to themselves during the tourist season for fear it may interfere with their acquisition of wealth. This paper said that the authorities of the Canton Berne recently gathered to discuss, among other things, the question of 'dancing and other public amusements in restaurants.' The curious fact was further brought out that in this one canton alone there are 918 public dancing saloons against 410 churches. The other cantons did not seem to be quite so bad, only that of Uri having more churches than dance halls. I judge from this that a Swiss peasant I once asked if the winter was not somewhat dull after the tourist industry had stopped in October told the truth when he replied: 'Nay; when you've all gone away the belt time begins for us.'"—New York Journal.

Still the Gas Was Lighted.

A certain member of congress, who is somewhat impressed with himself and his own importance, went to Boston once upon a time and stayed at the Tremont house—they say Tremmont in Boston, you know, and Treemont out in Chicago. He didn't like the hotel. He didn't like the table. The beds displeased him. The rooms were not properly heated. Nothing was as it should have been. When he went to the clerk's desk in the office to pay his bill on leaving the congressman's displeasure found vent in words.

"I was never so uncomfortable in my life," he said to the clerk. "Your hotel is the worst in the country, sir, and I want to tell you one thing—one thing, sir—I am never going to stop at this house again—never, sir."

A quiet-looking man who happens to run that hotel was standing by.

"John," said he, calmly, to the clerk, "I think you may light up this evening as usual."—Pittsburg Dispatch.

READING FOR CHILDREN.

Suggestions to Parents in Regard to Books for Little Ones.

At the workingmen's school, in West Fifty-fourth street, which is conducted by the Society for Ethical Culture, a very interesting lecture was recently given by one of the teachers, Miss Annie Gillespie Dunn, on the subject of reading for school children, says the New York Herald. "We are letting the children here in the school take a very tiny taste of literature, which we hope they will find good and ask for more. In the eighth grade we are reading Fiske and Bryce; in the seventh we have Hallam and Carlyle. In the sixth grade we go back to the translations of the old Greek histories; there we have also Gibbon and Macauley's 'Lays of Ancient Rome,' but we can't do more than give the child something that we hope he will want to follow up. In the eighth grade they read Hawthorne and Cooper, but merely on the principle of the hay before the donkey's nose—to lead them on.

"Some people are afraid of giving children too many story books. But sometimes the best thing you can do for a child is to give it a story book. But choose it well, for children have not a capacity for judging of a story, whether it is good or bad. To satisfy a child's imagination, when it is still a litle pixy, with a strong trace of the other world left, we give him myths and fairy tales, and then gradually lead him through Robinson Crusoe and its like, which are a mixture of imagination and practical life, to something more human. We next try to impress upon his mind that he is not living with fairies, but is a little man and must take responsibility. We do not want to make life seem dreary, so we give him a little nonsense mixed in, like 'Alice in Wonderland.' Books about animals, 'Black Beauty,' the 'Jungle Books' and anything of that kind, teach him to think and care for others. To emphasize family relationship we give them family stories, such as Hawthorne's 'Grandfather's Chair' and MacDonald's short stories. By this time the child is old enough to be a hero-worshipper, and 'Hiawatha,' the 'Lays of Ancient Rome' or Cooper's tales fill the hero longing, the spiritual heroes being provided by the German Iliad, 'The Niebelungenlied.' Lowell's 'Sir Launfal' and Tennyson's Round-Table 'idyls' teach the spiritual side with a wise mixture of adventure and give the idea of trying to conquer themselves as well as outside enemies.'

Value of a College Training.

The oft-debated question as to the value of college training seems to us to hardly be an open question at all. The fact set over against the college training is usually the manifest one that a great many forceful men have managed to make their own way and to accomplish great things without the curriculum of the college. These are persons of such great force that they could not be kept down even by great disadvantages. But such persons are rare outside colleges or within them. They might have been still more capable men by the aid of college training.

It is well known that many such persons have lamented their disadvantages. It would be difficult to show what harm a college training could have done them. But colleges, like many other institutions, are for the average person, and we cannot conceive but that the average person is always better for the help which the college course gives. While we find some persons who are conspicuous for their abilities and capacities who have not been regularly educated, the fact is the majority of people in high places are college men.—New York Ledger.

A Lively Young Duke.

The duke of Orleans served for a time in the English army, but was compelled to give up his connection in consequence of his childish behavior. He played no end of senseless tricks while stationed at Aldershot, was most insubordinate as regarded discipline, was forever taking advantage of the immunity due to his royal rank and finally was compelled to leave the army for having cut the ropes anchoring a captive balloon in which Gen. Sir Evelyn Wood and a couple of other field officers were taking observations during a sham battle. A strong wind was blowing and the balloon was carried up into the air and its occupants were unable to effect a descent until at a distance of some thirty miles from Aldershot. Sir Evelyn complained directly, not only to the duke of Cambrige but also the queen herself, who has never liked the young duke, and who immediately responded to Sir Evelyn's communication by intimating to the comte and comtess de Paris that she could no longer permit their son to continue his military training in her army.—Exchange.

Religion Not Invented.

Whoever to-day will say that religion is invented writes himself down as out of rhyme and reason with the fuller science of the age. The science of comparative religions has made one thing clear, that religion, the universal phenomenon of humanity, found everywhere, at the belt of the equator, the eternal equinoxes, as well as in the arctic zones, that religion in the savage races as well as among the cultured peoples, owes its existence to a human need, deeply planted in the human heart.—Dr. Emil G. Hirsch.

Modern Skepticism.

The skeptic has cultivated the critical faculty. It is not an inferior faculty. It destroys, but it does not build up A child can pick a flower to pieces, but it takes God to make one.—Rev. A. P. Orth.

Chester White Piglets.

How dear to my heart is the sight of those piglets:
I've sung it before and I'll sing it again.
The polite little, bright little, white little piglets
The Chester-white piglets we have in the pen.
The dear little piglets, the queer little piglets,
The Chester-white piglets we have in the pen.
Ah, sweet is the music with which I am greeted
When corn I throw in, as I do now and then,
As if they would thank me for being well treated,
Those musical piglets we have in the pen.
The hunt-around piglets, the grunt-around piglets
The Chester-white piglets we have in the pen.
And how they can root with their cute little noses!
They want the whole earth, just the same as the men.
But are willing to dig for a living, thank Moses,
Those Chester-white piglets we have in the pen.
The scoot-about piglets, the root-about piglets.
The Chester-white piglets we have in the pen.

Collision For Show.

It is a new fad to get up railway collisions to order, that is they get up a collision and charge an entrance fee to see it. A man named Steeter is doing it. The first one was at Columbus, O., a few weeks ago the next at Cicero, near Chicago July 4. The third is to be on Saturday of this week, at 104th street near South Chicago, using a track made from the Illinois Central road. Two old engines are used, the exhibitor paying the company for them. Then he takes the gate money and the company carries the passengers.

Kinder Queer.

It is laughable to see how suddenly republican papers have warmed up to President Cleveland. But a few weeks ago and he was the worst man living. They even went so far as to complain of the size of his collar. Now they are ready to bring affidavits that the presidential neckgear is only No. 14. Once they called him a free trader; now he is a tariff reformer. Then they asserted that he went fishing altogether too often. Now, they speak of his fishing as a fine art. This is a queer world and politicians are the queerest folks in it.

From Fitzgerald.

Friday's Daily.

A man came through here yesterwith a rig that he had driven all the way from Fitzgerald, Georgia. He had been six weeks on the road to-day he told Cook Ford, of whom he bought some hay. He is on his way to Bay City, Mich., near which he has a good home. But he loses all he took to Fitzgerald except the team. He says that Fitzgerald is a fraud, the land is poor, food etc, are high, and little or no work to be had. He is acquainted with Mr. Delong, who went from Auburn, and knew one or two others from here. He says about every man who goes to Fitzgerald will lose all he puts into the venture. As there are a number of Auburn people who went there in good faith, we are sorry to hear this story, but as the man is evidently truthful, we must believe him.

The Ideal Panacea.

James L. Francis, Alderman, Chicago say: "I regard Dr. King's New Discovery as an Ideal Panacea for Coughs Colds and Lung complaints, having used it in my family for the last five years to the exclusion of physician's prescriptions or other preparations."

Rev. John Burgus, Keokuk, Iowa, writes: "I have been a minister of the Methodist Episcopal Church for 50 years or more, and have never found any thing so beneficial, or that gave me such speedy relief as Dr. King's New Discovery. REPUBLICANS

Hold their County Convention and nominate a Ticket.

Saturday's Daily.

This forenoon the town began to fill up with those interested in the county convention of the republicans. And by ten o'clock the public square was pretty well filled with voters. The Trumpet Note Band furnished the music and drew an admiring crowd. Then came in the Butler and Garrett bands, with their delegations and candidates.

AT THE HALL

The convention was an hour late. They were waiting for "Keyser" which was out on the "regular consultation." At 11:15 chairman Gordon, called to order and secretary Kuhlman read the call. Gordon said immediately on adjournment this afternoon, Hon. J. S. Dodge, will open the campaign. On motion of Emanuel, F. L. Welsheimer be president, Hartman was named, but declined and seconded nomination of Welsheimer. Carried. At this point Wolf opened a scene showing McKinley, and all cheered. Welsheimer spoke and thanked them for the honor. Said this will be the hottest campaign since 1860. The chief questions are protection or free trade, and free silver.

On motion of Lockhart, Geo. Strayer and republican editors were made secretary.

Townships were then called to all if present, and nearly all were here. Emanuel moved a committe of three on resolutions, be appointed by the chair to report afternoon. McDonald of Grant, kicked, Hartman also opposed the idea of having resolutions adopted by a county convention, as the platform is already before us. Lockhart offered an amendment, that we simply endorse the state, and national plaform, carried.

F. A. Brink moved that names of all candidates be placed in hands of secretary, and be announced but Emanuel thought we need not be afraid of a little spurt of oratory. Lockhart said he is not a candidate for commissionor. Secretary then read names of candidates. All candidates were to meet the central committee at the noon hour. Fair for treasurer was nominated by acclamation, same for Stroh. cheered and called, and thanked them. V. C. Bronson was also nominated for coroner. Adjourned to 1:30.

AFTERNOON SEESSION

Convention met at 1:50 and called to order. A song was given by Mr. Grindle who had sung for McKinley. "Hurrah, hurrah, protection gains the day." But he had not learned the song and nearly broke down several times.

Balloting was next in order.

COMMISSIONER S. W.

First ballot—Isaac Hague, 78½; John Neff, 74; John Yard, 114½; Total 268.

Necessary to a choice 135.

Hague was withdrawn.

Second ballot—Neff, 110 5-6; Yard, 155 1-6.

And Yard was nominated.

COMMISSIONERS S. E.

First Ballot:—Coats 80 1-6, Craun 20 1-6; Widney 23½; Wingard 10; Moore 68 3-6; Shilling 62 4-6.

Widney Withdraws.

Second Ballot:—Coats, 121 1-6; Craun 4 1-6; Wingard 2; Moore 96 4-6; Shilling 54.

Wingard and Craun withdraws.

Third Ballot:—Coats 138½; Moore 96½; Shilling 33.

And Coats was declared the nominee and made unanimous on Moore's motion. He was called, then, and added "Praise God from whom all blessings flow.

REPRESENTATIVE.

First Ballot:—J. E. Pomery 72 12-30; Dr. H. H. Lilly 81 22-30; Dr. A. B. Darby 31 22-30; C. S. Arford 21 22-30; James Provines 62 7-3.

Darby was withdrawn.

Second Ballot:—Pomeroy, 81; Lilly 68; Arford 14; Provines 84.

Arford withdrawn.

Third Ballot:—Pomeroy 69; Lilly 106; Provines 93.

Pomeroy withdraw.

Fourth Ballot:— Lilly 111; Provines 155.

And Provines got it.

SURVEYOR.

L. H. Higley 91; W. E. Ingalls 39; A. L. Hollopeter 136.

And Hollopeter got it.

CONVENTION VOTES.

Mike Long and several others in the Wilmington delegation had silver canes, making it look as if they were coming over onto the righteous side. We expect soon to hear them shouting for free silver.

The Keyser delegation kept the crowd waiting. They had to "consult."

For Assessor J. A. Dennison.

The crowd was not large but very orderly. And there were a number of ladies present.

One Year Yesterday

President Bryan Made a Free Silver Speech at Fort Wayne.

Saturday's Daily.

Just one year ago yesterday the Sentinel says that William J. Bryan was in Fort Wayne and delivered an address. Little, however, did those who heard it, and the Sentinel representative was one of the number, think at that time that the magnetic orator who stood before them would at the next presidential campaign be the national party leader, the condidate for the highest office within the gift of the people of the United States. The result of the year just passed to-day shows what wonderful opportunities are open to an American citizen.

In this connection, the Sentinel recalls that the meeting held at Saengerbund hall when Mr. Bryan spoke was not an extraordinarily large one. The evening was hot and at that time the silver question was not as prominent a one as it has since become. Among the few of our citizens who were on the stage were Judge S. M. Hench. Judge Robert Lowry, and ex-Mayor Muhler. Mr. C. H. Bliss, at that time editor of the Times-Post, was the moving spirit in bringing Mr. Bryan to the city to deliver his address on silver. He was escorted around the city during the day by Mr. Bliss and Judge Hench, introduced to many of our citizens and shown the extent of the city's manufacturing and business interests.

Level Heads.

Friday's Daily.

We were for some time at a loss to know why the republicans of DeKalb county changed to date of holding their county convention from July 30, to July 18. But it is plain to us now. They knew the 18th was Bishop & Lackey's great anniversary sale, and as this enterprising firm always drew a large crowd on their sale days, the republicans took advantage of this occasion to hold their convention upon the same date, in order to take advan- of the crowd that they otherwise could not have. Great heads, these fellows, great heads.

Matthews for Senator.

In our estimation the candidacy of Gov. Matthews for the U. S. senator in place of Voorhees, should be favorably considered. Mr. Voorhees is an able man, but for some years, his health has been so poor, that he could be present only at a part of the sessions. He was recently absent when the notoriously corrupt and extravagant appropriation bill was passed over the president's veto. Had Matthews been in his place, he would have been certain to sustain the President and save the people at least fifty millions. Senator Turpie was present and voted in favor of the infamous measure. He should be retired at the end of his present term. We hope to see both our senators replaced by democrats but we want democrats who are opposed to wholesale robbery and who will be able and willing to be on hand to fight for the people's rights.

Couldn't Again.

Mrs. Clint Potter made a hit Thursday, that she never could make again She stood at the head of the stairs at their home in the National Bank Block, and threw a nickel down to her father-in-law, J. A. Potter, telling him to get a loaf of bread. There is a gas pipe for a hand rail that runs close to the wall, and the coin struck this pipe and bounded toward the bottom, and caught in the space between the elbow of the pipe and the wall, there being just room for it to go edgewise and stick fast. It was recovered and the bread was got, but that nickel will never have another such experience.

What is CASTORIA

Castoria is Dr. Samuel Pitcher's prescription for Infants and Children. It contains neither Opium, Morphine nor other Narcotic substance. It is a harmless substitute for Paregoric, Drops, Soothing Syrups, and Castor Oil. It is Pleasant. Its guarantee is thirty years' use by Millions of Mothers. Castoria destroys Worms and allays feverishness. Castoria prevents vomiting Sour Curd, cures Diarrhœa and Wind Colic. Castoria relieves teething troubles, cures constipation and flatulency. Castoria assimilates the food, regulates the stomach and bowels, giving healthy and natural sleep. Castoria is the Children's Panacea—the Mother's Friend.

Castoria.

"Castoria is an excellent medicine for children. Mothers have repeatedly told me of its good effect upon their children."
DR. G. C. OSGOOD, Lowell, Mass.

"Castoria is the best remedy for children of which I am acquainted. I hope the day is not far distant when mothers will consider the real interest of their children, and use Castoria instead of the various quack nostrums which are destroying their loved ones, by forcing opium, morphine, soothing syrup and other hurtful agents down their throats, thereby sending them to premature graves."
DR. J. F. KINCHELOE, Conway, Ark.

Castoria.

"Castoria is so well adapted to children that I recommend it as superior to any prescription known to me."
H. A. ARCHER, M. D., 111 So. Oxford St., Brooklyn, N. Y.

"Our physicians in the children's department have spoken highly of their experience in their outside practice with Castoria, and although we only have among our medical supplies what is known as regular products, yet we are free to confess that the merits of Castoria has won us to look with favor upon it."

Troops Bayonet the Mobs in Cleveland

Cleveland special: This has been another turbulent day in the vicinity of the Brown Company's works. There were several incipient riots in open conflict between the mob and militia, it being necessary to put a thousand men to flight at the point of the bayonet. In the evening when the non-union men were taken from the works, Capt. Zimmerman with a company of militia cleared the street. Afterwards the soldiers returned to the works and a crowd of 1,000 men gathered in a vacant lot across the street. They assailed the militiamen with stones, when an order to charge was given and the soldiers plunged forward. The crowd broke and started to run but all could not get away from the soldiers. At least a dozen men were bayonetted and some of them were seriously hurt. The injured were hustled away so quickly that it was impossible to learn the names of any of them. The situation is uglier than it has been at any time yet. The mob is becoming desperate and the troops have lost patience.

Shoots His Assailant.

Samuel Burgener, of the firm of Burgener Bros. of Donelson, Ind., who was the principal witness against John Rowell and John Allen, charged with robbing his store recently, was attacked by the men and badly beaten. Burgener managed to draw a revolver and fired four shots, one taking effect in Rowell's brain. Small hope is entertained of his recovery. Allen, after Rowell had been shot, went around the streets boasting that he would kill Burgener before sunset. He was captured and taken to the Plymouth jail.

A Jealous Wife.

Mrs. Roose Heimbach, wife of Ed Heimback of Meaderville, Mont., became jealous of the attentions her husband paid Mrs. Thomas Snelling. In company with her sister, Mrs. Haskins, she went to the Snelling home, and, calling Mrs. Snelling into the parlor, Mrs. Heimbach threw a pint of sulphuric acid on her. Mrs. Snelling is terribly burned from head to foot, and will die. Mrs. Heimbach and her sister are under arrest. The latter is a raving maniac in jail and is expected to die also.

A Serious Collision.

Three police officers were injured at Chicago by a collision between a patrol wagon and an electric car, at the corner of Thirty-fifth and Wood streets. Officer B. F. Brady was internally injured and may die. Officer John Nolan had his left arm broken. Officer James Fitzpatrick was badly bruised about the body. There was a great panic among the passengers on the electric car, but all escaped without injury.

A Fatal Bolt.

A special from Abbeville, S. C., says: Rev. Robbie Lee, Miss Addie Tillman and another young lady whose name cannot be learned, were killed by lightning, at Brevard, N. C. Mr. Lee was a son of Prof. J. F. Lee, of Due West, S. C., and was pastor of the Episcopal Church of Yorkville. Miss Tillman was the oldest daughter of Senator Tillman.

Accident on the B. & O.

McKeesport (Pa.) special: Engine No. 51, a Baltimore and Ohio Railway shifter at Rankin Station, ran into a washout near Guffy Station and was overturned. Thomas Jaquay, aged 23 years, a friend of the engineer, was instantly killed. Engineer Hughes and his fireman jumped but were caught under the wreck and seriously injured.

Killed His Father's Enemy.

William Bell, a brother of United States Pension Agent Bell, was shot and instantly killed at York, six miles west of Sullivan, Ind., by Jess Clements. Bell had administered a thrashing to Rev. Clements, and his son took up the fight. Bell's body lay six hours in the road before it was discovered.

Serious Accident on the G. R. & I.

Engine No. 6, pulling north-bound passenger train on the G. R. & I Railroad, left the track near Page, Mich. Engineer Collins and Fireman Royce were badly injured. The engine and tender were entirely demolished. The passengers received a shaking up, but none were injured.

Piano Failure.

Hallet & Davis of Chicago, dealers in pianos and organs, made an assignment in the county court to George C. Aldrich. A statement was filed showing assets of $283,000; liabilities, $140,000.

Debs Not a Candidate.

Eugene V. Debs has written a letter to a Populist in San Francisco, in which he says he is not a candidate for the Populist nomination for the Presidency.

From a Trapeze.

While doing a high trapeze act at the Wallace circus in Winnepeg, Man., Mme. Natalie, a well-known performer, fell and was terribly injured. She will live, but will be a cripple. Her right arm was badly mashed, it must be amputated; the left arm is also badly injured and she is injured internally.

Sensational Suit.

Suit has just been filed for a receiver of the Citizens' Street Railroad Company of Indianapolis, which owns all the lines in that city.

Weary of the World.

About daylight Monday morning the body of a well-dressed man was found in the river at Toledo, O. The dead man was about 60 years of age and wore long light whiskers. Not a scrap of paper was found on the body. It is believed that he committed suicide.

Killed by a Passenger Train.

Bethel Eagleton, a young man from Woodbury, Tenn., who was stealing a ride on the trucks of the north-bound Frisco passenger, was run over and killed at Wichita, Kan. The body was frightfully mangled. Eagleton was on his way to Cripple Creek.

CZAR BATES NOT ONE JOT.

Claims Right to Punish Russians Who Return to Their Native Land.

The greater portion of the labors of Mr. Breckinridge, Minister to Russia during the last year, as revealed by the published foreign relations of the United States, seem to have followed an instruction from the State Department to protest against the practice of the Russian Consuls in the United States of refusing to vise passports of American citizens going to Russia if they happened to be of the Jewish faith. At the point where the publication closes he was obliged to bluntly inform the Russian Government that the United States could not acquiesce in the operation of such foreign tribunals in the United States. Mr. Breckinridge's presentation of the case was formally approved by Secretary Olney. Another important subject considered was the absolute insistence of the Russian Government upon its right to punish any Russian who falls into its power after becoming a citizen of the United States or any other country. The correspondence of this subject was so spirited as to lead Minister Breckinridge to complain to Secretary Olney that Prince Lobanaw's note to him had been lacking in courtesy. As the matter stands the Russian Government rests firmly in its right to punish Russians who become United States citizens if they return to Russia. Meanwhile Mr. Breckinridge prudently suggests that proper warning be given to Russians naturalized in the United States to keep away from Russia.

FIRE LOSS IS HALF A MILLION.

Merchants' Terminal Elevator at St. Louis Consumed with Its Contents.

Early Monday morning fire was discovered in the boiler-room of the Merchants' Terminal elevator at St. Louis. The building being an old and dry one, the flames ate their way to the top as quickly as if it had been so much paper. About thirty minutes after the fire broke out a 200-foot smokestack fell, narrowly missing a couple of firemen below. Twenty minutes after this the west wall was found to be tottering, which necessitated the removal of the fire engines working on that side, the wall collapsing shortly afterward. John F. Ryan, president of the company, estimated that the loss would be at least $500,000. The elevator contained many thousands of bushels of grain, the exact amount not being known. The Roman Catholic Church of the Visitation, Brooklyn, with contents, was destroyed by fire. The loss is estimated at $150,000. Insurance, $60,000. Cause unknown. At Galveston the second large wharf fire in the last ten days occurred Sunday and destroyed a warehouse owned by the Morgan Steamship Company valued at $150,000, and its contents.

FAURE'S LIFE IN JEOPARDY.

Report of Futile Attempt to Assassinate the French President.

It is reported that an attempt has been made upon the life of President Faure, of the French republic. The President, however, escaped unharmed. The President had gone to Longchamps to review the troops. He had no sooner entered the field when a man in the crowd stepped forward and fired a revolver at him. The shot did not take effect. The would-be assassin was at once arrested. He declared that he had only fired a blank cartridge and that he had no intention of killing the President. When it became known in the crowd at Longchamps that the President had not been hurt by the pistol shot the greatest enthusiasm was manifested. Cheer after cheer was sent up and the people could scarcely be restrained by the guards from crowding about the place where the President and his suite were standing.

OUTPUT OF PETROLEUM.

Production of the United States in 1895 52,983,526 Barrels.

The total production of crude petroleum in the United States in 1895 was 52,983,526 barrels, valued at $57,691,279, against 49,344,716 barrels in the previous year, valued at $35,522,095. All important producing districts shared in the increase except West Virginia and New York, which showed slight decreases. Since the beginning of operations in Titusville, Pa., in 1859, the enormous total of 709,713,408 barrels of crude petroleum have been produced in the country, of which 516,657,260 barrels represent the product of Pennsylvania and New York oil fields. The stocks in the Appalachian oil field at the close of last year were 5,344,734 barrels, a decrease from 6,499,880, the stock on hand at the close of the preceding year.

HEAVY RAINSTORM.

Crops Damaged in Southern Ohio and Northern Kentucky.

A heavy storm of rain Sunday night caused considerable damage in Southern Ohio and Northern Kentucky. At Newton, the rainfall was tremendous, causing great damage to fences and crops. A dispatch from the Kanawha River tells of a rise in that river of fourteen feet in an incredibly short time and the sweeping away of a Cincinnati camp on the shore. Fortunately the campers escaped to high ground and thus saved their lives.

Report on Cretan Affairs.

Dr. Dumiller, who was sent to Crete by Emperor William to make a report on the condition of affairs, has arrived in Athens on his return from the island. He says: "Civilized people can scarcely credit the outrages which the Turks have perpetrated on Christian women and children. Europeans have but a faint idea of the horrors which have taken place. The powers must absolutely intervene to prevent a renewal of such scenes. There is but one course to pursue, that is to turn the Turks out of Europe. The insurgents intend fighting, and they are receiving a plentiful supply of arms. Great disorder prevails." Dispatches from the Cretan consuls announce that burning and pillaging have begun afresh. The Cretan committee are redoubling their efforts to supply the insurgents with munitions of war.

Almost Killed by Soda Water.

After riding fifteen miles on a bicycle Monday evening, Jasper Long, of Columbia, Mo., drank six ice cream sodas and four plain soda waters without stopping. As a result he is dangerously sick, and at one time his life was despaired of. After drinking the concoctions he walked across the street and became deathly sick. He fell on the floor of the telephone exchange in a dead faint. His body was bent double, circulation of the blood was temporarily stopped, his flesh became cold and it was thought for a while that the young man was dead. A doctor was called and gave the sufferer a liberal dose of ipecac. The apparently lifeless form was vigorously rubbed with brandy, and after half an hour's hard work the man was able to talk. He is now pronounced out of danger.

Waterspout in Kentucky.

A waterspout near Augusta, Ky., made Big Bracken and Doust creeks rise so suddenly that some live stock was lost and Mrs. Henry Inske, wife of a farmer, was drowned. The New Brocksville and Wellsburg Railway lost bridges and trestles.

More Rioting at Cleveland.

Further disorders occurred at the Brown Hoisting and Conveying Works at Cleveland. The strikers and their sympathizers attacked the non-union men while the latter were on their way to work. In numerous cases the non-unionists were beaten with clubs and felled to the ground. C. W. Jackson, one of the unfortunate men, who was attacked by a crowd of union men, received no less than fifteen knife cuts on the face and body, and had three ribs broken. For a time the police, who were greatly outnumbered by the rioters, were unable to cope with the mob. The officers on duty around the works were finally reinforced and succeeded in driving the enraged strikers back and rescuing the non-union men. Two companies of militia were ordered under arms.

PROHIBITS OPTION TRADING.

New German Law Will Affect Sales of American Securities.

At the instance of the agrarian leaders the German reichstag has enacted a law prohibiting speculation in options and also intended to restrict speculation in stocks. The new law beyond doubt will affect seriously the sale of American securities in Germany, aside from its effect upon grain markets. The announced purpose of the agrarians in passing the law was to increase the price of grain, and in the debates there were plentiful citations of the arguments so freely advanced in Congress when the anti-option bill was being pressed a few years ago. As to stock speculation the restrictions adopted threaten to exclude from the German exchanges a large class of American industrial and mining and railroad properties, and are especially severe upon new projects. In each exchange government inspectors will be stationed. No stock can be placed on the lists except by direction of a committee at least a majority of whose members are not members of the exchange. Any person guilty of deceit in placing or promoting stocks may be fined 15,000 marks, and there are other severe penalties for offenses against the law.

HEAT AND HUMIDITY.

The Two Combine to Produce Most Unpleasant Conditions at Chicago.

Chicago heat was 94 degrees Tuesday. Humidity, arch-oppressor, joined hands with high temperature and prostrated man and beast in the streets, increased the death rate among infants and old persons and tortured those who labored under the sun's glare in stuffy factories. While no deaths from sunstroke were reported, there were many prostrations, and some of the victims are said to be in a serious condition.

NEW KIND OF POTATO BUG.

Pest Is Worse than the Old Kind and Jersey Farmers Are Alarmed.

A new kind of potato bug has just made its appearance in Hunterdon and Warren Counties, New Jersey, and has so far baffled all attempts to exterminate it. The new bug is an insect about three times as large as an ordinary fly, and of a dull black color, and eats vegetables from the top clear into the ground. The farmers and truck dealers are much alarmed at the manner in which these pests have begun upon their potato crops.

Nominated at Des Moines.

Iowa Republicans held their State convention at Des Moines Wednesday, and nominated the following ticket: For Secretary of State, George L. Dobson; for Auditor, C. G. McCarthy; for Treasurer, John Herriott; for Attorney General, Milton Remley; for Supreme Court Judge, Scott M. Ladd; for Railroad Commissioner, Edward Dawson. The St. Louis platform was indorsed. Free silver sentiment in the convention was not at all strong.

Will Face Macedonia and Greece.

Salonica advices say that twenty battalions of Redifs have been called out and ordered to join the third army corps. Six battalions, it is stated, will proceed at once to the Greek frontier, and the remainder of the levy will be distributed along the Macedonian frontier. The Redifs in the other provinces of Turkey have been ordered to be in readiness for mobilization.

Believe Maceo Dead.

Havana sympathizers with the Cuban insurgents express the belief that Antonio Maceo has been killed by the orders of Gen. Calixto Garcia, or by friends of the latter. The basis of this theory is the fact that Maceo had openly refused to acknowledge the authority of Gen. Garcia.

Chinamen Burned to Death.

At San Francisco several Chinese are believed to have been burned to death in a fire which occurred in Chinatown. The building destroyed was occupied by a large number of Chinese, many of whom were dazed from the use of opium.

Paces a Mile in 2:06.

A green horse from Lincoln, Mo., trained at the Sedalia kite-shaped track, is pronounced a world beater. The animal paced a mile in 2:06 to a heavy sulky, and Mr. Ridenour is arranging to ship him east for the grand circuit.

Nebraska Murder and Suicide.

Havlin Roberts, living a mile and a half west of Peru, Neb., shot his wife and later committed suicide. Sunday the murderer's body was found on his father's farm.

HOSTS OF BAPTISTS.

YOUNG PEOPLE'S UNION MEETS IN MILWAUKEE.

Ten Thousand Members of the Denominational Society from All Parts of the Continent—Sunrise Devotional Services—Membership Over 100,000

Prominent Workers Present.

The sixth international convention of the Baptists' Young People's Union of America—the Christian Endeavor of that great and powerful denomination—was held in Milwaukee. Delegations and scattering visitors from every State in the Union, as well as from Canada, were in attendance. Illinois sent fully 5,000; Wisconsin 3,000 outside of Milwaukee; Indiana, 2,000; Iowa, 1,000; Ohio, 2,000; Michigan, 2,000, and other States in proportion to their distance. Canada sent from 2,000 to 3,000 visitors and delegates. The event brought to Milwaukee probably the largest number of distinguished Baptist divines and representative members of the denomination, male and female, that has ever been brought together in any one city.

SECT. WILKINS.

Promptly at 10 o'clock on the opening day the international convention was called to order in the great Exposition building, next to the Coliseum in Chicago the largest convention auditorium in America. It has a capacity of 15,000 and was filled to the doors half an hour before President John H. Chapman rapped for order. This was speedily secured and devotional exercises, consisting of the reading of a chapter from the scriptures, prayer and singing, led by a chorus of 700 voices, were conducted by Rev. E. W. White of the Tabernacle Church. The services concluded, A. W. Drake, president of the Milwaukee Union, delivered the address of welcome in behalf of the local organizations and addresses were also made in behalf of the municipality. A response for the board of managers of the international union and the delegates came from Rev. E. M. Poteat, of New Haven, Conn.

PRESIDENT CHAPMAN.

EXPOSITION BUILDING, WHERE THE CONVENTION WAS HELD.

A. W. DRAKE.

The preliminaries over, General Secretary Dr. Frank L. Wilkins, of Chicago, presented the annual report of the board of managers. In it he referred to the fact that the total membership of the organization exceeded 100,000, one and all young people enthusiastic in the work of the church. He pointed out that the Baptists allowed great liberty. Every church was left to its own discretion as to how its young people should be organized. There were over 3,500 Christian Endeavor societies in the denomination; but the fact that the Baptists were largely enlisted in the interdenominational fellowship of Christian Endeavor did not preclude their having a young people's denominational society of their own, and the fact was that a denomination that numbered 4,000,000 adherents in America had, perhaps, more reason than other denominations for maintaining such an organization. He went back to the first organization of the union in Chicago in 1891, when 3,000 delegates were present, and commented upon the phenomenal growth of the society. The address was lengthy and repeatedly applauded. Its adoption was moved and seconded by Rev. Dr. Alexander Blackburn, of Cambridge, Mass., and Rev. W. W. Landrum, of Richmond, Va., and was carried unanimously.

J. F. TYRRELL.

Some idea of what the leaders of the assembly undertook may be gathered from the fact that each day's work began at 6:30 in the morning and ended about 10 o'clock at night, with almost continuous sessions throughout the day. When the convention was not in session at the exposition hall the various churches of the city were utilized for meetings, each one of which was in charge of some prominent minister or layman, and transacted business of importance to the body of Baptist Unionists. Even when the convention was occupying the great hall these side meetings were kept up. The subjects treated of embraced every religious and social and moral theory of life. The men who spoke were known throughout the length and breadth of the land as deep thinkers and fearless exponents of what they deem the right. The addresses delivered and the subjects discussed comprised all that is worth study and reflection in theology, sociology and metaphysics.

After the work of the convention was over the delegates and visitors made excursions to Lake Winnebago, Devil's lake, Dells of the Wisconsin, Epworth League Grove at Ludington, Mich.; Racine, Wis., and Chicago.

In ancient times bones were collected from the battlefields, ground to powder and used to fertilize the land.

EX-GOV. RUSSELL DEAD.

Distinguished Son of Massachusetts Expires Suddenly of Heart Disease.

Ex-Gov. William E. Russell of Massachusetts died suddenly at the camp of B. F. Dutton at St. Adelaide, Pabos, Quebec. Gov. Russell, accompanied by his brother, Col. Harry E. Russell, and Col. Francis Peabody, Jr., arrived there only the day previous in search of rest. He had run down in health after the trying scenes at the Chicago convention, and his friends urged upon him the necessity of a rest in the backwoods, and he accepted the invitation of Mr. Dutton to go to his beautiful Canadian camp.

On reaching St. Adelaide the ex-Governor appeared in good health and spirits, and the evening was spent in a social way and in preparation for a fishing trip the next day. He and his companions retired early. Col. Russell was the first to arise, and when he called his brother he received no answer. He then attempted to arouse him by shaking him, whereupon he discovered that life had flown. The position of the body and the expression on the dead man's face showed that his death was painless.

William Eustice Russell was born in Cambridge on Jan. 6, 1857, within the shadow of the university from which he was graduated in 1877. He received his early training in the public schools of Cambridge, in which he prepared for Harvard College, entering that institution in 1873. Mr. Russell's political affiliations had always been Democratic. In 1886 Mr. Russell was elected Mayor of Cambridge by a large majority. He held the reins of government in the Mayor's chair for three terms. Mr. Russell was married to Miss Margaret Swan, daughter of the late Rev. Joshua Swann, formerly of Cambridge, on June 3, 1885. They had three children—two sons and one daughter.

In 1888 he was nominated for Governor, but was defeated by Gov. Ames. He was nominated again in 1889 and was elected over Mr. Brackett by a plurality of 8,000. In 1891 he was successful over Charles H. Allen, of Lowell, by a plurality of 7,500. In 1892, the presidential year, he defeated William H. Haile by a plurality of 2,500 votes, while Benjamin Harrison carried the State by a plurality of 30,000. He retired from office at the end of his third term and resumed the practice of law.

Germans in Russia.

There are nearly 2,000,000 of Germans residing in the Czar's dominions. Their condition during the reign of Alexander III. was anything but enviable. His Pan-Slavic policy purposed their complete Russification and the suppression of all German institutions, privileges and religious worship. The Teutonic element of the Baltic provinces, which by education and wealth preponderated in commercial and political relations, with sorrow and resentment awaited its doom. Schools and academies where for centuries only German had been the language of instruction were Russified. Preaching in the tongue of the Fatherland was prohibited, or at least more or less restricted. Dorpat, the famous German university, received Russian professors who were not fit to teach in any language, and a simular status threatened the colleges.

Notes of Current Events.

The Czar and Czarina have returned to St. Petersburg.

Mrs. John W. Mackey has been summoned from London to Rome on account of the critical illness of her father.

Li Hung Chang, special envoy of the Emperor of China, arrived in Paris and was welcomed with military honors.

It is rumored on the Paris bourse that the Rothschilds will issue in Paris a Russian loan for 1,000,000,000 francs ($200,000,000).

Harry Askin, a manager of theatrical enterprises of wide reputation, has filed a petition in insolvency. No schedules are given.

Jones & Laughlin signed a special steel scale with the Amalgamated Association at Pittsburg and will continue in operation. They employ 4,500 men.

There arrived in New Orleans thirty Chinese boys in charge of Rev. Hule Kin, a Presbyterian minister, who has charge of a mission in New York, where they go to be placed in school, and after receiving a preliminary education will enter college. They are sons of prominent and wealthy Chinamen.

Milton L. Ely, said to be one of the most noted bandits of the West, has been captured at Moberly, Mo., by William Pinkerton's detectives. Ely is wanted especially because of his connection with the express car robbery at Ottumwa, Ia., Jan. 12, 1895, on the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy Railroad.

There is danger of a water famine in Boston and considerable alarm is felt by Water Commissioner Murphy and City Engineer Jackson because of the large and unaccountable increase in the use of water during the last three months. The rainfall in the last six weeks has been very small, and the water commission has issued orders to the people of the city to cut down their consumption.

According to what is considered reliable authority, a controlling interest in the Detroit Railway, a system operated under the 3-cent-fare ordinances, has been sold by Henry A. Everett, proprietor of the system, to R. T. Wilson, of New York. Mr. Wilson now owns most of the stock of the Citizens' Railway Company, and a consolidation of the roads under one management is now anticipated.

Fish.

The apparently mysterious way in which newly formed lakes, ponds, canals, etc., become populated with fish was discussed by some of the members assembled at a recent reunion of the Piscatorial Society at the Holborn restaurant, London. More than one of them considered that this was effected by birds which had been feeding on fish spawn elsewhere, and which, alighting on these new waters, dropped some of the spawn from their bills.

SEWALL IS SECOND

Chosen as the Candidate for Vice President.

COMES FROM MAINE.

End of the Most Remarkable Convention in History.

More than a Dozen Contestants for the Honor of Being the Nebraska Orator's Running Mate—Comparatively Little Interest Taken in the Selection of the Ticket's Tail—Senator Jones Succeeds Harrity as Chairman of the Democratic National Committee.

On the fifth day of the Chicago convention and on the fifth ballot, Arthur Sewall of Maine was named as the Democratic candidate for Vice-President. A few minor motions were speedily disposed of, the gavel fell announcing adjournment and one of the most noted political conventions ever held in this country had passed into history. The end was like the beginning. It was the South and West against the North and East on the first day, when Chairman Harrity rapped for order. It was the South and West against the North and East through four long, toilsome days over committee reports, platforms and nominations. And Saturday afternoon it was the South and West against themselves to placate the North and East in the nomination of a candidate for Vice-President. Geography made Sewall the nominee. It was the most remarkable political gathering of a generation and it laid the foundation for a new volume of history. The national anthem, rolling through the great amphitheater, pronounced its benediction.

The convention met Saturday for its last day's work depleted in members, tired in body and mind and listless in spirit. There were no eager thousands in the galleries to encourage ambitious speakers with applause. Among the delegates there was no desire to punctuate the day's proceedings with pyrotechnics. The convention did not get under way until after 11 o'clock. The delegates were slow in arriving and the public apparently had had a sufficiency of convention amusement. The smallest crowd of the week, probably less than 3,000, was ranged on the shelving sides of the amphitheater. Sound money delegates from the East nearly all had departed. Silver delegates were absent by the score, leaving the delegations to pick for them a vice-presidential candidate out of the mass of uncertainty. The small attendance was due to lack of interest. There was no limitation on admission to the hall. Before the convention began business Senator Ben Tillman of South Carolina pried open the doors with his famous pitchfork and allowed all who wished to enter. In detail, he offered a motion, which was passed, that the hall be opened to the public without restriction. This was received with much enthusiasm.

ARTHUR J. SEWALL.

Despite an apparent lack of enthusiasm the contest for second place would have stood out as a notable convention struggle had it not been overshadowed by what had been done before. Thirteen candidates were placed in nomination: Williams of Massachusetts, McLean of Ohio, Clark of North Carolina, Fithian of Illinois, Pennoyer of Oregon, Sewall of Maine, Sibley of Pennsylvania, Bland of Missouri, Daniel of Virginia, Boies of Iowa, Blackburn of Kentucky, Harrity of New York and Pattison of Pennsylvania. Nominations scarcely were completed when withdrawals began and the contest finally narrowed down to Sewall and McLean. Everybody expected a nomination on the fifth ballot, but before roll-call was finished a telegram was read announcing McLean's withdrawal and the proposition was made that Sewall be declared the nominee by acclamation, and it was done. The chairman laid down his gavel and the Democratic national convention of 1896 was over.

CAREER OF W. J. BRYAN.

Brief Life Sketch of the "Boy Orator of the Platte."

William Jennings Bryan was born in Salem, Marion County, Ill., March 19, 1860; attended public school until 15 years of age, spending his vacations on the farm. In the fall of 1875 he entered Whipple Academy at Jacksonville, Ill.; entered Illionis College, Jacksonville, in 1877; completed a classical course and was graduated with the highest honors in 1881; attended Union College of Law, Chicago, for two years, during which time he was connected with the office of ex-Senator Lyman Trumbull. He began the practice of his profession at Jacksonville, but removed to Lincoln, Neb., Oct. 1, 1877, and became a member of the firm of Talbot & Bryan. He never held an elective office prior to his election to Congress; was elected to the Fifty-second and re-elected to the Fifty-third Congress as a Democrat, receiving 13,784 votes, against 13,644 votes for Allen W. Field (Republican), 863 votes for R. W. Maxwell (Prohibitionist), and 2,409 votes for Jerome Shamp (Populist).

JONES IS CHAIRMAN.

Democratic National Committee Selects Him as Its Leader.

Senator James K. Jones was elected chairman of the Democratic national committee. The new chairman was called in and made a speech, saying he was deeply sensible of the honor, and accepted the position because of the interest he felt in the cause of silver. The members from the gold States did not generally attend the meeting, although there were some notable exceptions. Mr. Harrity was there, having the proxy of E. C. Wall of Wisconsin. An interesting feature of the meeting was the fact that the temporary organization was presided over by Mr. Harrity, a gold standard man.

Mrs. Augustus C. Pease, of Hartford, Conn., has given the site of the charter oak for a charter oak memorial.

BUCKEYE BRIEFLETS.

NEWS OF THE WEEK CONCISELY CONDENSED.

An Interesting Summary of the More Important Doings of Our Neighbors—Weddings and Deaths—Crimes, Casualties, and General Ohio News Notes.

Minor State Items.

Fire destroyed the Shelbyville basket factory. Loss $4,000; partially insured.

Guy Fanean, an Ottoville lad, was probably fatally injured by a log rolling on him.

Miss Maude Davis, one of the belles at King's Mills, had William Smith arrested on the charge of being the father of her unborn child.

Morris Hossler of Wood County, has filed a petition against the city of Fostoria for judgment to the amount of $788.50 for back rent on oil leases.

Simon Chapman, proprietor of the Park Hotel, Chardon, dropped dead from heart disease. He was conversing with a traveling man when he fell.

Richard Gardner, an old man living on West Broad street, Columbus, killed himself by firing two bullets into his head. Poverty is supposed to be the cause.

The body of a man about 50 years of age was found in the mill race at Venice, near Sandusky. The corpse was identified as that of August Heiser, a cigar maker, of Detroit.

Hunter Robinson, aged 75 years, a wealthy farmer of near Plain City, fell from a load of hay while crossing a bridge, and, striking on his head, broke his neck, death being instantaneous.

Governor Bushnell's fine team of bay horses were burned to death at a fire at Atcheson's livery barn, Columbus. The Governor feels very badly over their loss, as he was fond of the handsome team.

James Cobem, an employe of the P. & W. Railway at Middlefield, was standing on a rear platform of the caboose, when the train gave a sudden jerk, throwing him off on the track breaking his skull.

Mrs. Frances Morganthaler, of Massillon, has been adjudged insane and taken to the asylum at Toledo. Her husband recently suicided, and she found him hanging in the barn. She never recovered from the shock.

While driving his mowing machine, the team of horses belonging to Andrew Sutton, a prominent farmer, living near Minerva, took fright and ran away, throwing Mr. Sutton off and dragging him a considerable distance and injuring him severely.

George J. Crook, United States Marshal for the Western District of Arkansas, has arrived in Columbus with eight Deputies and thirty-four prisoners. Edward Wilkey, the notorious rapist, under a life sentence, was one of the number.

David Gilson, an old pioneer, while riding from Napoleon on a bicycle, met a wagon with a hay-rack, and in passing struck it at full speed, resulting in a jaw-bone and three ribs being broken. Physicians state that there is no hope for recovery. He is aged 60 years.

Mrs. L. B. White, aged 71 years, dropped over dead while fanning her daughter at her bedside in Maysville. The latter has been an invalid for some time. Mrs. White was talking to her daughter just a few minutes before she expired. Physicians pronounced it heart disease.

A west-bound freight on the Baltimore and Ohio Southwestern was derailed just at the edge of Chillicothe, at the driving park switch. It is thought some one blocked the frog and threw the train. Eleven cars were derailed and more or less damaged, four being demolished. The engine left the track, but did not turn over.

Mr. Edward Durnid was struck by lightning at Portsmouth, and instantly killed. The accident occurred on the farm of James P. Brown, and he, and his son Williard, Arthur Brown, and Joseph Ester, who were near Durnid, were stunned by the bolt and found unconscious by those who ran to their rescue. The injuries of none but Durnid were fatal.

Four masked men attempted to hold up John B. Lindsey and Fritz Besserer, near Middleport. They had between them about $400, but Lindsay had a revolver, and he opened fire on his four masked assailants, who returned the fire but evidently became rattled and retreated. It is thought that one of the robbers was shot, which caused the cessation of hostilities.

Two well-known Akron merchants committed suicide within a few minutes of each other the other day. They were Henry Huber, 53 years old, and Samuel Beese, aged 33. Beese had trouble with his wife. He hanged himself to a rafter in the barn. Huber jumped into the canal at lock 4. No reason is known for his act. He leaves a wife and a family of nine children.

While Mrs. Tucker, wife of W. D. Tucker, a hardware merchant of Minerva, was working near a gasoline stove it exploded throwing the burning fluid all over her. Her husband extinguished the flames. The woman may recover. Mr. Tucker's hands and arms were severely burned. The rear portion of the house was badly damaged, the fire company saving the main portion. The house was insured. Total loss about $500.

Shortly after services at the Dunker Church, located in the western suburb of Dayton, Miss Josephine Olive Bock, a member, was taken suddenly ill with hemorrhages and died in the sanctuary, surrounded by pastor, friends and relatives. She recently returned from Asheville and was contemplating a second trip. It was in this church that the uncle of the girl, Rev. S. W. Hoover, died about a year ago while in the midst of a sermon.

A terrific thunder storm passed over the section around Marietta, and did much damage to crops. Lightning played havoc in the Sandy Hill oil field, three miles east, setting fire to the rig on Racer well No. 1. The fire spread instantly and before burning itself out consumed another rig, Scott No. 4, and four tanks of oil on the Racer and Scott leases. The loss will amount to several thousand dollars. Six men working on the Racer No. 4 narrowly escaped with their lives.

Willie Gheen, the young man who shot Oliver Thrush, has been discovered to be the same man who shot and badly wounded Corporal Peterson, of the Seventeenth Infantry, in a sporting house in Columbus a few weeks ago. He is a brakeman on the Norfolk and Western, and came from Marietta.

Walter Shean of Toledo, was taken to the pen to serve a life sentence for the murder of his wife. He was accompanied to the prison by a delegation of prominent Toledoans, and by his three-year-old son, to whom he said good-bye after he had entered the prison walls. Shean killed his wife in a dispute.

The sale of the Padan shoe factory to S. O. Titus for $7,600 was confirmed by the Probate Court, all the main creditors having agreed to the sale. The plant as it is, is conceded to be worth $25,000, and it could not be duplicated for less than $40,000. Mr. Titus is the chief owner of the Star Shoe Company of Portsmouth, and that factory will be transferred to the newly purchased plant. The assets of the defunct firm will not pay more than fifteen cents on the dollar. Greiss, Pfleger & Co., of Cincinnati, were their heaviest creditors, having them on the books for $45,000.

In a row at Oakview Amos Clere knocked John Gillespie in the head with a brick, fracturing his skull. Gillespie may die.

THE SILENT SHORE.

By John Bloundelle Burton

CHAPTER X.—(Continued.)

It had taken long in the telling, and the twilight of the summer night had come before he finished and she had learnt everything.

"That is what I came to tell you, Ida. Speak to me, and say that you forgive me for having kept it from your knowledge when last we met?"

"You said an hour ago," she replied, taking no heed of his prayer for forgiveness, "that dreams were idle fantasies of the brain. What if mine was such? What if, after all, I have seen the form of the man who murdered him, have spoken to him and let him kiss me, and have not recognized him?"

"Ida!" he said, "do you say this to me, to the man to whom you have plighted your love and faith? Do you mean that you suspect me of being my brother's murderer?"

"You did nothing," she answered, "to find out his murderer; you would have done nothing had that will not been discovered."

"I obeyed his behest," he said, "and what I did was done also through my love for you."

Again she paused before she spoke, and then she said:

"It is time that you should go now, it is time that there should be no more love spoken between us. But, if a time should ever come when it will be fitting for me to hear you speak of love to me once more——"

"Yes?"

"It will be when you can come to me and say that his murderer is brought to justice."

"And until that time shall come, you cast me off?"

"If you take it in that light—yes."

"I have sworn," he said, and she could not but notice the deep intensity of his voice, "upon his grave that my life shall be devoted to avenging him, and no power on earth shall stop me if I can but see my way to find the man who killed him. Even though I had still another brother, whom I had loved all my life, and he had done this deed, I would track him and bring him to punishment. I swear it before God—swear that I would not spare him! And my earnest and heartfelt prayer is that the day may arrive when, as you and I desire, I may be able to come and tell you that he is brought to justice."

"Ah! yes."

"Only," he continued, still with a deep solemnity of voice that went to her heart, "when I do so come I shall come to tell you that alone—there will be with that news no pleadings of love upon my tongue. You have doubted, but just now, whether you have not seen my brother's murderer standing before you, whether the kiss of Cain has not been upon your lips. You have reproached me for my silence, you have cast me off, unless I can prove myself not an assassin. Well, so be it! By the blessing of heaven, I will prove it—but for the love which you have withdrawn from me I will ask no more. You say it is to be mine again conditionally. I will not take it back, either with or without conditions. It is restored to you; it would be best that henceforth you should keep it."

Then, with but the slightest inclination of his head he left her, and went out from the house.

And Ida, after once endeavoring to make her lips utter the name of Gervase, fell prostrate on the couch.

"He will never come back to me," she wailed; "he will never come back. I have thrown his love away forever. Heaven forgive and pity me."

CHAPTER XI.

The Hotel et Cafe Restaurant de Lepantois is one of those many places near and in the neighborhood of Leicester square, where foreigners delight to sojourn when in London.

As a rule this establishment is patronized by Spanish and Portuguese gentlemen of a commercial status, persons who, more often than not, are connected with the wine trade of those countries, and it is also frequented by singers and dancers and other artists who may find themselves—by what they regard as a stroke of fortune fulfilling an engagement in the metropolis.

To them the Hotel Lepanto is a congenial abode, a spot where they can eat of the oily and garlic-flavored dishes partaken of with much relish when at home in Madrid, Lisbon, Seville or Granada, and here they can converse in their own tongues with each other and with Diaz Zarates, the Spanish landlord of the house, to whom half a dozen Southern languages and many patois are known.

And sometimes, as has been the case of late, much to the disgust of Diaz Zarates, an English detective has made his appearance, and, essaying an Ibernian meal, has endeavored to worm secrets out of him about his patrons and guests.

To the disgust of Diaz Zarates of late, because he knows perfectly well who Dobson is (although that astute individual is not aware of the landlord's knowledge of his calling), and because, honestly, he has never heard of any one bearing the name of Corot in his life.

And it is of such a person with that name, that Dobson has been making little inquiries whenever he has dropped in to try a Spanish luncheon or a Spanish dinner.

Seated, a few days after the murder of Walter Cundall, on one of the three chairs in the passage, and meditatively smoking cigarettes out of which, as is the case with Spanish-made ones, the tobacco would frequently fall in a lighted mass on the marble table, was Senor Miguel Guffanta, as he was inscribed in Diaz's books.

Had the Senor been as carefully washed as the upper classes of Spaniards usually are, had his linen been as white and clean as the linen usually worn by the upper classes of Spaniards, and, had he been freshly shaved, he would, in all probability, have presented the appearance of a fine, handsome man.

But he had come down stairs this morning to smoke his cigarette, without troubling to make his toilette, putting on his yesterday's shirt, and going through no ablutionary process at all, and with a thick, heavy stubble of twenty-four hours' growth upon his cheeks and chin.

Still, with all this carelessness, Senor Miguel Guffanta was a handsome man.

As he sat there thinking and smoking, the landlord came down the passage, and bowing and wishing h' "Good morning" in Spanish, entered his box, and proceeded to make some entries in his books.

The Senor nodded in return, and then made another cigarette and went on with his meditations; but, when that one was smoked through, he rose and leaned against the door post of the bureau, and addressed Zarates.

"And have any more guests arrived since last night," he asked, "and is the hotel yet full?"

"No more, Senor, no more as yet," the landlord answered him. "Dios! but there is little business doing now."

"That is not well! And he who loved so much our Spanish luncheons and dinners, our good friend Dobson (he pronounced the name Dobesoon) with the heavy, fat face and the big beard—what of him?"

"He is a pig, a fool!" Diaz said, as he ran an unclean finger up a column of accounts. "He believes me not when I tell him that of his accursed Corot I know nothing, and that I believe that no such man is in London."

The Senor laughed gently to himself at this answer, and then he said: "And he has not yet found him?"

"Found him? No. Of that name I never heard before, no, never! There is no such name!"

"For what does he say he wishes to see this Corot? Is it that he has a legacy to give him, or has he committed a crime for which this fat man, this heavy Alguazil, wants to arrest him?"

"Quien sabe! He says he has a little friendly question to ask him, that is all. He says if he could see him for one moment, he would tell him all he wants to know. And then he says he must find him. But I do not think, now, he will ever find him."

"Nor do I," the Senor said. Then he looked up at the clock, and seeing it was past twelve, went to his room, saying that it was time he prepared himself for the day.

But when he reached that apartment, which was a small room on the second floor, that looked out on to the back windows of the street that ran parallel with the one in which the Hotel Lepanto was situated, it did not seem as if those preparations stood in any great need of hurry. Throwing himself into an armchair that stood in the corner of the room, again gave himself up to meditation.

"Corot," he said to himself; "Corot. How is it that that man has ever heard the name—what does he know about it, why should he want to find him? I thought that, outside of Los Torros and Puerto Cortes that name had never been heard. Walter knew it, and Juanna knew it, and I knew it, but of others there was no one alive who knew it. Yet here is this big, stupid man, in this big, stupid city (where one may be stabbed to death and none find the slayer), with the name upon his lips. How has he ever heard it, how has he ever known of it?"

He could find no answer to these questions which he asked himself, and gradually his thoughts went off into another train.

"So, after all," he continued, "his name was not Cundall, but Occleve, and he it was who was this lord, this Penlyn, though that other bears the name. And he, who inherited all that wealth from the old man, had no right to it, no! not so much as Juanna—poor Juanna!—and I had. And now he is gone, and it is with the living that I have to do. Well, it shall be done, and by my father's blood the reckoning shall be a heavy one if this lord does not clear himself!"

He rose from his seat, and, going to a cupboard, took from it a suit of clothes of good, dark material, and after brushing them carefully, laid them out upon the bed.

From a shelf in it he took out a very good silk hat, which he also brushed, and a pair of nearly new gloves.

Then he rang the bell, and bade the servant who answered it bring him sufficient hot water for shaving and washing.

As he went through his toilette, which he did very carefully, and putting on now linen of dazzling whiteness, with which the most scrupulous person could have found no fault, his thoughts still ran upon the subject that had occupied his mind entirely for many days.

"There is danger in it, of course," he muttered to himself; "but I am used to danger; there was danger when Gonzalez provoked me, though it was not as great as that I stand in now. These English are stupid, but they are crafty also, and it may be that a trap will be set for me, perhaps is set already. Well, after all, I have one damning proof in my favor, one card that, if I am forced to play, must save me! What I have to do, shall be done to-day. I am resolved!"

His toilette was finished now, he was clean shaved and well dressed from head to foot, and the Senor Miguel Guffanta stood in his room a very different looking man from the one who had sat, an hour ago, smoking cigarettes in the hotel passage.

He started forth slowly, making his way through Leicester square and down Picadilly, and, at nearly the bottom of the latter, turned off to the right and passed through several streets.

Then, when he had arrived at a house which stood at a corner, he stopped.

The big house outside which he was standing formed the angle of two streets, and ran down the side one that the Senor had now turned into.

At the back of it was a garden, fairly filled with trees, that ran some distance farther down this street, and into which an open-work iron gate led, a gate through which any passer-by could look.

It was not a well-kept garden, and in it there was some undergrowth, and it was at this undergrowth, on the farthest right-hand side, that Senor Guffanta peered for some few moments through the iron gate.

"It seems the same," he muttered to himself; "nothing appears disturbed since I was last there." Then he returned to the front of the house, and, mounting the steps, knocked at the hall door.

The footman who opened it motioned him to a seat, and put the card upon a salver to take to his master, when the Senor said, "Stay, I will put a word upon it," and, taking a pencil from his pocket, he wrote underneath his name, "From Honduras."

The man bowed and went away, returning a few minutes afterward to say that Lord Penlyn would see him, and the Senor followed him into the room in which so many other interviews had taken place.

Lord Penlyn rose and bowed, and Senor Guffanta returned the bow gravely, while he fixed his dark eyes intently on the other's face.

"You state on your card, Senor Guffanta, that you are from Honduras. I imagine, therefore, that you have come about a matter that at the present moment is of the utmost importance to me?" Lord Penlyn said.

"You refer to the late Mr. Cundall?" the Senor asked.

"Yes, I do. Pray, be seated."

CHAPTER XII.

"I knew him intimately," Senor Guffanta said; "it is about him and his murder that I have come to talk."

These were the words with which he had responded to Lord Penlyn's reception of him; and, as he uttered them, a hope had sprung up into the young man's breast that, in the handsome Spaniard who stood before him, some one might have been found who, from his knowledge of his brother, would be able to throw some light upon, or clew to, his death.

"I cannot tell you," he said, "how welcome this information is to me. We have tried everything in our power to gather some knowledge that might lead toward finding—first, some one who would be likely to have a reason for his death; and, afterwards, the man who killed him. If you knew him intimately it may be that you can assist us."

The Senor had taken the seat offered him by Penlyn, and from the time that he had first sat down until now he had not removed his piercing eyes from the other's face.

But, as he continued to fix his glance upon Penlyn, there had come into his own face a look of surprise that seemed to express a baffled feeling of consternation.

"What mystery is there here?" he said to himself. "I have made a mistake. I have erred in some way; how have I deceived myself? Yet I could have sworn that I was sure."

Then, when Lord Penlyn had ceased speaking, he said aloud:

"You will pardon me—but I am laboring under no mistake? You are Lord Penlyn?"

The other looked at him for a moment, wondering what such a question meant. Then he answered him:

"There is no mistake. I am Lord Penlyn."

The Spaniard passed his hand across his eyes as he heard this, but did not speak; and Lord Penlyn said:

"May I ask why you inquire?"

"Because—because I had thought—because I wished to be sure of whom I was speaking with."

"You may rest assured. And now, sir, let me ask you what you know about this unhappy Mr. Cundall and his life?"

"I know much about him. To begin with, I know that he was your brother—your elder brother—and that you have come to possess his fortune. But it is not of that that I have come to talk."

"Of what have you come to talk, then?"

"Of his murderer."

"Of his murderer!" the other repeated. "Oh! Senor Guffanta, is it possible that you can have any clew, is it possible that you think you will be able to find the man who killed him?"

"I am sure of it."

Lord Penlyn stared at him as he spoke, stared at him while in his mind there was a feeling of astonishment, mixed with something like awe, of the strange visitor.

This dark, powerful looking stranger, sat before him perfectly calm and unmoved, looking straight at him as he spoke these words of import, "I am sure of it," and spoke them as though he was speaking of some ordinary incident.

And in his calmness there was something that told the other that it was born of certainty.

"If you can do that, Senor Guffanta," he said, "there is nothing that you can ask from me, there is nothing that I can give that——"

"There is nothing I want of you," the Spaniard said, interrupting him, and making a disdainful motion with his long, brown hand. "I am not a paid police spy."

"I beg your pardon," the other answered. "I had no thought of offense. Only, sir, it is the wish of my life to see him avenged."

"And it is the wish of my life also. Will you hear a short story?"

"I will hear anything you have to say."

SWEETHEARTS AND CRONIES.

A Politician's Duty Sometimes Clashes with More Pleasing Affairs.

"Well, I'm up against it," said Ald. Percy Pulsifer bitterly, inadvertently dropping into the slang of the streets and the Council chamber.

"That's where you have been most of the time recently," returned Tom. "What's your hard-luck tale now?"

"I've proposed."

"That's pretty tough, of course, but then, you've talked so much about that girl who has been visiting your sister that I am not much surprised."

"Oh, it isn't the proposal," explained Percy, so deeply engrossed in his own tale of woe that he forgot to take offense at Tom's remark. "It's what happened afterward that troubles me. The proposal was all right."

"Accepted you, did she?"

"No, not exactly, but the indications were favorable. She asked for a day to think it over, and of course I gave it to her and then I asked her to go to the theater with me that evening. That is where I made my mistake. I ought not to have stirred out of the house until the whole thing was settled.

Percy sighed, as he thought of his experience, and Tom looked at him inquiringly.

"It was all right during the play," explained Percy, "and I put in the time to good advantage. She intimated pretty strongly what her answer would be, too, and I was feeling as if life was one great dream of bliss, when we came out and encountered one of those political nightmares that have made my life a burden recently."

"'I've been waitin' for you,' he said, grabbing me by the arm and trying to pull me into a corner. 'Come to the station, quick.'

"'What station?' I asked.

"'Harrison street,' he answered. 'Bill Finegan's been pinched. Give the dame on your flipper the shake an' come with me.'

"I tried to shake him off, but he would not have it, so I asked him what the charge was.

"'Drunk and disorderly,' he replied. 'Bill's been boozin' agin, an' he tried to stick a man with a knife, but he done more'n any other man in the ward for you election day, an' he wants you to try to square it with the police an' bail him out. Come on. Your flipper's loose now.'

"He was right. My sister's friend had quietly dropped my arm and walked on alone, and when I finally got away from the man she had taken a cab and gone home."

Tom whistled and Percy looked solemn.

"What did she say when you next saw her?" asked Tom.

"I didn't see her again until this morning at the breakfast table, and then she asked me coldly if I succeeded in getting my friend out of the hands of the police."

"And the answer that she was to give you?"

"I haven't asked for it, and I don't believe I will—at least for a few days. I may be a fool, Tom, but I am not an inspired idiot, and I know that this is not an auspicious time to press her for an answer."—Chicago Post.

WHAT WOMEN WEAR.

STYLES FOR THOSE WHO WANT TO LOOK PRETTY.

Ruffles and Fluffs Are Invaluable Accessories in Making Over and Creating New Effects at Small Expense and Trouble—They Are Not Going Out.

Fashion's Fancies.

New York correspondence:

UT few months pass without some would-be authority in dress matters rising and asserting that the reign of ruffles and fluffs is over, but these garnitures are by the following week reported as reviving, and the fact is that they will never go out of style. They are invaluable in accessories, in making over, and in creating effects at small expense and trouble. Among the serviceable ruffles and fluffs of the moment is the yoke that is almost a cape. It is a set on a high stock collar, and fastens invisibly at the shoulder along the line of the insertion. It is made of fine muslin, lawn or grass linen, and is elaborated with insertions and edging of lace, real, if you have it, at any rate, delicate and fine. When adjusted it covers the upper part of the gown, its shoulder points extending in graceful droop on the sleeves and the front point lying over the bust line, while at the back the point extends correspondingly. This transforms a gown at a minute's notice and is invaluable for summer use.

Suppose you and George have wandered so slowly in search of daisies for the lunch table that the bell is actually ringing when you reach home. If you are both late to lunch, folks will talk, if you rush in towsly and in your morning gown they will talk all the more. You can make a run for it to your room, however, pop on this bib over the morning dress, change your belt, smooth your hair, and all in a minute you are another person. For the economical girl such a bib, though in itself not inexpensive and requiring careful treatment, will reduce largely the expense of wardrobe. A black lawn gown is not as pretty as a white lawn one, of course, but it takes less washing and worn with a crisp, transparent bib such as described the effect is almost as pretty as that of a white gown; any way, you have all the becomingness of white about the throat and shoulders.

A dainty yoke that serves to draw out all the character there is in a dark goods is shown in the picture beside the initial. It is not of the slip-on-over sort, but is fixed, and is made of white satin. It is alike in back and front, and is embroidered with dark-blue silk, having stock collar to match. Over it are bretelles of satin ribbon embroidered with blue dots, the belt is of the same, and two bands of it appear upon the skirt. In back collar and belt are adorned with blue and white bows, and a ruffle of lace is set in the collar. Foulard was the dress material, its color being dark blue sprinkled with tiny white dots.

RUFFLES THAT DOMINATE.

For purposes of economy the adjustable yoke is preferable to the pictured sort, though it is not as new. One sort of the former, which is very helpful, is the kind that includes a point to reach in front to the belt, under which it is held, and that is finished at the sides with spreading lapels. Little can be said for the newness of this, but it is becoming and serves to transform the bodice with which it is worn; indeed, such an affair may be slipped over a dressing sacque. There are possibilities of economy in it that are worth considering by a girl who wants to look as well as the next and hasn't much money to do it on.

Fanciful epaulettes are plentiful and are in many instances the dominant feature of the gown. Their size, shape and materials are determined by the maker, and the attempts at novelty are so strained that many absurdities are seen among the pretty ones. In today's second picture the epaulettes might almost be called revers, but name them what you will, they are highly ornamental. They are embroidered linon, which also appears in the ruffle of the basque. This bodice opens over a vest of two-toned mousseline de soie, topped by a collar that is ornamented by embroidery bows, and confined by a belt that matches the collar.

FLUFFINESS AT THROAT AND WRISTS.

In general, it is found that the neck is kept well swathed by some means or other. Laces and tulles are much used for ruches, lace and embroidery are frequently pleated inside high collars, and chiffon is often employed in ruches of the sort this third picture displays. This one is white, and is worn with a bodice of green voile whose yoke is trimmed with white braid in the manner shown and finished on the lower edge with looped soutache. It is gathered into a white braid belt that hooks invisibly at the side, and has a wide box-pleat in the center ornamented with two large steel buttons. Braid garniture appears upon the sleeve puffs, and lace frills ornament the wrists. Three rows of braid and one row of buttons are put upon the skirt.

COIFFURES FOR WHICH THE HAIR MUST BE IN PERFECT CONDITION

Despite the liking for the pompadour dressing, women's hair is quite up to the standard of fluffiness set by dress observances. Not for years have fashionable women expended so much care on their hair as at present. Time was when if you had a fluffy fringe of a bang, all was well, but now at least half the growth of hair on the head must be in perfect condition, or it is impossible to adapt it to the present styles. For the coiffure shown in front and back view here, the hair is divided into two portions. That for the knot includes the hair from the nape of the neck up to just about the round of the head towards the top, and at the sides it is confined to what grows back of a line well behind the ears. This portion of the hair, though not neglected, is not subjected to the washing, airing, sunning, combing, brushing and general coaxing that the rest must get. This portion may be knotted with very little reference to the hair that grows forward of the parting that limits the coil hair.

The pompadour is said to be the fashion, but pompadour really means only that the hair is not banged, and that it is worn wide and full at the sides and ends are turned under. Almost everyone wears the coil rather high, partly because the effect is dressy and suits the forward-tipped hats of the day, and partly because some of us are having trouble making the lately shortened locks grow to full pompadour length. Somehow you must accomplish it that the hair at the sides seems to stand out, and if possible without a bunchy effect of curls. You must first comb the front and side hair forward, and then turn it back. If the temple and side locks won't reach the coil without drawing them unbecomingly up, then careful managing of the side combs will hold them where they must stop, but it is fatal to show any trace of ragged ends beyond the comb. Remember that only a comb which shows no ornamenting beyond the grooving of a thick top of rounded shell or amber is permitted; all jeweling and filigree must be omitted. If the hair is not very thick and the coil is a little short, then mass the coil locks for the lower part of the coil, for the top can be mounted up by the ends of the pompadour, only be sure that as few hair ends show as possible. That is the secret of the pompadour—ends under. If your hair is really very thin at the temples, and that is a usual difficulty, then you must draw down the temple locks and call your coiffure the "Mrs. Cleveland." It is possible to slip the fastening of false temple curls under the loose locks of the pompadour, but if your curls are your own, then be sure the little parting for them shows prettily.

First Horses in Alaska.

Dr. Walker, a prospector in Alaska, took some horses up with him. At the first Indian village the sight of the horses drove all the dogs howling into the woods. The children dropped their rude playthings and fled crying into the huts. The men and women stood their ground, although in open-eyed wonder. After much inducement they were finally prevailed upon to approach the horses, and their wonder knew no bounds.

The London Literary World says that a very important and lucrative literary position was recently offered to Edward W. An Oriental Rite.

Only those who have studied Byzantine history can have any idea of how closely the ceremonial of the Moscow coronation resembles, even in its minutest details, that which used to be observed at the coronation of the Byzantine emperors. Although the Russian Church did not separate from that of Rome until the twelfth century—that is, nearly 400 years later than the schism of Photius, which rent the Western and Eastern churches asunder—nevertheless it retained its oriental rite. In 1184 a Russian commission arrived in Byzantium to study the etiquette and ceremonial, ecclesiastical and profane, of the court and church of that capital. On their return to their native country a great change took place in the national costume, architecture and ceremonial. When Moscow became the sacred city par excellence of the empire, the Kremlin was rebuilt on the same lines as the Blachernae Palace, on the land walls of Constantinople. Like its Greek model it consisted of a series of halls and apartments—kiosks, as the Turks call them—linked together by gardens, and interspersed with scores of churches and monasteries, the whole surrounded by a wall and entered by strongly fortified gates, above which were icons of the Virgin and saints. Burnt down early in the century, it has been rebuilt in plainer architecture, but on the same Byzantine plan.—London Chronicle.

The Sea Gull Is a Benefactor.

The sea gull is doubly the benefactor of man. It not only follows the plow (on farms near the coast), in order to eat the freshly-turned grubs, but it scours the surface of the sea near the shore, and frequents harbors to seize on floating garbage, dead fish, or other putrefying morsels. The service of these birds have saved many a seaport town and village, round which they hover, from plague and pestilence.

Yet every year they are massacred by thousands for idle and cowardly sport or for the sake of their wings to be used in millinery. Their eggs are plundered wholesale for museums and to fill the shop windows of naturalists. One man boasted a year ago that he had killed 4,000 kittiwake gulls in a single season with his own gun, and an order was given and executed from one London house for 10,000 pairs of wings. At this rate gulls must soon disappear altogether.

The carrion crow, the raven and others which follow their example, more or less, confer an immense boon on mankind. Sparrows clear the gutters and places which they inhabit from a vast quantity of scattered fragments. Though too small to be seen, these unsavory morsels would soon become dangerous to human life and health.—Spare Moments.

Newton W. Gilbert.

Angola, July 17, 1896. (Special)—LaGrange and Steuben counties met in convention here yesterday and nominated Newton W. Gilbert, of Angola, for Joint State Senator on the eighteenth ballot. There were three candidates in the field, all of this county, Mewton W. Gilbert and William M. Brown, of Angola, and Dr. Stephen H. Fuller, of Pleasant Lake. The convention was one of the hottest and most stubborn ever witnessed in North ern Ind. There was enough enthusiasm spilled in and about the court house yesterday to nominate a president of the United States. The convention became noisy early in the day, and each candidate's men felt dutybound to see that their man received the honors with "howling" success, which resulted in a "locking of horns." The first ballot was a tie between Gilbert and Brown. The second ballot gave Fuller four votes which "set" the convention until 10 o'clock last night, when one of Brown's delegates accidentally (?) voted for Gilbert, thus ending the heated contest. About the 8th ballot the LaGrange delegates got tired and went home, leaving their vote to stand and be counted each time as follows: Gilbert 16.44 and Brown 13.56. The convention was largely attended, some 300 coming over from LaGrange county, and the number from this county and our town people swelled the crowd to a good size. About eight o'clock last night, martial music and serenading parties gathered in front of the court house and furnished cheering music for the tired Steuben delegation confined in the court room, but it had no effect upon them. When the final came, there was such a shout went up that awoke all the sleeping populace of Angola.

ANSWERS

To a Multitude of Inquiries on the Money Question.

(The Cincinnati Enquirer.)

The Enquirer receives daily, scores of letters asking the questions which will be found answered below:

What is meant by free coinage of silver?

Free coinage means that the mints are thrown open and bullion is converted into coin without charge to the owner. The holders of gold bullion have that privilege, and so did the owners of silver bullion before the act of 1873.

What is meant by the ratio of 16 to 1?

Answer—In a period of 400 years reliable statistics show that with slight variations, or oscillations, the relative product of silver and gold mines from year to year has been 16 pounds of silver to 1 pound of gold. This being the fact, our constitution having provided that both should be money metals, Congress fixed the ratio of their coinage to correspond as near as possible to the ratio of their production. Hence it is that the silver dollar contains 371¼ grains of pure silver, and the gold dollar contains 23.2 grains of pure gold. The quantity of either silver or gold in a dollar is purely arbitrary.

What is meant by fiat money?

All money, whether of gold, silver, copper, nickel or paper is "fiat." Money is created by law, and is not in any sense a natural product. Gold money is as much fiat money as paper. If deprived of its money use there is enough gold on hand to supply the arts and manufactures for the next 50 years. Having imparted to it the money use its value is determined by the fiat of government.

What is the offical and estimated amount of gold and silver in the world?

The Director of the United States Mint, in response to a congressional committee's request, reports that the gold and silver used as money in all nations is;

Of gold	$3,727,018,869
Of silver	3,821,571,346
Total	$7,548,590,215

The difference in the amount of gold and silver used in making the world's exchanges is only $94,552,477 more of silver than gold.

The total gold coin and bullion used as money is $2.51 per capita. The total of silver coin and bullion used as money amounts to $2.58 per capita, or seven cents per capita more of silver than of gold.

How many countries use only gold as money? How many use only silver? How many have the double standard, using both gold and silver as primary money?

The gold countries are 11 in number, as follows:

Brazil.	Great Britain.
British Possessions	Siberia.
Denmark	Norway
German Empire	Portugal
Egypt	Sweden
Turkey.

The countries using only silver are 17 in number, as follows:

Austria Hungary	Belgium
Bolivia	Costa Rica
Guatemala	Honduras
Nicaragua	Salvador
China	Columbia
Ecuador	India
Mexico	Peru
Russia	Tripoli
Venezuela

Twelve countries, including the United States, have the double standard using both gold and silver, as follow:

United States	France
Argentine Republic	Greece
Chili	Cuba
Hayti	Italy
Japan	Netherlands
Spain	Switzerland

What countries have the great bulk of the gold and silver?

The United States, it is claimed,

has of gold	$702,018,869
Of silver	482,071,364
Total	$1,184,090,215
The United Kingdom, gold	$550,000,000
Silver	100,000,000
Total	$650,000,000
France has of gold	$900,000,000
Silver	700,000,000
Total	$1,600,000,000
Germany has gold	$500,000,000
Silver	145,000,000
Total	$645,000,000
India has of silver	$900,000,000
China has of silver	700,000,000

France is pre-eminently a silver country, and yet she has nearly as much gold as England and Germany together.

What was the act of 1873?

The act of 1873 dropped silver coinage and transferred the measuring unit of all values from the silver to the gold dollor, virtually demonetizing silver by depriving it of its fuction as primary money and taking away its legal tender quality. Instead of permitting silver to be a money of redemption, as it had been from the foundation of the Government, it was made a credit money requiring a redeemer as fully as a greenback or bank note. Only fractional silver was provided.

Are any United Sates bonds payable in gold?

All United States bonds are payable in "coin." Until the present Administration the Government exercised the option of paying in gold or silver. The present Secretary of the Treasury holds that the option is with the bondholder he can demand gold or silver.

The Herald Bolts.

The Garrett Herald, heretofore a staunch republican paper, this week changes its politics and will hereafter be found supporting Bryan and the democrat ticket. In a long editorial Mr. Miner gives his reasons for this step. First of all, he has lived in Nebraska many years and knows Bryan well. He says Bryan is one of the best and most worty men he ever knew and is a second Lincoln. In the next place Mr. Miner has always been in favor of free siver, and in that regard at least, has never since he has published a paper in this county, been in touch with the present republican idea of gold monometalism. He thinks it time for every lover of his country's welfare, to step out of his old party now when it is wrong, and ally himself with a party he feels is right on all the vital questions of the day. And he considers the money question, the most important. Finally he urges the populists, with whom he has always been friendly to join the democrats now while the opportunity is open to do so with honor and a certain chance for success. We believe Mr. Miner is in earnest, and that this serious step has been taken only after earnest thought and study. We welcome him to the only "people's party" in the country and hope he may fill a long felt want in the community at Garrett, for there are many like him in that vicinity, who have only needed the influence of a low tariff, free silver, anti-monopoly paper, to encourage them to break off old ties and come out and join the procession.

Attempted Suicide.

Angola, July 17, 1896. (Special)—Yesterday about ten o'clock a. m., the wife of William Gavitt, the Angola foundryman, made an attempt to commit suicide by shooting herself through the heart, but failed. The ball struck a rib near the heart and followed it around and lodged in her back. Three physicians were called and soon extracted the bullet. The woman had been laboring under the impression for some time that her neighbors did not like her, and this is believed to be the cause of the rash act. She is about 35 years old. Strong hopes are entertained for her recovery. She is a daughter of Mr. Goodwin who lives near the cemetery at Watealoo.

Snake Story.

Monday's Daily.

No snake or snake story gets away from the COURIER. For example: Saturday afternoon as Mrs. Hughes, who lives in Uniontown in the north part of Waterloo, was going to a neighbor's east of there, she caught sight of a monster snake, which nearly frightened her out of her seven senses. She struck off on a run, and succeeded in reaching the home of Mrs. Arnold, and fell in a faint. A young man named Lutz, who was cutting grass in a field near by, also saw the snake, and says it was a very large one. They agree, that it was as large as a man's leg above the knee. It was too late Saturday evening to hunt for his snakeship, and too stormy on Sunday. But to-day, a large number of men and boys turned out to hunt for him We have not heard of the result.

S. H. YAGER.

80th Tirthday.

Saturday, July 18, 1896 was the 80th birthday of a very worthy lady, Mrs. Priscilla Barclay, and the children and relatives planned a little reception in her honor. All the afternoon and into the evening, friends kept calling —friends of her earlier and her later years—and offering congratulations. Mhere was a dainty lunch, too, that helped to make the calls more enjoyable. Then there were some lovely gifts, such as would be especially appreciated and enjoyed by the estimable lady in whose honor they had gathered. We recall a fine upholsted lounge, an easy chair, and a fine center table, and this morning a beautiful pair of scissors, the gift of Mrs. Tanberg at Jamesville, Wisc. The rooms were nicely decorated with ivy, and beautiful bouquets of sweet peas were placed in abundance about the rooms and on the tables. Her two daughters, Mrs. McDowell and Mrs. A. J. Ralston, and her granddaughter Miss Minnie McDowell acted as hostesses on the occasion. The number was so great, and the calls extended over so many hours, that it will be impossible to give a correct list of them, but nearly every family in town was represented in part or in full. Among those from outside of town, were Mrs. Frank Reynolds, of Butler, Mrs. Mary Hixon, of Cedar Creek, Mrs H. E. Lopp, of Mauckport, Ind., Mrs. Eleanor Goudy, of Cleveland, Ohio. The last named is an aunt, and is herself a few months older than Mrs. Barclay.

The following sweet little poem was sent by Mrs. Julia E. M. Hodge:

JULY 18, 1896.

Eighty years old, to-day!
God give thee joy, dear friend,
Joy, that shall never end
Till earth and heaven blend
In pure delight.
To him thy full heart raise
Who meted out thy days.
To Him, give joy and praise
Whose is the right.

Tiny the stream that bore
Thy shallop from the shore;
But, wid'ning more and more,
With each new day.
Such was thy destiny,
Full of all mystery,
Out on life's open sea,
Sailing away.
Up in the sky afar,
Set there as beacons are,
Shone ever, Hope's sweet star
To give thee cheer.
How did thy bark outride
Safely, the tempest's tide?
Puny thy strength to guide,
So much to fear.
Sometimes in clearest light,
Onward the path was bright;
Then clouds, as dark as night,
Fell like a pall.
What, though the waves ran high!
What, though the rocks were nigh!
Jesus, Himself, stood by God over all.

Eighty years old to-day!
God give thee joy, dear friend,
Thy voyage nears its end:
May He all blessings send,
And perfect peace.
Fair is the port at hand:
Sweet, sweet, that happy land,
Where His redeemed shall stand,
When sorrows cease.

An Error.

Every day, nearly, we hear repeated, a statement that is an error, if not a purposely stated untruth.

At the republican convention Saturday, it was brought up again by Mr. Welsheimer in his opening address, and repeated by Col. Dodge later on. The statment we refer to, is in regard to the recent issue of bonds. They said the issue of bonds was caused by repealing the McKinley tariff law and putting in its place, a tariff law that did not produce as much revenue. They said it was to supply this lack of revenue that the new bonds were issued. This is not the case. The new bonds were issued to put back gold into the reserve fund kept on hand to redeem greenbacks, gold certificates and other paper that has the power to call for gold. There has it is true, been a lack of receipts to pay expenses, but this lack has never been anywhere near as great as the amount of bonds issued, and there has always been enough money of various kinds on hand to pay this deficiency. Take for example, the present time. There is a surplus in the treasury of about 262 millions in various kinds of money. Now take from this, the 100 millions of gold kept on hand to redeem greenbacks, etc, and there is still left available for ordinary expenses about 162 millions. It may be in any money, and it will yet be good to pay any expense the gopernment has, over and above its monthly receipts. The last monthly balance, showed a deficiency of less than four millions. And this lacking four millions was taken from the surplus 162 millions. The first thing to be done, should be to so change our financial laws, as to do away with the necessity of keeping up this 100 millions of gold. The present tariff law has been as productive of net revenue as the McKinley law. The deficits at the end of each month, were as serious under the McKinley law as now. It is true that the deficit will be greater this month than last, twice as great, we presume, for the first month of the fiscal year is always the most expensive one. But whatever it may be it can and will be paid out of the surplus 162 millions. But if the gold is taken, from the treasury, then new bonds will likely be issued to buy more gold and for that only.

CORRESPONDENCE.

WATERLOO.

Thursday morning last week, Mrs. Gavit of Angola, shot herself with a revolver, aiming at her heart, but the ball glanced and broke several ribs. Mr. Gavit has been out of health for some time suffering intense pain in the top of his head. He fell down the morning spoken of, his wife believed him to be dead and on the impulse of the moment attempted to kill herself. Both are alive at this time.

The Willis, and Hornaday families, the latter of Indianapolis are camping at Hamilton for a few days. They should have consulted Hick's Almanac before making arrangements. Four stormy days he foretold for last week, and the same for this, two at the beginning and two at the end. We have had the first two.

John Strack who has lived north of Waterloo for some years died the middle of last week. The funeral services were held in the Presbyterian church of this place Friday at 1 o'clock p. m. The body was taken to Fort Wayne for burial where some of his children are living.

Thursday the 16th, the Minerva Club picnicked at Watkin's landing, Hamilton. They enjoyed the day very much.

The tolling bell announced the death of Mrs. Kester Thursday morning. She was the mother of Dr. Kester and another son in the country north of Waterloo at whose home she died.

Politics seems to be the general subject of conversation. Every one whether having a vote or not should read the chapter on money in Richard Y. Ely's book. "Introduction to Political Economy." The reader would not only understand all about 16 to 1, but the money question would be very clear and should be mastered by every voter at least.

CONCORD.

Mrs. B. F. Wasson and Mrs. Bert Wasson of Spencerville were entertained by Mrs. Will Sheldon Monday.

Ettie Smurr is visiting her uncle Dr. John Morr and family of Albion.

Miss Lemon of Hall's corners is giving music lessons to a large class.

Will Sheldon and wife visited friends in Garrett Sunday.

Mrs. D. B. Phillips of Chicago is spending a few weeks with her two sisters Mrs. N. and Wm. Johnson.

W. B. Sheldon left Sunday night for Erie Penn., to take charge of an engine. He will also visit his birth place Bractford Penn. where he has not been for twenty-three years.

CORUNNA.

Maud Mercer is visiting her grandparents, Dr. and Mrs. Mercer.

Mrs. Isaac Reed returned on Thursday from a visit with Rev. and Mrs. Sumwalt of Orland.

The Corunna Boys played the Hesse Castle nine last Saturday. The score was eight to twenty-four in favor of Corunna.

J. O. Wise and mother, of Greentown Ohio, are visiting relatives here.

Perry Foote took a jaunt on his wheel over into Allen county last Saturday returning on Tuesday.

Mrs. Nina Stearns and children of Chicago, are the guests of Mr. and Mrs. George Miles.

BUTLER.

E. A. Campbell, wife and children of Toledo, are visiting with J. A. Campbell and other Butler friends and relatives.

D. M. Dole's residence, at Hudson, was badly wrecked by lightning last Tuesday night.

Butler turned out her full delegation —forty-nine—to the Auburn republican convention Saturday.

Dr. Madden suffered the loss of two stacks of wheat by fire last Saturday.

Many words of praise came from the army of delegates for the ladies of the Relief Corps of Auburn, who furnished so excellent a dinner for them at so small a price.

The army worm is playing havoc with the oats in many places near here, either eating them up in the stack or in the sheaf or shock, even following the loads to the barns and clamoring (inaudibly) to get in. They are injuring the corn also in places.

Wm. Morrow is getting material on the ground to replace his house that was destroyed by fire a couple of weeks ago.

THE AUTHOR OF "ATALANTIS."

She Achieved Both Fame and Notoriety in Her Day.

A writer that floated high on the rising tide of realism and in her lifetime achieved both notoriety and reputation was Mrs. Delariviere Manley, says the Cornhill Magazine. Her importance in her own world is attested by the frequent occurrence of her name in contemporary literature and the notice taken of her by men of letters. For her tragedy of "Lucius" Prior wrote the epilogue; in Pope's charming burlesque, when the baron carries off "the sacred hair," he assigns to himself an immortality equal to that of Mrs. Manley's famous budget of scandal.

"As long as 'Atalantis' shall be read,
* * * * * * *
So long my honor, name and praise shall live."

In Swift's "Journal to Stella" there are noticeably frequent references to Mrs. Manley—not always complimentary, for he thinks ill both of her spelling and of her personal appearance. Under date of Jan. 26, 1711-12, he writes: "Poor Mrs. Manley, the author, is very ill of a dropsy and sore leg; the printer tells me he is afraid she cannot live long. I am heartily sorry for her; she has very generous principles for one of her sort and a great deal of good sense and invention. She is about 40, very homely, and very fat." An earlier passage in the Journal testifies to her readiness of pen: "I forgot to tell you that yesterday was sent to me a narrative printed, with all the particulars of Harley's stabbing. I had not time to do it myself, so I sent my hints to the author of 'Atalantis,' and she has cooked it into a six-penny pamphlet in her own style." Of this once well-known writer there is little good to say; her life was vicious and so are her books. Finding people eager to read what was true or might be true, she fed "the better vulgar" with a succession of scandalous memoirs and very indecent stories. Her "Atalantis" (1709), a grossly immoral book, which satirized with merciless freedom many of the best-known personages of the day, had a great vogue, its prurient gossip attracting readers with a taste for literary carrion. It brought the author within reach of the law, but the legal proceedings failed of their intent, both retrospective and prospective, and Mrs. Manley continued to make highly seasoned revelation about herself and about other people.

THE PRIZE NOISE.

Seven Boys Can Make More Than a Cyclone.

"The worst sound I ever heard," said the man in the corner, according to the Detroit Free Press, "was the cry of a screech owl in the woods of Maine. I was only a boy at the time and it was years before I could sleep a night through without dreaming of that awful scream."

"My experience is that there is nothing on the face of the earth can make a worse noise than the cry of a panther," said an old hunter belonging to the crowd.

"Gentlemen," said the only Detroiter present, "I once lived across the street from two parrots, and I give you my word of honor that they made more noise of an ear-splitting, heart-rending description than any other critters under the sun."

"I ain't thinking of live objects," said the man who had been reading, "but if it comes to an ear-splitter I call the game on a calliope! The first time I heard it it knocked me clean foolish."

"Then you've never been in a tornado and heard the noise of all noises?" said a western man with an air of pride.

"Tornadoes, cyclones and earthquakes don't count in my experience. I was visiting a family where there were twelve children," said the solemn-looking chap, speaking for the first time; "there were seven boys and five girls and in the morning when I was getting my best sleep there came a racket that made me think of the end of the world. It was those seven boys racing down the attic stairs in their thick-soled boots and it may have been sweet music in their parents' ears but it nearly gave me nervous fever! To tell the truth, I haven't quite recovered from it yet."

The Rain.

Monday's Daily.

Everybody is talking of the big rain of yesterday and to-day, Capt. Kuhlman who is local reporter for the meteorological bureau, brings word that during the twenty-four hours there was a registered rainfall of 2.53 inches, or a little over 2½ inches of water on every foot of land as far as this general rain extended. Some one who has the time ought to figure out from this, how many gallons of water would fall on each acre of land. Although we do not need this great downpour just now, it will so thoroughly soak the country that it will be some time before we suffer again from a drouth. But it is bad for the crops just now. Corn cannot be cultivated although it is growing nicely. Some fields of wheat are still shocked in the fields, and suffering loss, and the ground is so soft that teams cannot get into the fields to get either wheat or oats.

The Peach Belt

After taking many long rides over the smooth streets and parks, of Chicago and spending one day making business calls, I determined to cross the lake and visit the Michigans Peach Belt before returning home. On the morning of the seventh, together with a friend we mounted our wheels and took the down town route over 73d street Stony Island, Jackson Park, Old Midway, Washington Park and the remaining seven miles of Michigan Avenue, the whole course of about fifteen miles were passed over in one hour and twenty minutes, almost the whole of it being the finest riding in the country. Our boat, the Kalamazoo, left her anchorage at 9 a. m. We secured tickets, checked our wheels and went aboard. The vessel is of moderate size, sleek and trim in all her parts, and had not there been a stiff north wind, which kicked old Lake Michigan high in the air, the trip would have been delightful, but as it was with nearly every passenger sick, we were glad to stay in doors and lie still on our couches, to prevent disaster to our hastily swallowed breakfast. We reached South Haven at 4:15 p., m. and having twelve miles of unknown roads yet to wheel, we lost no time in getting off. Extremely dry weather has prevailed here for a long time, and deep sand, and deeper dusty clay made rapid progress impossible. A side path, narrow and tortuous threaded its way at the sides of the road over which we made the most of the way. Many places the path passed beneath overhanging pine and maple trees and compelled us to hug our bars very closely to prevent being scraped off by the low branches. The hay has been gathered, wheat is very poor and corn is from a few inches to three feet high, evidencing the drought. The fruit crop is all that can be asked for, and many wagons laden with ripe peaches were now on the way. Reached our friend's after a hard pull against the wind of 12 miles of sand dust, and sidetrack in 1 hour and twenty minutes, and were quite willing to rest for the night. On the morning of the eighth, a visit to Old Bald Head, was suggested. This is an immense sand pile about two hundred and fifty feet high, and of but a very narrow limit at its base. A stretch of 9 miles of loose sand lay between us and this novel curiosity, over which I once before wearily toiled with horse and buggy using a whole day in making the visit. Our friends suggested a wheel ride down the beach which was readily agreed to and in a few minutes we were tugging our wheels down this steep bluff to the waters edge, where the recent high waves had thrown up a smooth stretch of fine sand over which our wheels noiselessly glided in rapid flight. The beach was strewn with great quantities debris, such as timber, lumber broken boards etc. etc. We picked up a a sealed bottle and breaking it, found a message of no special importance. It had been drifting over thirty days. We reached our destination in an hour, climbed a steep declivity over loose, shifting sand, with many difficulties, and ascended the observatory and the top and got a glimpse of Michigan that surpasses any other view in the state. Nearly 400 square miles are mapped out before us, besides the vast extent of Lake Michigan. We remained but a short time at the top, then made a rapid descent to the beach, and were again on our wheels, homeward bound. Only about three hours were consumed in this run of nearly twenty miles and in climbing the peak. In the afternoon we visited some of the surrounding farms, sampled some of the bright red peaches that loaded down many trees, and at 3 p. m. were again enroute for South Haven, distant 12 miles, which we made in one hour, each of us getting a tumble from our wheels causing a delay of fully ten minutes. I had three hours or so to spare, so rode out into the country a couple of miles and visited Augustus Porter, a former Butler man. I found him about the same as when he left Butler, corpulent, healthy and comfortable considering his 82 summers. We were warmly greeted and kindly entertained. I came back to town at sunset and soon took a state room on the same boat, and amid the roar of the waves and grating of machinery, soon lost consciousness, to wake up at O'Conner's Dock in Chicago, and obtaining our wheels, we made the return trip to South Chicago, fifteen miles in just one hour. We ate a hearty breakfast, then took a Lake Shore for home, which I reached without incident, refreshed and delighted with my visit. The trip covered 330 miles on rail, 160 on water and 120 miles on wheel, in all 610 miles at a total expense of about $8. Of all the journeys I have previously taken, I have had none in which the wheel played so important a part. It proved a vast convenience on almost every occocasion.

A Box of Cigars Free to the One who Sends in the Best Name.

Names are being sent in rapidly for that new brand of cigars at E. M. Bishop's. Remember that the one who furnishes the best name will receive a box of the new brand of cigars free. Send in the name of this new brand by mail, as it will save considerable confusion. No better way to get 50 cigars free than to furnish a good name.

Wawassee.

Sunday it rained all day on Lake Wawassee, Indiana's largest and loveliest body of water. So no one broke the Sabbath in any way. They could not even row a boat or take a ride on the steamer "Anna Jones" which all day long rocked at her pier in front of the well filled hotel at Jones' lovely summer resort. We had gone down there for a day's outing but it proved a day's inning, for everyone had to stay indoors. But Mr. Jones and his estimable family make things comfortable for those around them even in bad weather, and all had an old-fashioned visit all day long. There were parties from various part of the state, many from Ihdianapolis and a few from Cincinnati, for people are coming to learn that there is no nicer place than the resorts on Lake Wawassee. And Jones seems to be getting a large share of them. He has a large hotel with abundant room and there are many cottages near by and many of those who live in cottages also get their meals at his hotel. We counted thirty-nine at the first dinner tables that day. And on fair Sundays people come in in buggies from the country for many miles around to spend a few hours on the lake and get a Sunday dinner at Jones', for he sets a good table. We shall try it again "when the clouds roll by."

HE WAS WRONG.

In his speech last Saturday, Mr. Dodge said, as all republican papers are saying, that "at the close of 1892" business was good, no factories were idle, farm products high in price, with no financial troubles, strikes or lockouts. This is not true. All labor troubles were as common as now, at least. The National Bureau of Labor Statistics, in the hands of a republican, reported that year 1,200 strikes, and failures that amounted to more than 100 millioons. Tramps were never plentier. And while wheat was a few cents higher than now, the things we bought with that wheat were much higher on account of the McKinley law having raised the price on goods we buy at the store.

WAY OFF.

The speakers at the republican convention Saturday said the present tariff "crippled business, lowered the price of wheat, etc." We only ask them to look back over the past twenty years and they will see that prices of all things have steadily gone lower and lower. They will find that wheat, wool, and the like went down even under the McKinley law, and as rapidly as under the present law.

He Don't Know.

A voter at Ashley is reported as saying he "did not like the democratic idea of free silver and free trade." We assure him that neither will hurt him, and they may pan out in way to surprise him. That he does not know the difference between these two conditions proves he does not read the COURIER. We have often shown there never will be "free trade" in this country and never has been. One of the first laws we made, in 1789 was a tariff law. And we have had a tariff law ever since, though it has kept getting higher. The McKinley law was the highest. The present law, that he evidently had been taught to call "free trade," imposes an average duty of about 36 cents on a dollar. Not much free trade in that.

AUBURN, INDIANA.

JAMES A. BARNS, - - PUBLISHER.

The timid man is alarmed before the danger, the coward during it, and the brave man after it.

It is the inevitable end of guilt that it places its own punishment on a chance which is sure to occur.

The compliments and cermonies of our breeding should recall, however remotely, the grandeur of our destiny.

It is an inevitable law that a man can not be happy unless he lives for something higher than his own happiness.

There is this remarkable difference between matter and mind, that he that doubts the existence of mind, by doubting proves it.

The true way to gain influence over our fellow-men is to have charity towards them. A kind act never stops paying rich dividends.

A young woman in Warren, Pa., found a purse containing $800, returned it to the owner and received a reward of $1,000. She must have been a very pretty girl.

The advertiser must know his goods, all about them, and be filled up and overflowing with the enthusiasm for them that begets success. The other thing that he must know is his customers.

The most precious of all possessions is power over ourselves—power to withstand trial, to bear suffering, to front danger; power over pleasure and pain; power to follow our convictions, however resisted by menace and scorn; the power of calm reliance in scenes of darkness and storm.

An advertisement that is reasonable, plausible; that reads smoothly, that starts some place and arrives somewhere, one point following another, until a definite conclusion is arrived at, that is put into type that folks can see, and then printed in a paper that sensible people with money to spend are likely to read—that kind of advertising is going to get results.

Health is the one thing needful; therefore no pains, expense, self-denial, or restraint to which we submit for the sake of it is too great. Whether it requires us to relinquish lucrative situations, to abstain from favorite indulgences, to control intemperate passions, or undergo tedious regimens—whatever difficulties it lays us under, a man who pursues his happiness rationally and resolutely will be content to submit.

It would be a great advantage to the farmers and the millers of the United States if the wheat-flour habit could be introduced into China, Japan and other countries of the East. While flour is the largest item of export at present, with the exception of kerosene oil, it is used only by foreigners. The natives stick to rice. The exports of flour to China, including the British colony of Hong Kong, average about 600,000 barrels a year, valued at $2,000,000. The exports to Japan are about 75,000 barrels, valued at $200,000.

The effect is a strange one on some persons when for the first time they look at their hands and arms in the light of the Roentgen rays. Many persons have been in the habit of regarding a skeleton with something of terror. They unconsciously associate it with thoughts of the sheeted dead, ghosts and the dissecting table. When, therefore, it is brought home to them for the first time that they themselves, alive and well, carry around with them skeletons similar in every respect to the ghastly things they have seen in pictures and medical colleges, the sensation is somewhat overwhelming. Some almost faint, while others turn pale and escape as soon as possible from the unpleasant truth.

The Rev. Ronard D. Worth, a Baptist preacher of New York, has been granted a divorce in Oklahoma. It appears his wife objected to his leaving home on Sundays to preach, and even "spoiled his Sunday coat and filled his Sunday shoes with water." These are somewhat novel reasons for divorce, but they are also novel methods of annoyance for a woman to employ. It is evident that Mr. Worth, being a preacher, was forced to preach, and it is also evident that he could not preach with satisfactory results in a spoiled Sunday coat and with his shoes full of water. It is a unique matrimonial complication and Mr. Worth must be commended for his resolute stand against permitting a wet blanket to be thrown over his religion.

The latest praise of the bicycle cracks it up as a conservator of domestic felicity. Wives and husbands, notably those who have reached the early forties and beyond, have found a bond of companionship in the bicycle that is as strong as it is oftentimes unconscious. The advent of children and the encroachment of business cares slowly force a man and wife apart to a greater or less extent, till, after twenty years of matrimony, if not infrequently happens that, without any jar or conscious estrangement, the two are spending most of their time in separate pursuits. Into this breach (says a writer in the New York Times) the wheel has slipped with a magnetic power. A common enthusiasm for the steel steed brings them together in interest, their daily spins in company make them amusement sharers, and the silver wedding anniversary is likely to stretch on to the golden one, if they are spared to see it, with their lives happily welded.

There will be no invasion of the United States by the products of cheap Japanese labor during the present generation. There is no question that Japan is destined to be one of the great workshops of the world, but her manufactured products are not suitable for the refined taste of the American people, and aside from his silks and the result of her art industries she can offer them very little that they want. She will, however, sooner or later deprive our cotton mills of the markets they have been enjoying in Asia. But Great Britain, Germany and the other continental countries of Europe will suffer more severely than we. China, Korea, India, Australia and the East Indies will absorb all the merchandise that Japan can manufacture for the next quarter of a century, and furnish her natural market. We will continue to take her raw and manufactured silk goods and her tea, and if our manufacturers will enter into the trade with zeal and enterprise they may be able to furnish a vast amount of the raw materials which she will need.

Amid all the mutations of the present time, the coming and going of men, the appearance and disappearance of fads, the changes of fashions, and the evolution of all earthly affairs, there is one passion which remains persistent and unchanged—that strange fascination which draws men to risk unknown dangers and almost certain death in their madness to explore the arctic regions and if possible find the north pole, which, when found, will be destitute of any practical value to the rest of the world. The annual migration has already begun in the sailing of the yacht Windward from England for Franz Josef Land to rescue the Jackson-Harmsworth expedition, which left England in 1894 and which has not been heard from since May, 1895. As at that time the expedition had reached 81½ degrees north it is within the probabilities to assume that next June another expedition may be dispatched to rescue the Windward party. Andree, the Swedish engineer, will start by balloon from the Spitzbergen archipelago next month and expects to reach the pole in forty-three hours, though he carries compressed gas sufficient for a month and four months provisions. It is safe to say if Andree makes his start it will not be necessary to send a rescuing expedition after him. Neither he nor his balloon will probably ever be heard of again, nor will the world ever be likely to know what strange sights these mad air sailors may have seen. About the same time Andree sets flight Lieut. Peary will start for Cape York in quest of a big meteorite he found there last year. As his right, title, and possession have been challenged by another party, who claims this useless chunk of aerial conglomerate upon the ground of prior discovery, and who is also going for it, the only interest pertaining to this particular business concerns the question who will get to the meteorite first and capture it. The only remaining arctic navigator this year is Nansen, but in what part of that mysterious, awful solitude he is now sojourning no one knows. It may be there is no longer any Nansen, or, if there be, that the Norwegians may have to go hunting for him as the English are now hunting for Jackson. The principal value of the arctic regions seems to be to provide opportunities for explorers to get lost and for other explorers to go hunting for them. But still the mad chase for the north pole goes on, and probably on it will go forever.

New York's Food Supply.

"If the city of New York and the neighboring district," writes John Gilmer Speed in the Ladies' Home Journal," were to besieged or in some other way entirely cut off from the outside world, and therefore deprived of the food supplies which in normal times come in daily in great quantities, how long would it be before the pinch of hunger would be felt? That is a very hard question to answer, for the reason that there are such inequalities of purchasing capacity in New York society that some go hungry in times of greatest prosperity for lack of means, while the great majority eat more than is good for them. Undoubtedly the number of those who always go hungry would be increased after two or three days of a siege, and then day by day this number would increase until the public authorities would feel compelled to take possession of the food supplies and distribute them among the people. With the exception of milk and some other things the supply of meat, poultry, hardy vegetables and fruits would last for two months at the present rate of consumption. If all the supplies were taken charge of at the beginning of a siege—and this could easily be done—the food within New York could be made to last for four months at least. The siege of Paris lasted only four months. Before two months had passed, high and low, rich and poor, had learned what hunger was. And, as is well known, the French are the most thrifty and economical people in the world. In the arrangement and disposition of food the Parisians are specially distinguished. But the food supply in New York could be made to last as long as the Paris siege lasted, and the people would still be comfortable."

Beginning to Feel at Home.

According to the Washington Post, Congressman Cannon had a trying experience in learning to ride a bicycle.

When he had been at the work for some time, a friend asked him how he was getting along.

"Oh," said Cannon, "I am making progress."

"Is that so?" said his friend.

"Yes," resumed the Congressman, gravely, "I can spit now, and pretty soon I expect to be able to raise my hat."

The Walls of Jerasalem.

A newspaper published in Jerusalem, printed in the Hebrew language, states that Dr. Bless, supervisor of the Palestine exploration fund, has lately discovered, near Mount Zion, the exact course of the city walls of Jerusalem built before and during the Roman era; also a number of vases and mosaics of high and historical value.

NOTES ON EDUCATION.

MATTERS OF INTEREST TO PUPIL AND TEACHER.

A Serious Problem that Confronts City Boards of Education—Unruly Boys Converted with the Rod—Some School Games for the Children.

Truants and the Schools.

One of the most serious problems that confront the Chicago Board of Education, says the Chronicle of that city, is the question of truant children and the best methods of dealing with them. No hasty answer can be given at present that will in any wise meet the conditions, and yet the subject is one that deserves the attention of every worthy citizen.

It is obvious that truants are not desirable pupils. They are in most cases children of careless, indifferent parents. They are unkempt, uncouth and have usually inherited the lax, loose ways of their parents. Sometimes vicious, they frequently disturb the order and welfare of the school, and unduly tax the time of the teacher, which should be given to instruction and not to incessant reproof and discipline.

It is justly complained that a few such children tend to demoralize a room, and the best strength of a superior teacher is needed to keep in check their pernicious influence. Naturally teachers do not favor a law which compels the attendance of these runaways, and the sight of a truant agent returning one of them is anything but welcome.

Then, too, the limited time of these pupils in school, even when they remain the number of days required by law, counts little in the way of direct attainment. Their indifference and inability lessen the general average of the school, and the ambitious teacher has to realize that the whole tone of her school is weakened by their presence, or rather by their continued coming and going.

Looking at the matter from this point of view, it would seem best for the welfare of the school, that is to say, best for the majority of pupils, that the truant agents be dropped and the money given to compulsory education be spent upon pupils who need no compulsion. Plausible as this seems, and favorable as it would be to the higher tone and character of our schools, it would be unwise and unjust.

For the leading object of our public schools is not to make brilliant scholars, but to secure good citizenship. To this end the State is justified in taxing the people. A government by the people, in order to be secure, must be a government by an intelligent people, who understand clearly the duties as well as the rights of citizens.

Our public schools teach not only the three R's and the higher branches of learning; they teach also the necessity of promptness, order, harmony, obedience to law, self-restraint—all of which are essential to good citizenship. No pupil can pass the various requirements of the public school without gaining in self-discipline or having clearer ideas of right and justice.

Beyond all other children the truants and street waifs need exactly that kind of influence which the public school exerts. More than other children they need special fitting for citizenship—the object for which our schools are primarily designed. It would be unsafe to the State to leave them on the street in order that the general scholarship of the schools may be raised or that teachers and faithful pupils may be rid of their annoyance.

Even where the attendance of these truants is but eighty days or only half a dozen days the value of this time to them cannot be rated. An idea of what three days in a good atmosphere may mean to a vagrant boy may be gained if we consider what three days in a school of vice would do to the best of boys. The effect in the one case may be as strong as that in the other, unless one admits that vice is more potent than virtue—a point that cannot be maintained.

How She Converted Them.

The following is from an address by E. E. White, of Cincinnati, one of the ablest school men now prominent among America's pedagogical leaders. It contains a most wholesome bit of doctrine put into the form of a concrete illustration:

A lady who had unusual success in country schools was once employed to take charge of a Cleveland school which two successive teachers had failed to control. Nothing was said to her respecting the condition of the school, and she took charge of it, anticipating a pleasant experience in teaching in the city. At noon she returned to her boarding place in tears, and said to her brother that she could do nothing with the boys, and had made up her mind to resign and go back into the country. "I have done my best to interest the boys," she added, "and they have simply run over me. Boys have gone head first out of the windows this morning and back again, whistling at me." "Do not think of resigning, Mary," said the brother, "but go back and put your school in order and give the boys a lesson in prompt obedience. Ask them to rise quietly at the beck of your hand. If a boy fails to respond, attend to them." "Shall I whip?" asked the troubled teacher. "Whip? Yes; if necessary," said the brother, "and I will furnish the whips. Your school is in rebellion." She sighed, but took the whips furnished and returned to her school to try the experiment. She came back at the close of school with a look of victory on her face. "Well, Mary," said the brother, "what kind of a school did you have this afternoon?" "I had an excellent school," she replied, "the last hour." "What of the first hour?" said the brother. "I do not like to say." "Did whip?" "Whip? I whipped a half-dozen boys the first twenty minutes, but they toed the mark after that. I am going to have a beautiful school." That lady taught in the schools of Cleveland until she went to her reward, and she never whipped another pupil. It is a good many years since the speaker gave the above advice, but he would give it to-day under like circumstances.

Primary Reading.

Children cannot read until they are perfectly familiar with small words and can recognize them at sight. If it be attempted before this is accomplished, the reading is slow, laborious and dull.

Many of our poor readers in the upper grades are so from a slovenly habit that comes from lack of proper drill. The bright boy or girl will soon learn to recognize words, but the slow ones must have the right kind of a drill and plenty of it.

Every child who enters school has a vocabulary of from two to three hundred words. The first few years of his school life the teacher merely teaches him the written and printed forms of words he already knows.

A good plan is to make a list of words given the pupil from chart, board or book, and run over them every day. Tell the children you want them to make a new spelling-book, and you want all the words they can think of. Begin, for instance, with a-t. Write it, see it, spell it and sound it. Tell them to make another word from this, putting some letter before at. Write a-t the first one, then add the letter given you. Some one suggests c, write c and you have c-a-t under this word, and ask for another letter. This time some one will give r, then you have r-at. Proceed in this way until you have at, cat, rat, fat, mat, Nat, vat, bat, sat, tat. Then take a-n and proceed in the same manner, leaving your list on board or chart. You now have an, can, ran, man, fan, Dan, tan, yan, van. Take i-n, and you will produce in, tin, fin, bin, win, din, kin, sin, etc. After several lists have been made, make phrases, such as: a cat, a rat, a mat, a fan. You can carry this out indefinitely. Use three words, as a man ran, a cat ran, a fat rat ran at a man, etc., etc. The children will enjoy the work. If you have no pictures, draw something to represent the word. No matter if the drawing is crude, children as as often amused and pleased with these crude drawings as with the more perfect ones.

For pupils who have words with two or three syllables, separate the words into parts; as sing-ing, bring-ing, pretend-ing, com-mand-ing. Always have a list of words in view. When there is lassitude in the number class call for a list of words; or, when there is a minute or two between classes turn the attention to some one of these lists. If lists consist of words of two syllables, as, ring-ing, sing-ing, bring-ing, winging, fling-ing, cling-ing, pronounce first part of each word as sing, ring, etc. Then pronounce the last part; put them together and pronounce. This makes an excellent drill, and one that tells in the end.—The Teachers' Outlook.

School Games for Children.

"Going to Mexico" is the name of an entertaining game for boys and girls. It is suitable for an evening gathering of almost any kind. The company arranges itself in a circle with the "Traveler" in the center.

"What are you going to take to Mexico with you, Arthur?" asks the traveler, pointing suddenly at one of the boys and beginning to count rapidly.

If Arthur says apples or andirons or the name of any other object beginning with A, the first letter of his name, before the traveler counts ten, he keeps his seat and the traveler turns suddenly and points at Kate.

"One, two, three——" he counts.

"Cookies," stammers Kate.

"You cannot go to Mexico with me, says the traveler, and he takes Kate's chair and Kate becomes a traveler. Then she tries to catch some one else. The same person may not mention the same object twice.

An interesting diversion consists in having every one present except those who are in the secret stand up around the room with their faces toward the hall. Then the leader steps up to one person in the ring and asks:

"Are you perfectly satisfied?"

Then the question is asked earnestly of each person in the ring, the interest increasing all the time. When the leader has been informed that every one is well satisfied, he steps to the middle of the room and says:

"Very well, you are all satisfied. You can stand there as long as you please."—Institute Herald.

Rules for Strengthening the Memory.

Seek and preserve vigorous health as a fundamental condition of a good memory. Train the senses to careful observation and accurate discrimination. Deepen and intensify your first impressions of what you would memorize, (a) by concentrating the thought upon it, (b) by exercising the will power in regard to it, (c) by allowing the object or thought to remain for a sufficient length of time before the mental vision.

Test your memory to determine whether you commit more easily by sight or sound, also to find which you retain more firmly, the images of sight or the sound images. Select for memorizing purposes some selection, and assign yourself a limited portion for daily memorizing at a selected hour of the morning. Preserve the period religiously for the two-fold purpose of committing the daily portions and reviewing the lessons previously committed. Make it a rule to comprehend thoroughly every idea or fact you would commit to memory.

Do not burden memory with useless tasks, or with too much at a time, depending for growth and enlargement on the regularity and suitability of the exercises rather than its difficulty. Do not attempt to force the memory to recall an idea. If memory can recall an idea at all, it can generally do so easily. Many a person has lost entirely an idea, which he might have recalled by easy suggestion to his memory, by "cudgeling" his brains for it. Repeatedly recall the mental images to consciousness and make them as vivid as possible. Catch the dim pictures, and hold them in the mind's vision until they become clearer. Visualize these mental pictures, and make them so distinct that those senses through which they were received shall be called into a measure of activity again.

Lion and Tiger Ranch.

An enterprising Western firm of cattlemen, recognizing the demand for wild animals for circus and zoological gardens, is going to start a farm for the raising of the various types of beasts. It is proposed to secure four or five square miles of the most thickly wooded land in California for the purpose.

DESIGNS IN SWISS STYLE.

Adapted to Rural Surroundings and a Mountainous Lander e.

There are some styles that re particularly fitted to the American climate and social conditions. There are others that can seldom be used with good effect, but inasmuch as there are occasional calls for the construction of houses in these styles, it is fitting that they should be considered.

The design illustrated herewith is that of a Swiss cottage. Swiss architecture is the outgrowth of the needs and conditions of the inhabitants of Switzerland, and, like all national institutions, is most appropriate to its natural surroundings. The life of the Swiss peasant is divided by his occupations into two seasons, the summer, when he is watching and tending his cattle on the high Alps, and the winter, when he is forced to find shelter from the rigorous climate, with its fierce storms, in the low-lying, secluded valleys.

Swiss architecture, as built in this country, has been—shall we say?—somewhat Americanized, and the accompanying sketch shows a structure that would be effective and pleasing if erected in a suitable location. The latter point is one upon which all architect, versed as well in the technical points of landscape, should be consulted, as many a man spending his money freely but not discreetly in the erection of a house has found too late that he has made a serious mistake in trusting too confidently to his own taste.

It may be found necessary for him to sell a house that has cost him thousands of dollars, and because of its expressing too strongly his own individuality, finds he will not be able to realize a third of his investment. It is the proper duty of the architect not only to draw plans but to advise with his client upon the general style, accommodation and arrangement of the house to be chosen, as well as, and perhaps above all, to see that it harmonizes with its surroundings and suits the artistic demands of the neighborhood.

The design illustrating this article would be much out of place by the seashore, but for a country residence or the suburbs of a city, where the land is not flat, but rather mountainous or hilly, its tasteful and striking appearance would be most appropriate. A brief description is given as follows:

General dimensions: Width (over all), 36 feet; depth, including veranda, 48 feet 2 inches.

Heights of stories: Cellar, 7 feet; first story, 10 feet; second story, 9 feet.

Exterior materials: Foundation, brick; first story, clapboards; second story, gables and roofs, shingles. Outside, blinds.

Interior finish: Hard white plaster, plaster cornices in hall, parlor, dining-room and three chambers; soft wood flooring and trim; ash stairway; panels under windows in parlor, hall and dining-room; bath-room and kitchen wainscotted; interior woodwork finished in hard oil.

The principal rooms and their sizes, closets, etc., are shown by the floor plans.

Cellar under kitchen and pantry. Fireplaces with hardwood mantels in hall, parlor, dining-room, and one bedroom and kitchen range included in estimate. The cost of this design as described is $3,516, not including heater, the estimate being based on New York prices for materials and labor, but in many sections of the country the cost should be less.

PAMPAS GRASS PLUMES.

They Will Be Waved by Republicans Who Parade This Year.

Mark Hanna, chairman of the National Republican Committee, has chosen as the emblem in the forthcoming campaign red, white, and blue pampas grass, both for interior decorations and as a standard to be carried in parades, at which functions he suggests that the pampas should be mounted in shape on a staff. This is not the first time pampas grass has been employed as the emblem of the Republican party. It was adopted as such in the Republican National Convention of 1892.

Pampas grass is, properly speaking, a grass which covers the pampas of South America, but it is now cultivated all over California for the sake of its plumes, which are sold by florists for room decoration. The South American grass is quite hardy, and its tufts are magnificent in appearance. The leaves are fully six or eight feet long, and the flowering stems ten to fourteen feet high. The flowers are silvery white, and from eighteen inches to two feet long. The culture of these grasses and their preparation for the market form a considerable industry. Florists are thoroughly conversant with the valuable commercial qualities of pampas grass, and most of the purveyors of flowers deal in it quite extensively. The demand for pampas grass as an interior decoration is on the increase every year. The grasses are dried and colored for the market, and all that is left for the florists to do is their arrangements in making appropriate combinations. The great beauty of pampas grass is thought to reside in the plumes, or feathers, as they are sometimes called. These are abundant and fluffy, and fall in graceful streamers around the stems. The natural color of pampas grass is almost white, but rarely reaches the retailer in that guise. Mark Hanna has spoken for red, white and blue pampas grass, and red, white, and blue are likely to be the staple colors until election day.

BUNCH OF PAMPAS GRASS GROWING.

SENATOR JOHN W. DANIEL.

Temporary Chairman of the Democratic National Convention.

One of the most striking and in one sense most commanding figures at the Democratic convention at Chicago was Senator John W. Daniel, of Virginia, whom the free silver men in the convention made temporary chairman, thus refusing to accept the choice of the national committee, Senator David B. Hill.

Senator Daniel was born in Lynchburg, Va., in 1842. He served in the

JOHN W. DANIEL.

Confederate army of Northern Virginia during the war and received a wound that has since been to him the source of constant pain. He was riding his horse when a cannon ball took away a portion of his thigh. He fell and lay for some time in the midst of the battle until one of his own soldiers, who was also wounded, dragged him behind a log. There the two lay together for more than half an hour with the bullets flying, the shells bursting and the battle going on all about them. When the fight was finished Daniel was carried to the hospital. The surgeon said he would die, but a section of the thigh bone was cut away and his youthful vitality was such that he recovered. He has to-day six inches of bone out of one of his legs, and still he manages to do good work, though he is in constant pain.

After leaving the service he studied law and has practiced it since 1866. From 1869 to 1872 he served in the Virginia House of Delegates and from 1875 to 1881 in the State Senate. In 1870 he was a Democratic elector-at-large and was a member of the Democratic conventions of 1880 and 1888. He was a member of the Forty-ninth Congress and was elected to the United States Senate to succeed William Mahone. He was re-elected and his present term of office will expire in 1899.

Senator Daniel is one of the ablest speakers in the South and is called the silver-tongued orator. He has a remarkably striking and cultured face.

Crabs and Earthquakes.

For some time previous to the day on which the great earthquake of August, 1857, occurred, great swarms of crabs of an unknown variety were seen in the bay of Payta, Chili. They all appeared to be greatly excited, and were literally climbing over each other in their efforts to escape the impending calamity. How they knew that the earthquake was collecting its strength to desolate the coast is more than man can say, but they knew something unusual was about to happen there is no doubt whatever. That there were millions of them may be inferred from the report of Dr. Forbes, who says that "ten days after the earthquake the dead crabs were thrown upon the beach in a wall line, three to four feet wide, along the whole extent of the bay.—St. Louis Republic.

WOMEN DISCOURAGED.

GOOD AND SUFFICIENT REASONS FOR THE BLUES.

Doctors Fail to Understand Symptoms That Are Danger Signals.

A marked trait in woman's character is to place implicit confidence in her physician.

A man must work entirely from theory in the treatment of female diseases, for unfortunately facts based upon actual knowledge, belong to the female sex alone. Many women who periodically suffer with attacks of faintness, dizziness, extreme lassitude, "don't care" or want-to-be-left-alone feeling, do not at first realize that these are the infallible symptoms of womb trouble and the forerunners of great suffering.

Soon they grow to feel that the doctor does not understand their case. Then they remember that "a woman best understands a woman's ills," and turn to Mrs. Pinkham.

The following letter is but one positive illustration of this fact:—

"Four years ago I began to suffer with great weakness of the generative organs. My womb was prolapsed; I suffered with continual backache and all the other pains that accompany that weakness. I tried doctor after doctor, had operations. The final operation after which I became a total wreck, was scraping of the womb. A friend, one day, recommended to my husband your Compound. He bought me a bottle. The relief I experienced after taking it, was wonderful. I continued its use, and I am glad to say my recovery is a perfect surprise to everybody that knows me."—MRS. B. A SONG IN THE NIGHT.

The tenderness of little loves
Is sweeter than our dreams of heaven;
Far in the woodlands moan the doves,
And God to them their griefs has given;
And when they die, in twilight late
Some sad bird moaneth for her mate.

What are the songs of birds to be—
Of flowers to fleck the future's dells,
To birds that sang farewell to thee
And broke thy heart with their farewells?
What the sweet breath of flowers to those
That once made life's immortal rose?

Still, suns will rise, and suns will set
And morning bloom o'er land and deep;
And hearts shall whisper: "We forget,"
Even while they weep—even while they weep!
Through life, through death, through good and ill
We love, and we remember still!

HIS SPANISH SWEETHEART.

I wondered why Barry should be sitting alone in the garden at ten o'clock on a fine midwinter night. As I remembered him he had been a sociable sort of fellow, fond of gayety and pretty girls; and there was a cotillion going on indoors in the ball-room. I wondered, too, where his wife was; for he had told me he was married. It was six years since I had last seen him. We had been boys together, just out of college, and I had visited him for a summer in the southern part of the State, where his home had always been, and where his family was one of the few "old" ones which could rightly lay claim to gentility other than mushroom growth. After that visit I had gone back to San Francisco, and to a truly San Franciscan system of work, with the result that my health and spirits had steadily decreased, and at the end of these half-dozen years I was obliged to come south for a long rest.

I had chosen this delightful and quiet hotel in the hope that I might not have my peace disturbed by any of my numerous acquaintances; but here, the first thing, came down upon us in our retreat a crowd of worldlings from town, bent on dancing a cotillion. Barry had come with them; why, then, I repeated, was he not in the hop-room, and where was his wife? Perhaps she did not dance. But in that case, why was either of them with the frivolous party that was turning our secluded spot into Bedlam?

For a moment longer I let my gaze follow a girl in white satin, who had fascinated me. She was very young and brilliant and erect, with the face a painter would have chosen for Olympia's, wreathed in vines and serpents. A high, unnaturally white forehead, with very black and very straight thin brows, eyes long and flashing, thin red lips, continually parted in a wild sort of smile, over wonderful teeth; a brilliant color, a long face, black hair parted and twisted low on one of the most columnar necks I have ever seen. It was not a beautiful face; in repose, it was far from beautiful, but it was rarely in repose, and her laugh was the most bewildering thing imaginable. If she had been the heroine of a romance, men would have loved and hated her to the extent of the shedding of a great deal of blood, but in life to-day it is hard cash, not women's faces, that accomplish that. I took one last look at the young face, and then went to hunt up Barry.

We had already met in the office, but had not had time to exchange a dozen words. I wanted to talk over old times and new times, so, when I drew near, I scraped my feet and coughed, as being the approved method of breaking in upon tetes-a-tetes and meditations; and when he started, I said: "Hullo! That you, Barry?" and took a seat beside him on the bench. He offered me a cigar and gave me a light, from which I inferred I was not unwelcome.

"What are you doing, mooning under a pepper tree? It seems to me dancing's more in your line; or, doesn't the madam dance?"

"Yes, she dances."

"Oh!" I said, and feeling slippery ground, proceeded to avoid it. "Came down town to-night with the party, didn't you?" I asked.

"Yes."

"Heaps of pretty women."

"Do you think so? I admire your Northern women more; they have more distinction, too. Ours fade early, besides."

"Well, there's one girl there, by Jove! that makes up for a country of mediocrity—that witch of a flirt with the black hair who is dancing with Thornton. If I didn't happen to have some one I like better in the city, I think I'd go in for her."

"She's married, my friend."

"No? Who's the proud possessor?"

"I am."

"You don't say? Since when?"

"Since five years ago, nearly."

"Well, it's a little late, but permit me to congratulate you; she's superb."

"Thanks." And then we lapsed into silence, and I reflected upon the facility with which a well-meaning man may put his foot in it.

"You wonder at my not dancing, don't you?" he said, abruptly. "Well, I used to like it; I like it now; but I found Mrs. Barry was already engaged, so there was nothing for me to do but to order flowers gracefully and step out here—to reflect and recall.

"Do you know," he went on, "I had a romantic meeting and parting on this spot once. Right under this very tree. It was just after I left you, six years ago—the meeting. I had ridden out from town on Nocturne—you remember her, the little black mare? I was walking her along a road which ran about six feet from here, just about where that Bon Silene bush is (it was before the days of the hotel), when all of a sudden she shied at what looked like a bundle of old clothes under this tree. No—no, I wasn't thrown and I wasn't rescued by the heroine. It was not much of a shy, just enough to make me look again at the bundle and wonder what it was—it was dusk, you know—and then to notice that the bundle moved.

"Wherefore I concluded it was a woman, probably a Mexican. It was a woman, or a very young girl, rather, and a deuced pretty one—a Mexican, too. I could see that even in the twilight for her eyes gleamed in the dark as only a pair of Mexican eyes can gleam; and there was an added brightness, for the eyes were wet with tears. How do I know? I dismounted and found out, of course. It isn't likely I was going to see a woman prone on the ground, a long way from the nearest habitation, at nightfall, and yet not offer her any assistance in my power.

"Well, as I said, she was crying stormily, and I set about finding out why. She told a most blood-curdling tale of parental cruelty. It wasn't true. I've found that out since. As a matter of fact, she had found that a particular flame of hers was going to take another girl to some shindy. But the cruel-treatment story did nicely, and I comforted her—she was such a mere child, I honestly thought. The lie was innocent enough. They aren't taught to think a falsehood anything serious. She was just a trifle shy and shrinking, like a little girl who puts her hands behind her and lowers her lashes at the advance of a stranger. In fact, that is exactly what she did. You should have seen those lashes! You'd have been just as big a fool as I was, and have stayed until the moon rose, and made an appointment for another meeting, and eventually you'd have fallen as badly in love as I did.

"We always met under this tree. It was on her father's land, but quite out of sight of the house. She said that if he were to find us together, he would redouble his brutality; but I assured her that if we were discovered, we would run off at once and get married. The child was in one of her acquiescent moods, and lowered her eyes and agreed. Of course I could only manage to get away on Saturday evenings on Sundays (this is the anniversary of our meeting, by the bye. You see I cling to old memories), but we made the most of our time. I never had been so infatuated as I was with that Spanish child, with her tawdry, bright frocks, her shy ways, her gorgeous eyes and her broken English. She was really Spanish, and not Mexican, I learned."

"They all are," I ventured.

"I know, but your sarcasm is wasted; in this case it was beyond question, and there was American blood in her veins, too—a little of it.

"I insisted on running away with her and getting married at sea; and, after no end of refusals, she finally consented. Oh, I was far too smitten, too ensnared, to have it to occur to me then how a match of the sort would hamper my career; how an ignorant country girl would prove a thorn in my flesh in the critical town clique; what a social drag she would be upon me. I knew the family would raise particular Cain; but when a man wants to marry, in spite of his family, he is apt to look upon it as a small stone to be kicked out of his path, and it takes him some time to discover that his pebble is a good-sized bowlder.

"But we quarreled." A long pause, while Barry lit another cigar from the old one and puffed it into glowing. I kept silence, and after a while he went on: "You may think most women are fiery, but you should try a Spaniard. She got the cruel father—a harmless, shriveled-up old fellow—to take her to town behind one of his trotters one day. She wanted to buy a gown, which she told him was for some kind of a balle out here, but it was really to get married in. I had brought her a sample of the stuff I wanted her to get, otherwise she'd have appeared in pink and green and white lace, beyond a doubt. Her taste was simply nul.

"Well, she saw me on the street with a city girl. I believe it was Nora Clarke—you remember her? She was the merest acquaintance, as you know, and I treated her as one does any woman one happens to meet. We passed a confectioner's and I, naturally enough, asked her to have some soda-water. I don't suppose I'd have done it if I'd known that Ysadora was around, simply because I was aware that she wouldn't take it as an American fiancee would have done. But she was around, and she thought I was doing the deadly devoted; so, the next Saturday when we were to have run away, she met me with reproaches and tears and devilry generally. She wouldn't listen to reason. She tore up the new gown, and refused to ever marry me or any other man, and she used some strong but musical Spanish. I fancy she was worse jealous than hurt, but I—well, I was completely done up. To say that she looked more beautiful than ever, would be to put it weakly. When I saw her disappear for good, over behind that clump of eucalyptus, I was on the verge of suicide. Pity I stopped at the verge.

"The fellow who has since built the hotel bought this spot, that saw our meeting and our parting, when her old father died, a year or so later.

"You came along just as I was going over old memories and wishing—I suppose I should not say it—wishing that it were six years ago and that I was still blindly infatuated with my Spanish sweetheart of sixteen."

I am not fond of the modern unfinished story. I want to see the heroine laid in her grave by a host of weeping grandchildren, and the hero following her contentedly soon after, so I asked: "But what became of the girl?"

"Nothing ever 'becomes' in real life," he answered.

"Where is she now?" I persisted.

"In the ball-room dancing the cotillion with Thornton."

"Then——"

"Yes. We made it up after her father's death, and were married—on dry land—and have lived happily ever after," he added, shrugging his shoulders and throwing away his cigar.—Argonaut.

A Luminous Cat.

Those who now tolerate mice or rats in or about the house certainly must be blind to the fact that a luminous cat, which costs very little to secure and nothing to keep, has been invented, and can be placed in any dark corner or nook, and effectually scares away all such pests. This cat is struck or stamped from sheet metal, or other like material, so as to represent in appearance the exact counterpart of its animated feline sister. It is painted over with a luminous paint, so that it shines in the dark like a cat of flame. After being used for about a week the place is forever free of either mice or rats.—Popular Science News.

CONTROL OF THE ORINOCO.

Punta Barima Important but Not a Vital Point.

To comprehend fully what the control of a vast waterway treading the richest part of Guiana would mean to America and American interests, one must study carefully the map of South America. Geographers divide the southern continent into three great basins, those of the Amazon, the Orinoco, and the Plata. To dominate the mouth of any one of these great arteries of commerce would be to become the master of one-third of South America. The Orinoco is navigable for vessels of the deepest draft to Ciudad Bolivar, Venezuela's eastern metropolis. Within this distance of four hundred miles, twenty other navigable rivers swell the mighty current of the Orinoco, while still farther into the interior, the eastern bank receives the waters of ninety-one large rivers, and the west those of thirty. Two of the former are navigable to the affluents of the Amazon, and many of the latter to the remote interior of the neighboring republics of Venezuela and Colombia.

If she were to gain control of the Orinoco, England would possess the key to the entire eastern part of South America. This view has been advanced by ex-President Guzman Blanco in a recent publication. He attaches to the possession of Punta Barima the ability to dominate the Orinoco and the entire water system which empties into it. Punta Barima is on the southeastern bank of the Orinoco at its juncture with the sea, and is described as a high bluff which, when properly fortified, would control this entrance, the most navigable of all the mouths of the Orinoco. It would not be under water during the period of inundation, and with a dockyard and three or four river gunboats, its master might lock up the Orinoco and all that vast tributary country. On the other hand, the counterview is advanced, and should be stated, that the position of Punta Barima would enable the English to dominate only one pass by means of guns placed on fortifications on shore, since at least two of the other mouths of the Orinoco can be entered by vessels from the sea.

The best line of communication today between Trinidad and Ciudad Bolivar is by a side-wheel steamer, built in the United States, which passes through a mouth of the Orinoco far to the west of Punta Barima, on the bar of which there is at least eight feet of water. It therefore may be argued that fortifications at Punta Barima could not close the Orinoco, the control of which would depend upon vessels of war. England's strength as a sea power, with Trinidad as a base, gives her all necessary control of the river to-day. If British Guiana should develop into a great nation, claiming and owning one bank of the Orinoco, Punta Barima would become a point of great importance; but this is a contingency hardly to be dreaded by Venezuela, since, with her superb natural advantages, she must inevitably keep the lead.—Century.

A Dog That Meets a Train.

"It is the little things in traveling that makes it interesting," said Prof. Gregory Amann, of Portland, Ore., at the Shoreham. Prof. Amann is connected with the State University of Oregon, and is now starting abroad on his annual excursion. "I mean that a person can get as much enjoyment, and possibly more instruction out of the little incidents he enconuters en route than he can from the stupendous structures built by man or the magnificent handiwork of nature.

"I have made the trip across the continent several times. It always happened that I went through Burlington, Iowa. The train stops for a change of engines in a suburb west of the city. The last time I went through there one of the porters from the dining-car got off and carried a plate of food to a small yellow dog that waited out at one side of the track. When I saw it I remembered that this porter had done the very same thing the last time I had been over the route.

"The engine bell rang, the porter gave the dog a pat on the head and ran and caught the already moving train, and the canine wagged him a farewell. A short time later the porter told me about the dog. He said about three years before the dog had had his leg broken by his train. The men took pity on him and nursed him, taking him along in the cars for a few days. When the leg began to heal he was again left at the same station where we saw him.

"The porter's car came along every day at that time, and each day the dog would be there to get the food he always saved for it. By-and-by the train stopped there only four times a week, for it had become a through train. The little yellow dog soon learned of the change. He would invariably be at the station when that particular train arrived, though no one could be found that ever saw him there at any other time. Another strange thing was that he would never approach nearer the car tracks than the little grass plot on which I saw him, and that was two rods from them. He never missed the train. If it was late he would wait for it, but he was never late himself."—Washington Times.

Appropriate Signs.

"Storekeepers' signs have always been an interesting study to me," said Rev. F. H. Smythe, a clergyman from Illinois, who was a guest of Vice President Stevenson during the past week, "but I do not think I ever enjoyed them so much as I have here. The first one which struck my eye was that of Rich & Co., bankers. What a wonderfully happy combination of name and business! I saw the sign of Mr. Hackney, a livery stable keeper, and there was plenty of evidence gathered about the place to show that he was in the hackney carriage business. I ran across Mr. Garden, who, of course, is in the flower business. What else could he be in with such an appropriate name? The following day I had the pleasure of seeing the sign of Mr. Plugge, a tobacco dealer, and on the evening the sign of Dr. Songster, who is a voice and throat doctor. The entire combination surpasses anything in that line I have ever seen, read of or heard of."

Some Uses of Asbestos.

Asbestos tissues, manufactured with pure amianthus yarn, are employed by the manufacturers of chemical products in filtering acids, and as wicks in certain heating apparatus. Asbestos mastic has an advantage over all known mastics, and resists the very highest temperature without injury. Asbestos colors are manufactured, which, in the case of metals, form an excellent preventive of oxidation, and render wood tissues absolutely incombustible. Bricks made of very light and porus asbestos are frequently placed in gas chimneys; the mineral reddens and throws out a great heat. About twelve years ago not more than three or four articles, at the most, were made of asbestos, while at the present day the list contains more than a hundred, and the use of this article is extending everywhere. One of the abuses to which asbestos is now put is in connection with ceramics, and the use of asbestos pottery is expected to become popular and to spread. With asbestos powder a species of earthenware is manufactured, possessing a grain of fineness hitherto unattained by any chinaware. Finally, as pipe clay, asbestos produces an excellent pipe.

Convicts Build a Prison.

The State of Montana is about to begin the erection of an additional prison on the grounds at Deer Lodge, on which the penitentiary now stands. The new structure will accommodate 300 convicts. A peculiar fact in connection with the undertaking, says a Helena special to the Chicago Record, is that the prison will be built by convict labor, and that many of the men who will help build it will subsequently become occupants of it. Were it not able to employ convict labor the State would have to go without this additional prison for some time at least, as funds are scarce in the treasury.

Humbert's Generosity.

King Humbert, in the name of himself, or Queen Margherita, and of the Princess and the royal family of Italy, has given to the Government for the families of the dead and wounded soldiers in Africa, the sum of 4,000,000 francs. This sum is to be distributed without distinction between the Italian and native soldiers, who fought side by side against the Abyssinians. King Humbert has also expressed his intention of furnishing, if necessary, another sum of 1,000,000 francs in his name, and that of the Queen, to be divided among the wounded.

A Superbly Appointed Train.

Undoubtedly the handsomest train between Chicago and St. Paul, Minneapolis, the Superiors, and Duluth is the "North-Western Limited," which leaves Chicago at 6:30 p. m. daily via the North-Western Line (Chicago and North-Western R'y.) Its equipment, which is entirely new throughout, and embraces Compartment Sleeping Cars, Buffet, Smoking and Library Cars, Standard Sleeping Cars, Dining Cars and Ladies' Coaches, has every luxury which imagination can conceive or mind invent for the comfort and convenience of passengers. Rudyard Kipling is now putting the last touches on a 50,000-word novel dealing with the Gloucester fishermen and their life on the Grand Banks. It is written from close personal study of the scene and the people. It is American in its characters, and in its plot seafaring and adventurous. It breaks entirely new ground. The title is "Captains Courageous."

There has been a lively competition for the serial rights of "Captains Courageous." They have been secured for the United States by the S. S. McClure Co., and publication of the novel will begin in the November number of McCLURE'S MAGAZINE.

Gladness Comes

With a better understanding of the transient nature of the many physical ills, which vanish before proper efforts—gentle efforts—pleasant efforts—rightly directed. There is comfort in the knowledge, that so many forms of sickness are not due to any actual disease, but simply to a constipated condition of the system, which the pleasant family laxative, Syrup of Figs, promptly removes. That is why it is the only remedy with millions of families, and is everywhere esteemed so highly by all who value good health. Its beneficial effects are due to the fact, that it is the one remedy which promotes internal cleanliness without debilitating the organs on which it acts. It is therefore all important, in order to get its beneficial effects, to note when you purchase, that you have the genuine article, which is manufactured by the California Fig Syrup Co. only and sold by all reputable druggists.

If in the enjoyment of good health, and the system is regular, laxatives or other remedies are then not needed. If afflicted with any actual disease, one may be commended to the most skillful physicians, but if in need of a laxative, one should have the best, and with the well-informed everywhere, Syrup of Figs stands highest and is most largely used and gives most general satisfaction.

The State Debt

Is Being Wiped Out Rapidly Under Governor Matthews.

The state board of finance consisting of the governor, auditor and secretary of state, met Monday and ordered the payment of $200,000 of 3 per cent bonds of the temporary loan of 1889 with an option dated April 4, 1894. Interest to the amount of $500 per month is thus saved to the state. This makes $300,000 paid during the past three months. It looks as though $2,000,000 of the state debt will have been wiped out during the administration of Governor Matthews when he retires from office next January.

MARRIED.

Friday's Daily.

William Miser, of Auburn, and Miss Polly Sebert, of near Waterloo.

The marriage of William Miser and Miss Polly Sebert occurred at the home of Rev. Yayer, of Waterloo last evening. After the ceremony the young couple repaired to the home of the bride's parents where a large company of invited guests were waiting to greet them. After the usual congratulations the company were invited to the dining room where an elegant supper was served.

Mr. Miser is well known to Auburn people. For a long time he and his brother have conducted the Union Bakery. His esteemable wife has many friends in the vicinity where she lived. She will be welcomed to Auburn. Mr. and Mrs. Miser will move here at once and commence house-keeping in the rooms over the bakery. They were the recipients of many useful and valuable presents, which showed the high esteem in which they were held by their friends. The COURIER wishes them a happy and prosperous future.

Summer Complaint.

Last summer one of our grand children was sick with a severe bowel trouble. Our doctor's remedies had failed, then we tried Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhœa Remedy, which gave very speedy relief. We regard it as the best remedy ever put on the market for bowel complaints.—Mrs. E. G. Gregory, Frederickstown, Mo. This certainly is the best remedy ever put on the market for dysentary, summer complaint, colic and cholera infantum in children. It never fails to give prompt relief when used in reasonable time and the plain printed directions are followed. Many mothers have expressed their sincere gratitude for the cures it has effected. Matrimonial Reunion.

And a Picnic In Which All May Participate

There are reunions but Rev. W. L. Meese proposes the latest novelty in this line, which is a reunion of all those now living whom he has united in marriage since he was licensed to perform such ceremonies. The reunion will take place in the beautiful grove on the fair ground east of Auburn, on Thursday, August 20, 1896. The reunion is to partake of the nature of a picnic, and all are requested to bring well filled baskets. There will be singing, speech-making and other entertainments to make all feel that with Rev. Meese's subjects "marriage has not been a failure." While everybody is most cordially invited to attend and to participate in this novel reunion, the friends of all the couples married and of Rev. Meese are urgently requested to do so. It is to be hoped that the press and the clergy of the county will give their hearty support. The grove is one of the most beautiful. A well of good water is within a hundred feet of where the largest picnic ever assembled in the county will meet. More than three hundred stalls on the fair ground can be used for horses.

Any further information can be obtained by addressing Rev. W. L. Meese Auburn, Indiana.

The First One.

Some years ago David Baker, a distingushed poet in the State of Maine, after the birth of his first child, wrote and published the following pretty poem:

Righteous St. Peter soundly slept
One night and left the door ajar,
When through a little angel crept
And came down with a falling star.
One summer, as the blessed beams
Of morn approached, my blushing bride
Awakened from some pleasing dreams
And found that angel by her side.
God grant but this—I ask no more—
That when he leaves this world of pain
He'll wing his way to that bright shore.
And find the road to heaven again.

John G. Saxe, not to be outdone, and deeming that injustice had been done to St. Peter, wrote the following as St. Peter's reply:

Full eighteen hundred years or more
I've kept my gate securely fast;
There has no "little angel" strayed,
Nor recreant through the portals passed.
I did not sleep, as you supposed,
Nor left the door of heaven ajar,
Nor has a "little angel" left,
And gone down with a falling star.
Go ask that blushing bride, and see
If she don't frankly own and say
That when she found that angel babe,
She found it in the good old way.
God grant but this—I ask no more—
That should your number still enlarge,
You will not do as done before,
And lay it to old Peter's charge.

ALLIGATOR PEARS.

(From Harper's Round Table.)

Most interesting of all South Florida fruits, because little cultivated, almost unknown outside of the tropics, and most highly appreciated when once introduced, is the alligator or aracado pear—the arguacate of Cuba. A very few alligator-pear trees are grown in sheltered spots of southern California; but South Florida, below latitude 26, is the only section of the United States where it can be cultivated on a large scale and as a profitable crop. Here it grows as luxuriantly and with as little care as the guava, though it requires a greater depth of soil. The tree is tall, slender, and covered with a dense foliage of dark glossy green, while the ripened fruit, also green in color, is smooth-skinned and as large as a mon's two fists. Inside is a great round stone or seed surrounded by a soft yellowish-green pulp, which, sprinkled with salt and eaten with a spoon, or made into a salad, is delicious beyond description. No one ever eats an alligator pear without wanting another, and the taste once acquired demands to be gratified regardless of expense. I have known fifty and even seventy-five cents apiece to be paid for these pears, and when I onde asked a Broadway dealer which was the most expensive fruit in his store, he promptly answered, "alligator pear."

Losing Flesh

You naturally lose flesh in the summer and running down is so easy. You get a little weaker each day without hardly noticing it. There is loss of appetite, headache, weakness of the muscles, disturbed sleep, weakness of memory, and these are the beginning of nervous prostration. Iron and tonics and bitters may afford some temporary relief, but what you need is a food for body, brain and nerves.

Scott's Emulsion

of Cod-liver Oil with the Hypophosphites, furnishes just the nourishment needed for those who are run down and pale and thin and weak. If you lose flesh in summer take Scott's Emulsion now. Don't wait till fall or winter before beginning.

Friday's Daily.

SURELY nothing like push ond enterprise, and intelligent effort, to make one's business a success. And there by hangs a tale, which we will now lay before our readers.

THREE or four weeks ago, first one member, then the other, of the firm of Bishop & Lackey, would pack up his grip and start for the city to get new goods, and suitable goods, seasonable goods, and everything to be ready for their great anniversary sale, that brought such a crowd one year ago. Last evening the goods were piled up in proper shape to be handy, pins were "stuck" into convenint cushions and extra oil applied to the gearings of the cash carriers to make them run glibly. At a late hour the employes retired to take a few hours rest before to-day's work began. And to-day opened early.

YES it opened early, very early, for here we have the good man who leads the family and gets up to build the fires as a man should. He is aroused before daylight this time, and it takes an effort to shake off his dreams.

EVEN the baby has to get up early and is soon left to take his chances while his mother gets ready to come to the store, and get some of those lovely bargains, after which she will return to her home in a happy mood.

BUGGIES bring some to town and others come on bicycles. One good looking girl from a few miles out of town, came in on her wheel, and was among the first to get to the bargain counter.

OH, WHAT lovely goods! What splendid bargains! And there are "oodles of 'em" waiting to buy, as the DAILY can assert after several visits to the store. One can hardly get about on account of the number of bargain hunters.

WHEN the two days rush is over the proprietor sits down to his desk and counts up the result. It is satisfactory, for though his profits are very small on each sale, the sales have been many, and he has added to the list of his customers and made many friends. And he has made many a heart glad and happy.

The sale has been greater than last year, although it did not appear so badly crowded as then. There were more than thirty clerks this year, and they waited on customers so easily, that no one had to wait. For this reason, the people got what they wanted, and then went away, giving place to others. The proprietors feel greatly gratified at the results of their efforts to suit the people.

Mrs. Shugers.

Thursday's Daily.

Mrs. Mary Townley Shugers, wife of John Shugers, died at her home south of town last evening, at 9:35. She has suffered severely of some internal disease for many years, and for two or three years has been confined to the house. Everything that gave a hope of relief was tried, and physicians called from distant places, but though now and then there seemed to be relief, it proved only temporary. For a long time now, all have realized there was no hope. The funeral will not be held till Sunday, at 10 a. m., as they wish distant relatives to be present. It will be at the home, conducted by Rev. F. C. Colvin of the Presbyterian church, interment at Evergreen. Mrs. Shugers was a most a amiable and worthy woman, who while health and strength remained, never failed in all her duties to her family and to all who had claims on her. The bereaved family have the sympathy of the community.

Very Near It.

Auburn people came very near having the now famous candidate for president, at the county teachers' institute last year. When Supt. Merica was corresponding with various lecture bureaus, with a view to making a selection of lecturers who would draw good houses, one western lecture bureau, wished to send him a very popular and eloquent lecturer named W. J. Bryan, of Nebraska. It was the same man, that everyone is now talking of, and half the people or more are going to vote for, to be our national chief magistrate. Had Mr. Merica known the chance he allowed to slip away, he would have jumped at the opportunity to get a lecturer who would prove a great card. Perhaps he could get him this year. If he could, we would be willing to guarantee the crowd.

Wet Season.

Thursday's Daily.

Pretty hard weather for wheat and oats for a week or so past. Since the heavy rain of yesterday very few fields are solid enough to allow a team to be put on them, much wheat is in the shock and liable to sprout; oats has been lodged or tangled so as as to be difficult to cut, and much will be wasted. Corn is growing rapidly; so are the weeds, for no plowing can be done. After four or five years of dry seasons, a wet season causes as much dissatisfaction as the dry ones. Yet a great deal of good will come of these heavy rains. The country has needed more water for some year.

BRYAN & WATSON.

The Populist National Convention in Session.

Wednesday's Daily.

Bulletins this afternoon begin at 1:11. Marion Butler, of North Carolina, temporary chairman, is now addressing the convention. Says democrats stole their platform. (Cheers.)

Convention at 2:15 takes recess until 8 o'clock this evening.

Thursday's Daily.

Our dispatches yesterday, stopped suddenly: when the conventions both adjourned. It appears, there had been trouble in the populist convention over the temporary chairman. It was a case like that at Chicago. The National committee had chosen Senator Butler while the more extreme delegates wanted to kick him out same as Hill was at Chicago. It was settled at last, and he was chosen. Gov. Stone of Missouri, made the address of welcome and Iguatius Donnelly, of Minnesota, responded. Several lady delegates were present being regularly elected from Colorado. Three colored delegates also had seats. Coxey was there too, and had with him his youngest child, named, "Legal Tender Coxey" and this child was passed around among the delegates. Congressman Howard, of Alabama, the man who wanted President Cleveland impeached by congress, made a better attack on the democrats, and favored a straight ticket. When they came in again at 8, it was found that no lighting had been provided, and after waiting some time they adjourned to 10 a. m. to-day, when the committee on credentials would be ready to report.

TO-DAY

The convention met this forenoon and called to order at 10-16. Committee on credentials not ready to report.

Roll call for committee on permanent organization.

Committee on permanent organization, rules and platform have been appointed and retired.

Ex. Gov. St. John concludes at 11:43.

Delegate from Oklahoma take platform and entertains with a song.

Delegate Geo. F. Gather, of Alabama introduces Mrs. Pennington, of Arkansas who sings populist song.

Afternoon session 3:31 convention called to order.

Partial report of committee on credentials now being read.

Credential committee recommends in Illinois contests both delegations be seated and given half vote each Minorty report will be submitted,

Patterson, of Colorado moves consider contests in alphabetical order. Motion being argued.

Patterson motion carried.

In Colorado Patterson delegation be seated.

Friday's Daily.

Thursday, evening the populists selected Senator Allen of Nebraska for permanent chairman. This showed that the Bryan faction had a majority, the vote was 758 to 564. He spoke about one hour. The convention favored ten minute speeches to-day, in making the nomination, and five minutes for seconding the same. A committee to confer with the silver republicans was appointed, and then they adjourned till this forenoon.

FRIDAY.

Chairman calls convention to order at 10:5. Gavel presented made of 66 pieces and 48 different kinds of wood, a kind for each state and territory. Texas refuses to choose a member to confer with silverites. The minority report wants vice-president named first.

Davis, of Texas, asks the people's party to part the waves of the Red Sea and let democrats walk over while the populists are swallowed up by the waves, No! No!

Mimms, of Tenn., Pettit, of Miss., Gibbs, of Texas, mentioned for vice-president.

Decide to limit speeches to 20 minutes, with five on vice-president. Want southern man for vice, agreed to by Indiana, California, and Kansas. Decide to vote on president first. Noise. Music plays.

As we go to press, Gen. Weaver has just finished reading the platform, which is long, and will be given tomorrow.

Saturday's Daily.

After we went to press last evening, the populists voted to change the order of nominating and choose a vice-president first, and the president afterwards. This was done to keep Sewall off the ticket. They did not like him because he was a wealthy man. So a vote was taken, and Tom. Watson, ex-congreessman from George was nominated on the first ballot. He is the man who invented the phrase. "Where am I at?" The meeting then adjourned till nine this forenoon.

SATURDAY.

The convention was called to order at 9:37 and there was a call of states to choose the national committee. Gen. Weaver then spoke in favor of endorsing Bryan. He was wildly cheered. Gen. Fields of Virginia asks to have it made unanimous. Roll call was interrupted by confusion. Debs sent telegram not to present his name. Many states seconded nomination of Bryan.

Mrs. Lease of Kansas seconded the nomination of Bryan, so did Donelly of Minnesota after refusing to run himself. Only a part of the delegations of Maine and New York favored Bryan

Someone had nominated Coxey, but his name was withdrawn. Texas is still firm "middle of road" and refuses to favor Bryan unless he agrees to stand on a populist platform.

At 4 p. m. the first ballot was finished and Bryan was nominated by an almost unanimous vote. Texas gave 103 votes for Norton. So, the populist ticket stands: Bryan and Watson.

Off To Camp

The Auburn Rifles Depart For The Encampment.

Saturday's Daily.

At 3:10 this afternoon the Auburn Rifles departed for Indianapolis where they will go into camp for one week at Fairview Park. The Waterloo and Angola companies were also on the same train. At Fort Wayne they will be joined by the artilery and two companies of militia of that city and leave there by a special train, stopping at Decatur and Bluffton for companies.

There will be about 2,400 soldiers in camp this year. The program for Sunday will begin with morning reveille. At 4 p. m. there will be school of review after which will follow the regimental Dress Parade. The DAILY will contain specials from the camp each evening.

The company made a gallant show as they marched to the train headed by the Trumpet Note Band and a great crowd of citizens of all ages and degrees gathered at the station to see them off. A noticeable feature of the march was a body of twelve veterans of the former enlistments who marched up the street ahead of them. Auburn is proud of Co. K.

Grown Wheat

City Clerk Husselman, employed in the Zimmerman factory office went out over into Brandon's fields near the factory yesterday, and picked up some wheat heads which he examined and then sent to this office. They are badly grown, the sprouts being two or three inches long, and showing bright green leaves. Those lying on the ground, show root fibers nearly as long as the sprouts. We have no doubt but serious damage has been done.

Marvelous Results.

From a letter written by Rev. J. Gunderman, of Dimondale, Mich., we are permitted to make this extract; "I have no hesitation in recommending Dr King's New Discovery as the results were almost marvelous in the case of my wife While I was pastor of the Baptist church at Rices Junction she was brought down with pneumonia succeeding lagrippe. Terrible paroxysms of coughing would last hours with little interuption and it seemed as if she could not survive them. A friend recommended Dr. King's New Discovery; it was quick in working and highly satisfactory in results." Trial bottle free at Robbins & McCord's drug store Regular size 50c and $1:00.

In One or Two Days.

In the vicinity of Boquet, Westmoreland county, Pa., almost any one can tell you how to cure a lame back or stiff neck. They dampen a piece of flannel with Chamberlain's Pain Balm and bind it on the affected parts and in one or two days the trouble has disapperred. This same treatment will promptly cure a pain in the side or chest. Mr. E. M. The Free Silver Republicans in Convention

Wednesday's Daily.

This body met in the Academy of Music Hall, while the populists met in the big convention hall in which the republicans recently met.

The free silver people met at noon, and decided to appoint a committee of seven to confer with the populists. Congressman Newlands, of Nevada was temporary chairman. He referred to Bryan and said, "We must accept the brilliant leader of the democracy, and march with him to victory. (Cheers)

Calling roll of states for committee on credentials.

Young lady costumed as Goddess of Liberty reading Declaration of Independence. (Great cheers.)

Selecting committees for permanent organization.

Chairman reads telegram from Senator Teller saying that a vote for Bryan and Sewall is a vote for the monetary independence of America. (Great cheers.)

Motion made to adjourn until 8 p. m.

Much opposition to adjournment manifested. Delegates speaking against it. (Confusion.)

Convention adjourned until 4:30 p. m.

Thursday's Daily.

The siver republicans who met in Music Hall, were nearly all in favor of endorsing Bryan and Sewall. Newland, the temporary chairman, made a speech in favor of this, and of the coinage of greater amounts of silver. He says we now have $22 to $25 per capita in money, but as the population increases two millions a year, we should coin about 50 millions of silver a year, to keep up this per capita. He thinks we might even go higher than that. When they met again at 4:30. Wm. P. St. John of New York was made permanent chairman, and made a speech. He believed, though he is a banker, that the evils feared by some, would not result from free coinage of silver. He believed it to be the interest of even the bankers, to have free coinage, because bankers were suffering from low values, as well as other people were. A farmer has to take low prices now, and a banker has to accept a low rate of interest or do no business. He did not believe it would drive gold away. Gold is now largely out of circulation, being held by banks as a reserve for the benefit of their depositors, and 100 millions of it had to be kept on hand by government to redeem greenbacks and similar notes. It had been predicted that the large coinage of silver under the Bland act would drive out gold. But it did not for during the twelve, years that law was in force, we gained 221 millions in gold brought from abroad. He made the most argumentive speech so far recorded, in favor of his view of the financial question. After appointing a committee to confer, with the populists, they adjourned till ten to-day.

TO-DAY

Convention met this forenoon and called to order at 10:30. Committee on credentials had reported last night.

Delegates late in coming in committee selected to confer with the populists are caucausing back of the chairman's desk.

Appoint a committee on ways and means.

Town of Minnesota speaking is interrupted by cheers.

Mention of Teller's name greeted with cheers by the convention in a body. Also Bryan's name. He says Bryan represents the cause of humanity against injustice. Speech concluded at 11-14.

Gov. St. John, of Kansas called amid loud cheering.

Mrs. Helen Gougar, of Indiana, addresses the convention, concluding at 12:12.

Band plays "My Country 'tis of Thee." Audience rises and sings.

Judge Sheldon, of Connecticut, addresses convention.

Credential committee will not be ready to report until 3 o'clock. Motion to adjourn to that hour defeated.

Hon. F. A. Cole, of Wisconsin, addressing convention.

Cole interrupted. Chair raps for order; says must be heard. Great confusion. Cole resumes and conludes.

Convention takes a recess until 2:30 p. m.

Afternoon session of convention called to order by chairman St. John.

S. L. Chaffee, of Minnesota, addressing convention

Chaffee finishes. Mr. Towne takes the gavel.

C. D. Lane, of California, requested to speak five minutes on gold.

Lane's speech well received. He concludes.

Friday's Daily.

Thursday evening this body did but little except listen to speeches for an hour or two, and then adjourn till this forenoon.

The silver convention met at 10:46. Roll call showed 196 union veterans, 18 confederate soldiers, and 4 Mexican War Veterans among the delegates. Will consider the platform at 3 p. m. and adjourned to that hour.

Saturday's Daily.

The Silver republican convention had but little to do at the time we went to press last evening. They made short work of it. A resolution was introduced endorsing Bryan and another endorsing Sewall, and both were adopted unanimously. At 6:31 they adjourned sine die, "for good." That ends the work of the free silver repulican national convention at St. Louis. They will go home, put their states in order and support the democratic ticket.

Dr. Edwards Weds.

Dr. Edwards, the dentist is now in the fortunate list of benedicts. Last evening, he organized a neat little wedding party at his home, Mrs. Askew's residence on West Seventh, and then and there, assisted by Rev. F. C. Colvin, he was united in marriage to Miss Ella Hodson. The bride's home is at Leesburg, Ohio. Her brother, J. W. Hodson, who is in business at Dayton, Ohio, accompanied her to Auburn and witnessed the ceremony. The Doctor had his house nicely fitted up and all ready for a comfortable home, and it was their desire to be married in their own home. Several of the Doctor's young friends, were invited to witness the ceremony. They were J. P. Crimmins, Ed. Smith, D. M. Link, Jennie Askew, Lila Baker, Miss Rollins, Blanche Shilling, Gertie Wilson and Margaret Ford. Mr. Hodson returns to-day or to-morrow to his home. The Doctor and his young wife should be made welcome to Auburn, and the young wife especially, should be made to feel that her lot is cast among friends and neighbors, not strangers. And the COURIER congratulates the Doctor on his good taste as well as good fortune, and hopes the lines of both may be cast in pleasant places.

Rheumatics

If Lafe Miller enjoys one thing more than another it is a practical joke. A. Lewis and he are conveniently situated for such purposes and Lewis takes kindly to a little fun, himself. Mr. Lewis has for some years been troubled more or less with rheumatism, which especially affected his legs and feet. And it was always worse just before a storm. The other day he was at his lumber office near the Lake Shore grain depot, when he felt the old pains coming on in his toes. He pulled off his shoe to rest his foot awhile, and Miller happening in at the proper time got hold of the shoe and pushed some waste paper down into the toe of it, but in such a way it would not be seen. Lewis soon after went to put on his shoe and finding his toe would not go down to its proper place, became convinced he was having a bad attack and that his toes had swelled up as bad as they did a few years ago, so he pulled the shoe off and felt discouraged. He waited for the swelling to abate but the difficulty in making his toes go to the proper place continued. In the meantime Lew Spangler came in and wanted some lumber. Now this is very thing Mr. Lewis stays there for, to sell people good lumber at a reasonable price, and it nearly broke his heart to have to tell so good a customer that owing to a sudden swelling of his rheumatic toes, he could not get out of the office. Then he discovered the paper in the toe of his shoe. The swelling was at once reduced as suddenly as it came and he resumed business again as actively as ever. He soon sought Miller and they had a good laugh over it. But he still insists that Miller's way of telling the story is "way off." But there is enough fact left for a good joke,

CASTORIA

for Infants and Children.

MOTHERS, Do You Know that Paregoric, Bateman's Drops, Godfrey's Cordial, many so-called Soothing Syrups, and most remedies for children are composed of opium or morphine?

Do You Know that opium and morphine are stupefying narcotic poisons?

Do You Know that in most countries druggists are not permitted to sell narcotics without labeling them poisons?

Do You Know that you should not permit any medicine to be given your child unless you or your physician know of what it is composed?

Do You Know that Castoria is a purely vegetable preparation, and that a list of its ingredients is published with every bottle?

Do You Know that Castoria is the prescription of the famous Dr. Samuel Pitcher. That it has been in use for nearly thirty years, and that more Castoria is now sold than of all other remedies for children combined?

Do You Know that the Patent Office Department of the United States, and of other countries, have issued exclusive right to Dr. Pitcher and his assigns to use the word "Castoria" and its formula, and that to imitate them is a state prison offense?

Do You Know that one of the reasons for granting this government protection was because Castoria had been proven to be absolutely harmless?

Do You Know that 35 average doses of Castoria are furnished for 35 cents, or one cent a dose?

Do You Know that when possessed of this perfect preparation, your children may be kept well, and that you may have unbroken rest?

Well, these things are worth knowing. They are facts.

The fac-simile signature of Chas. H. Fletcher is on every wrapper.

THE NEWS RECORD.

SUMMARY OF A WEEK'S HAPPENINGS.

The Latest News as Flashed Over the Wires from All Parts of the World—Regarding Politics, Religion, Casualties, Commerce, and Industry.

THE POPULISTS.

Tom Watson of Georgia, Nominated for Vice President.

St. Louis special: The People's Party Convention, on the third day of its session, got down to solid work. It turned down the Committee on Rules by a decisive vote, and gave the nomination for Vice President precedence over that of President, so as to force the selection of a Southern Populist in place of Sewall, whose record was strongly attacked by members of the Maine delegation. Hon. Thomas E. Watson of Georgia, was nominated for Vice President on the first ballot and the convention adjourned till Saturday. Bryan refused to accept a nomination for President that does not include his running mate, Mr. Sewall.

POOR HOUSE FIRE

Insane Lida Stevenson Applied the Torch.

The east wing of the County Asylum, generally known as the Poor House, at Indianapolis, was almost totally destroyed by fire. The fire started in the attic and was the result of the prank of an insane woman.

Lida Stevenson, an inmate from Indianapolis, had been unruly of late and had been kept in the attic, apart from other insane patients. The matron ordered her sent down stairs, thinking she had become quiet. Before she left the attic she applied a match to her straw bed. The flames soon spread and in a few minutes the entire attic was ablaze. The inmates were hastily removed to a place of safety and the fire apparatus of the institution was put in operation. Before the flames could be subdued the entire south wing was destroyed, causing a loss of about $18,000.

FEARFUL TRAGEDY.

Husband and Wife Have a Shooting Match.

Six shots were heard at the residence of W. M. T. Willy, ladies' tailor and furrier, on West Fifth street, Cincinnati, Ohio. When Willy's room was entered, Mrs. Willy was found bleeding from five bullet wounds, and her husband unconscious with a bullet hole in his right temple. The woman died on the way to the hospital. Willy's wound was superficial, the ball glancing off the skull. They have had frequent quarrels and were separated, but began to live together again about three months ago. Willy says his wife shot him and he then seized the revolver and fired at her. He came from Louisville about nineteen years ago.

Two Candidates Die.

A telegram from Petersburg, Ind., says: Two candidates for office in this county on the Republican ticket are dead, one from natural causes and the other by accident. Benjamin Taswell, candidate for County Coroner and a popular and highly respected citizen, died from consumption, aged 53 years. John Demotte, candidate for Sheriff, was hauling logs to a mill and the log on which he was sitting slipped and threw him under the wheels of the wagon, one of which passed over his chest, crushing it in a terrible manner. He died almost immediately. He leaves a widow and child.

Dies at the Age of 117 Years.

Homer (Mich.) special: Dina Smith, supposed to be one of the oldest inhabitants of the United States, and well known to all the old residents of Calhoun County, died the other day at the age of 117 years. She was born near New Haven, Conn., in 1779. She lived to take care of the children of three generations, only two of whom are now living.

From Bench to Prison.

It was discovered the other day that James Blue, one of the batch of fifty-two prisoners received at the penitentiary in Columbus, Ohio, from the South, was at one time a Territorial Judge in Indian Territory. He was convicted of getting $2 from an old soldier under pretense that he was a U. S. officer and could obtain him a pension.

Great Attractions at Robinson Park.

During the month of August the attractions at Robinson Park, Fort Wayne, will be the best of the season. The infant prodigy, Gertie Cochran, the Ancollette Brothers, aerialists, and others equally as noted. The Park management furnish these entertainments free.

Fortune Left to an Invalid.

Mrs. A. Adams of Coloma, Mich., has fallen heir to $50,000 from an uncle who died in Europe a year ago. She received a check on the First National Bank for the amount. She is an invalid and almost destitute.

Fighting in Crete.

Athens special: There has been continuous fighting in Crete during the last few days. The Turks have been trying to capture the heights on the Kissamo-Selino road. If they could capture this position they would cut off the western portion of Crete from the rest of the island. A letter received here from the front states that in the course of the fighting the Turks lost 200 killed and 600 wounded. The Cretan loss was twenty-six killed and sixty wounded. The deputies absolutely refuse to meet until they receive a reply to their propositions from the Sultan.

Anti-Saloon League Lost.

The first case brought to trial by the Muskingum County Anti-Saloon League for violation of the Sunday selling ordinance was dismissed in the Mayor's Court in Zanesville, Ohio, upon the State's evidence. The saloonist on trial was Frank Rice, and there yet remains about twenty other cases to be tried.

Killed His Three Children.

George Swain, a farmer, about forty-five years old, living near Attica, Mich., killed his three small children, set fire to the house and then blew his own brains out. His wife died a short time ago, and it is thought that this deranged his mind.

STONED SOLDIERS.

Brown Hoisting Works Strikers Become Lawless.

Another shooting affray took place at the Brown Hoisting Works Wednesday, caused by strikers or their sympathizers throwing bricks and stones at soldiers from behind dark places of concealment. One picket was hit and knocked down. Getting up he discharged a shot in the yard from where the brick came. On hearing the report several soldiers came to his assistance and a volley of lead was sent in the direction from which the missiles had come. It is not known whether any one was struck. The order has been given by the authorities to arrest any person who yells "scab" at either the non-union men or soldiers. Two strikers who had been indulging in this diversion attempted to escape arrest by jumping on a fast moving motor car. The motorman upon refusing to stop when ordered to do so by the soldiers received serious bayonet wounds.

USED AN AX.

Murderous Deed of Etta Robbins at Huntington, W. Va.

A. J. Call and Nettie Call, his daughter, were killed in a shanty boat, six miles east of Huntington, W. Va. Lottie Call will also die and several small children are at the point of death.

Etta Robins is in jail accused of the murder of all of them, using as a weapon a double-bit axe.

Call and daughter, who are dead, have their heads severed, and all the children are slashed in a horrible manner. One woman leaped into the river and saved her life. The greatest excitement prevails. No cause is assigned for the deed.

Boon to Weary Boarders.

Dr. S. A. Hageman of Cincinnati, Ohio, has applied for a patent on an invention which promises to create a sensation among musicians. It is a mechanism to be applied to the piano for the purpose of correcting the false tones of that instrument, which have hitherto been regarded as a necessary evil. The invention makes the piano as true as the violin and it accomplishes the result by a sort of mechanical fingering similar to the human fingering on the violin. Competent musicians say the problem has been successfully solved. The inventor is a half brother of the late Prof. Swing of Chicago.

To Make War on Desperadoes.

Pomeroy (O.) special: Meigs and Gallia Counties are being overrun by organized highwaymen, burglars and incendiaries. There are twenty-seven in the gang. Both counties are terrorized and the officers are powerless to capture them. People are held up and nightly robbed and beaten. Judge H. A. Kent's barn and stock have been burned. Five hundred men in Middleport have armed by permission of the authorities to protect themselves. Both counties are ready to rise up for a wholesale killing of the robbers.

Ate Toadstools and Two Are Dead.

A bad case of poisoning caused by eating toadstools is reported from York Township, east of Fremont, Ohio. Mr. and Mrs. Henry Schwant partook of the poisonous fungus thinking they were mushrooms. Mrs. Schwant and her husband are dead. Mr. and Mrs. I. Musser and their son, G. T. Musser and wife, and their hired man, John Long, partook freely of the supposed mushrooms and it is thought the first named couple will die.

A Monster Flow of Gas.

Montpelier (Ind.) special: What is said to be the largest flow of gas yet discovered in the oil field was drilled in at Five Points, three miles from the city. The flow is estimated at 5,000,000 cubic feet a day and the derrick is enveloped in a blue mist. The well was put down to sand by the Golden Rule Oil Company, but it is said the lease expired before completion and the well passed into the hands of the drillers.

Not Man and Wife.

The couple who deliberately lay down on the track near Lawrenceburg, Ky., and were cut to pieces by two trains, were not man and wife. Word from London, Ky., a few days ago, is to the effect that they are Joseph Hopper and his niece, Lottie Johnson. They left London a week ago. Why they committed suicide at all, and especially in this tragic way, is still a deep mystery.

Insane Over Politics.

James Taylor, a well-to-do resident of Greenville, Mich., has become insane over politics. Mr. Taylor is an ardent Republican, and when McKinley was nominated at St. Louis he became so enthusiastic he could talk of nothing else, and it was evident his mind was becoming unbalanced. A few days ago he became dangerous, and was committed to an asylum.

The Women Heard From.

The Women's Club, of Muncie, Ind., composed of the Swell set, have passed a set of resolutions condemning merchants who disfigure fences and telephone poles with advertisements and will take steps to stop it, together with the posting of immoral pictures of women on show billboards.

Committed Suicide.

Mr. J. P. Tolfee, who was Grover Cleveland's Secretary while he was Mayor of Buffalo, committed suicide at Mojave, Cal., by drinking carbolic acid. It is supposed he was temporarily insane.

THIRD PARTY MEETS

PROCEEDINGS OF THE POPULIST NATIONAL CONVENTION.

Senator Butler Is Chosen Temporary Chairman—Gov. Stone Delivers Welcoming Address—Delegates Manifest Enthusiasm in Spite of the Heat.

Opening Session.

The national convention of the People's party was called to order in St. Louis shortly after noon Wednesday by Chairman Taubeneck of the national committee.

The hall in which the Populists met was the same in which the national Republican convention was held last month. There were the same arrangements as to seats. The State delegations were located in the pit, each marked by a guidon. The galleries reared themselves above the pit on all sides. The platform in front was flanked by the press benches. The decorations were not elaborate and were practically the same as those of the Republican convention. The delegates began to come in before 10 o'clock, but the spectators were slow in arriving.

Among the first to arrive were the Kansas delegation, with long, yellow ribbons on their breasts and many of them with sunflowers in their lapels. Ignatius Donnelly of Minnesota, short and round, with his small blue eyes a-twinkle and his good-natured face beaming, came in early and talked awhile with Sergeant-at-Arms McDowell, who stood on the platform, silver baton in hand, surveying the final arrangements. Congressman Howard of Alabama, who wrote "If Christ Came to Congress," was a striking figure in his delegation. He is tall, powerfully built, with a swarthy complexion and long, straight black hair that gives him almost the appearance of an Indian. "Buffalo" Jones of Oklahoma sat with his delegation stolidly reading a newspaper. Here and there was a dark face. There was one colored delegate each from Colorado and Georgia. Gen. Coxey of the famous commonweal army and his son-in-law, Carl Browne, came in together.

PERMANENT CHAIRMAN ALLEN.

As the air in the hall grew oppressive the delegates did not hesitate to shed their coats. There were several woman delegates on the floor, among them Mrs. J. O. A. Bush of Prescott, Ariz.; Mrs. Jennie B. Atherhold and Mrs. Iles of Colorado.

Senator Allen received the first personal ovation. The Texas delegation grew demonstrative. A woman posed with a "middle-of-the-road" streamer pinned to her gown and they cheered wildly. She waved her handkerchief frantically in response and the enthusiastic Texans crowded about to shake her hand. She proved to be a Mrs. Jones of Chicago.

The day for the opening of the two national conventions broke clear and bright—in striking contrast to the dark and dripping skies which stretched a shadow over the preliminary days of the conventions. The Populist crowds were abroad early. The crowds in the corridors of the hotels where the delegates' headquarters were located were dense and noisy, but there was a striking absence of the brass bands which at the conventions of the old parties jarred the air with their clash and clamor.

Before 10 o'clock the crowds and delegates began moving in steady streams toward the convention hall. Bryan and the "middle-of-the-road" factions were both girded for the fray, and both claimed the victory. The first test of strength was eagerly looked forward to.

Welcomed by Governor Stone.

It was just 12:37 when Chairman Taubeneck called the delegates to order. Rev. R. Hill Smith invoked the divine blessing, after which Gov. Stone was introduced, who, as the chief executive of Missouri, and not as a member of the Democratic national committee, made an address welcoming the People's party to St. Louis. Gov. Stone only hinted at the past differences of opinion between the Democrats and Populists, and hoped that in the future they would unite for the welfare of the country. This allusion to a Bryan indorsement set the Nebraskan's friends on the floor to cheering.

Ignatius Donnelly replied to the Governor's address in behalf of the convention. Mr. Donnelly made a "middle-of-the-road" speech, in which he mentioned the names of Lincoln, Jackson, Washington and Jefferson, thereby arousing enthusiasm. He paid an earnest tribute to the People's party, and, in brief, detailed its doctrines, which, he claimed, seek to array the people against those who would seek to deprive them of their rights. Mary Ellen Lease came into the hall as Mr. Donnelly finished his address and was greeted with cheers. She was invited to a seat on the platform.

SERGEANT-AT-ARMS M'DOWELL.

HERMAN E. TAUBENECK.

Chairman Taubeneck announced that the national committee had named Senator Marion Butler of North Carolina by acclamation for temporary chairman. The fight which was expected on Butler's selection did not materialize. Somebody on the platform proposed three cheers for the new chairman, and they were given with a will.

Senator Butler's speech was long and his voice was not capable of penetrating the vastness of the auditorium. The delegates wanted to hear what he said, however, and regardless of the protests of the sergeant-at-arms and his assistants, ran into the aisles and crowded around the platform. The Senator closed with an ardent appeal to the convention to stand together, no matter what might be the result of its deliberations.

THE NATIONAL CONVENTION OF THE PEOPLE'S PARTY IN SESSION.

The only routine business transacted by the convention was the formation of the usual committee, after which an adjournment was taken until 8 o'clock. A sort of free-for-all meeting was held after the convention proper had adjourned, at which many men prominent in the party voiced their views. The meeting lasted for nearly three hours.

No Night Session.

The attempt of the convention to hold a night session was a failure. Through somebody's omission no provision was made for lighting the hall, and when the delegates and spectators assembled there the interior of the big auditorium was dark. The telegraph companies sent for a supply of tallow candles, with which they lighted the tables of their operators. They also furnished candles to the newspaper correspondents, and the flickering lights burning in the two press sections were the only illuminations in the hall. They served to throw fantastic shadows across the floor where the delegates were assembled, but were not strong enough to enable the convention to proceed with business. Chairman Butler arrived long after 8 o'clock, and announced that as no arrangement could at that late hour be made for light, the convention would adjourn until 10 o'clock Thursday morning.

THURSDAY.

At 10:12 the convention was called to order and at 12:42 took a recess till 3 o'clock. Shortly before 10 o'clock Senators Stewart of Nevada and Kyle of North Dakota joined Senator Allen and Gen. Field of Virginia on the platform. The tall form of "Cyclone" Davis of Texas could be seen on the floor, towering above the delegates. "Stump" Ashby of the South State, held forth from a rostrum composed of a chair. At 10:05 Senator Butler, the handsome temporary chairman, appeared on the platform. Simultaneously the band struck up "Dixie," and the delegates uncorked some of their pent-up enthusiasm. Five minutes later Chairman Butler called the convention to order and the Rev. Mr. Smith offered the invocation.

The report of the committee on credentials was called for, but no one responded, and the States were called for members of the committees on permanent organization and resolutions.

SERGEANT-AT-ARMS M'DOWELL.

There were at times long delays and the delegates grew perceptibly impatient. The middle-of-the-roaders were extremely suspicious. They intimated that it was part of the plot to defeat them.

A Dramatic Outburst.

After the announcement of the committee on permanent organization the members retired. While other announcements were being made a middle-of-the-road man attempted a demonstration. It was dramatically arranged. A squad of middle-of-the-roaders suddenly plunged into the hall through the main entrance and came whooping down the center aisle. Delegate Branch bore aloft a big white banner with the inscription: "Middle-of-the road—a straight ticket." The Texas, Georgia, Maine, Missouri and Mississippi delegations mounted their chairs and yelled. At the same time a middle-of-the-road delegate stationed in the gallery over the platform hurled out through the air about a peck of small green tickets, which broke and fell like a cloud of stage snow over the pit. The green tickets contained the following financial plank:

"We demand a national treasury note issued by the general government receivable for all public dues and a full legal tender in payment of all debts, public and private, and loaned direct to the people through postal and other governmental banks at cost, for the benefit of the people, and the purchase and coinage of such amount of gold and silver bullion, at the ratio of 16 to 1, as may be necessary to pay the debts of the Government which are made payable in coin. We demand that the volume of money shall speedily increase to an amount necessary to transact the business of the country on a cash basis."

There was a ripple of applause and a few shouts when the name of Jacob S. Coxey was announced as a member of the committee on platform from Ohio. There were also demonstrations for Gov. Holcomb of Nebraska, Gen. Weaver of Iowa and ex-Gov. Lewelling of Kansas when their names were shouted out.

Afternoon Session.

It was half an hour after the chairman had called the convention to order for the afternoon session when the committee on credentials reported. When the matter of contests had been settled New York called for the report of the committee on permanent organization. Some of the delegates wanted to adjourn until 8 o'clock, but the anti-Bryan people objected.

Senator W. V. Allen of Nebraska was named for permanent chairman by the majority of the committee on permanent organization. This was a straight out-and-out Bryan recommendation, and the Bryan delegates stood on chairs and waved hats and handkerchiefs. Then the minority report was made. It recommended James E. Campion of Maine as the permanent chairman. With a whoop and a yell Texas' 103 delegates jumped up and Georgia followed, and soon the "middle-of-the-road" and anti-Bryan demonstration was in full blast. On motion the previous question on the adoption of the majority report was ordered. The call of States began in the midst of great confusion. Before it was finished darkness set in and after losing a quarter of an hour the electric lights were turned on and the roll call proceeded. Many of the States had their votes challenged, and each side watched the other closely.

The vote as announced was 758 for Allen and 564 for Campion, indicating a majority for Bryan. Instantly the convention became a mob of howling, shrieking, yelling, cheering men. The spontaneous outburst of Bryan enthusiasm put the previous anti-Bryan demonstration in the shade.

TEMPORARY CHAIRMAN BUTLER.

Colorado pulled its standard out of the socket and started the march around. State after State fell into line, until twenty-five States were in the procession. The excitement grew wilder and wilder every minute, men pulled off their coats and waved them frantically. Hats were thrown to the rafters and men tramped down the aisles with other men on their shoulders. The procession paraded all over the floor, and at last surrounded the Texas delegation, whose members sat silent, looking out of sullen eyes.

The "middle-of-the-road" men were game, however, for one of them carried a banner to the front, and Texas, Arkansas, Tennessee and Ohio sent their standards to re-enforce it. The excitement reached its height at this point, and several personal encounters took place. At last, after a quarter of an hour of almost riotous enthusiasm, the delegates calmed down and Senator Allen was brought to the platform. When Senator Allen appeared the Bryan men gave him three hearty cheers. He was introduced by "Cyclone" Davis and addressed the convention in a speech of considerable length. It was nearly 10 o'clock when the Senator concluded, and shortly after the convention adjourned until the following morning.

THE SILVER PARTY.

White Metal Men Hold a Convention of Their Own in St. Louis.

The delegates to the national silver convention in St. Louis were slow in assembling at the Grand Music Hall Wednesday, and there were not enough visitors to fill the galleries when J. J. Mott, chairman of the national committee, called the convention to order. He, too, was tardy, and it was long after 12 o'clock when he stepped to the platform and rapped for order. It was not surprising that the delegates, the visitors, and the chairman should have been slow in coming together. The weather was intensely hot. It was of that variety of heat that one finds in the steam room at a Turkish bath.

The hall had been attractively draped with flags and bunting, but the atmosphere was so close and hot that it was almost suffocating. When Chairman Mott came forward to call the convention to order the delegates for the moment ceased the use of fans and roused from the torpor caused by the awful heat and indulged in enthusiastic cheering. Prayer was offered, after which Miss Lillie B. Pierce, of St. Louis, read the declaration of independence. This caused another outburst of applause.

When the call for the convention had been read, Congressman Francis G. Newlands, of Nevada, was introduced by Chairman Mott as temporary chairman of the convention, and the delegates gave him a vigorous reception. In his speech he urged the silverites to support the nominee of the Democratic party.

PERMANENT CHAIRMAN W. P. ST. JOHN.

"The Democratic party," Mr. Newlands said, "has declared for the free and unlimited coinage of silver at a ratio of 16 to 1 without waiting for international action. Whilst it has made other declarations in its platform, it has announced that the silver question is the paramount issue of the day, and that to it all other questions are to be subordinated. It has nominated a candidate of unimpeachable character, of exalted ability, of inflexible integrity, of high purpose, who has never faltered for a moment in his devotion to the cause of bimetallism. Firm, but not headstrong; confident, but not self-sufficient; near to the people, but not demagogic; determined for reform, yet without a single incendiary speech or passionate utterance to mar his record; possessing a happy combination of the oratorical and logical qualities; young, courageous, and enthusiastic, yet deliberate and wise, he stands as the ideal candidate for a movement which, though termed a movement for reform, really means a return to the wise conservatism of our fathers."

Wm. P. St. John, of New York, was chosen for permanent chairman, and when escorted to the platform addressed the convention. What he said was quite in accord with the sentiments of the assemblage and he got several salvos of applause.

The platform declares in favor of a distinctly American financial system, opposes the single gold standard and demands the immediate return to the constitutional standard of gold and silver by the restoration by this Government, independently of any foreign power, of the unrestricted coinage of both gold and silver into standard money, at the ratio of 16 to1, and upon terms of exact equality, as they existed prior to 1873; the silver coin to be a full legal tender equally with gold for all debts and dues, public and private, and we favor such legislation as will prevent for the future the demonetization of any kind of legal tender money by private contract. It holds that the power to control and regulate a paper currency is inseparable from the power to coin money, and hence that all currency intended to circulate as money should be issued and its volume controlled by the general government only, and should be a legal tender. The declaration unalterably opposes the issue by the United States of interest-bearing bonds in time of peace, and appeals to the people of the United States to leave in abeyance for the moment all other questions, and unite in one supreme effort to free themselves and their children from the domination of the money power.

THURSDAY.

The delegates began to assemble at 9:30 o'clock, but it was long after 10 o'clock when the convention was called to order.

Chairman St. John said he was sorry to be compelled to announce that the Rev. Dr. Niccolls, who was to open the convention with prayer, had been called from the city.

MISS. LILLIE B. PIERCE.

Congressman Newlands moved that a committee on ways and means be appointed to raise funds with which to defray the expenses of the convention.

Charles A. Towne, vice-chairman, was then introduced. He said that the press of the country had apparently forgotten its sacred duty and had become the pliant tool of monopoly. Money was the god it worshiped.

The single gold standard, he said, would ruin the masses of the people.

Refers to Heroism of Teller.

The speaker referred to the bolt of Senator Teller from the Republican convention and spoke of the "heroism and patriotism" of the Colorado Senator, to the delight of the delegates. Next he referred to the nomination of Mr. Bryan, who, he said, was born the year of the election of Lincoln. He then eulogized the Democratic candidate in glowing terms. This evoked the biggest demonstration which has thus far characterized the convention. The speaker next explained the free silver question and declared hard times would vanish when free silver appeared.

There was loud and uproarious cheering by the delegates when Mr. Towne ended.

Ex-Gov. St. John Speaks.

Ex-Gov. John P. St. John was greeted with cheers. He told how corn was worth 10 cents a bushel, oats 8 cents (in Kansas) and potatoes 6 cents a bushel in Minnesota. This was one of the reasons so many farmers believed in free silver. A few months ago, nearly every one believed nothing on earth could defeat William McKinley for President. But the surrender of American interests to Great Britain at the Republican convention had fallen upon McKinley like a bolt of lightning. It changed the sentiment of the whole country. Free silver, at 16 to 1, would sweep the nation. The people had arisen, and would defeat "the corrupt gold power." But to do this a vast deal of missionary work must be done.

The cry was that if free silver were adopted it would make this country the dumping ground for the silver of the world. The speaker hoped it would. If all the silver in the world were dumped in this country and coined it would make $60 per capita, and that was not too much. Should this be done, it would make this the most prosperous country of the world.

Report comes from Pike County, Ky., that in a fight between a party of revenue men under command of Kid Greer, of Floyd County and moonshiners on Elkhorn creek, three of the raiding party and two of the shiners were shot, though how badly is not known.

Minor State Items.

Only fourteen in Cass County in a class of fifty-five, passed the teachers' examination.

Prof. Robert L. Sackett and Miss Marie Coggeshall, both instructors in Earlham College, Richmond, have been married.

While frogging near Shelbyville, Ira Snyder was fatally shot by the accidental discharge of a revolver. He fell into the river and was drowning when pulled out.

David L. Barker, an old-time Cincinnati policeman, and for the past thirty years the Enquirer agent at Deputy, was stricken with apoplexy, and his recovery is doubtful.

The Giles Clough Glass Company of Redkey, has a large force of men at work putting in new machinery and material. These improvements will cost about $20,000 and make the plant a fine one. When the next fire goes in 400 men will be employed.

While a swarm of bees was being cut from a limb at the home of George Paxton, of Muncie, the limb fell upon Mrs. Paxton, and the bees covered her head and shoulders, stinging her on the mouth, ears and eyes, in all, in more than five hundred places. She will recover.

Edward Champion was placed in jail in Anderson charged with having three wives living. He was married to Margaret Wilson in that city recently. The father of the girl later found Champion had wives in Michigan and Wisconsin. Both of them will be taken there to prosecute him.

H. D. Smith of Rockville, one time a wealthy coal operator at Brazil and Terre Haute, committed suicide by shooting himself through the head with a revolver, death ensuing in sixty minutes. For two years he has operated a mine in Rockville. He was 70 years old. Suffering on account of grip is assigned as the cause of the suicide.

The old saying that lightning never strikes twice in the same place is disproved. The barn of C. M. Randolph, in Taylor Township, near Kokomo, was struck by lightning during a storm. In the last dozen years seven barns on this spot have been destroyed by lightning and the fires following. Mr. Randolph will rebuild the barn in a new location.

During a heavy storm at Guyer, southeast of Lima, lightning struck the barn of P. E. Richie. Richie and Joseph Lintner were in the barn. Lintner was knocked senseless, remaining unconscious for an hour, and is still in a serious condition. Richie was also shocked and a horse killed. The lightning ran in a dozen different directions, and completely wrecked the building.

Mr. S. C. Cowgill of Summitville, one of the wealthiest manufacturers of Madison County, left Anderson for New York City, where he will sail for England. He took with him three high-grade bicycles and will meet his son, Macey, and daughter, Miss Mary, who are now in London. The three will then wheel over much of the British Isles, and will then invade the Continent. They expect to spend three months in Europe on their wheels.

Fred Henry of Columbus, Ohio, fireman on Passenger Train No. 6, on the Indianapolis Division of the Pennsylvania, met with a serious accident. While looking out of the cab he was struck by a mail crane, which knocked him to the ground with great force. The engineer supposed Harry was out oiling the engine and went quite a distance before missing him. The train was backed to where the injured man lay and he was taken to Richmond and then on to his home.

Will Moore, aged 35, a baker of Wabash, shot Mrs. Lum Hong, the Caucasian wife of a Chinaman of that city, dangerously wounding her, and then fatally shot himself. For six months Moore and the woman have been meeting, and on this occasion they met at the resort of Henry Graves, remaining their until 2 o'clock, when Moore fired four shots at the woman, three taking effect in her arms and one in her right side. He then shot himself in the left side. There was no quarrel, and no reason is given for the act. The woman is very prepossessing; and married the Chinaman eighteen months ago. Her name before marriage was Irene Glass, and her relatives live at Plymouth.

Charles Gratio Cubanne and Miss Elizabeth Martin went to Jefferson and were married by Magistrate John H. Hause. Cabanne is said to be a member of a prominent family of St. Louis. His bride hails from Bardstown, Ky., and is a representative of one of the first families of the Blue Grass region. She at one time resided in St. Louis. The couple were accompanied by William Thomas, friend of the groom, residing at 327 West Market street, Louisville. The wedding couple eloped in a buggy from Bardstown, and did not seem to appear the worse for the wear over their trip through a jagged country. They were elegantly attired, and it was one of the most fashionable eloping escapades witnessed for a long time.

A fight with pistols occurred in the middle of the Ohio River, opposite Lawrenceburg, and was witnessed by several hundred people on the banks. Three men in a shanty boat had stolen several pairs of oars and other articles from Lucian Bump, of Pike's Station, and were floating down the river, when Mr. Bump, his son and another man overtook them with a skiff, and, rowing alongside the shanty boat, demanded the property. The shanty boat men with clubs and axes attempted to drive Mr. Bump and his men away. The latter drew pistols and fired several times into the side of the shanty boat, frightening the inmates so badly that they gave up all of the stolen property. The boat had drifted to the Kentucky side during the fight, and as the officers from that city had no authority to arrest the shanty boat men they continued down the river.

James Thomas, colored, and Paddy Ryan, rival cabmen of Anderson, tried to settle business rivalry by fighting. Thomas received two stinging blows in the face from Ryan's fist and then he used his knife, stabbing Ryan in the back, inflicting a dangerous hurt. Thomas was arrested for attempted murder.

The body of a young man was found in Indianapolis lying by the side of the Vandalia track, just west of the river. It was evident that he had been struck by a passing train. The body was removed to a morgue, where it was identified as that of Richard Wilson, aged 28, and formerly living at 456 South Capitol avenue.

The Malleable Iron Works of Marion, owned by Sweet & Clark, made an assignment to John C. Tibbetts. The company has $15,000 in paper that it is unable to meet, and there will fall due within the next two weeks $10,000 more. The total liabilities are abot $70,000. The capital stock is $100,000, over $95,000 of which is paid in.

A big legal fight has been waged for three days over the Haviland stock of goods at Evansville, between W. H. Hood and C. W. McLaughlin of Portland. Hood holds possession now, but McLaughlin, assisted by officers, attempted to remove the goods, and failed. McLaughlin has brought suit to recover $2,000 damages from Hood.

THE SILENT SHORE.

By John Bloundelle Burton

CHAPTER XII.—(Continued.)

"Then listen. I was born in Honduras, the child of a Spanish lady and of a friend of the old Englishman, Cundall, him from whom your brother's wealth was derived. That friend was a scoundrel, a man who tricked my mother into a marriage with him under a false name. When they had been married for some few years, and when another child, my sister, had been born, she found out the deception, and—she killed him."

"Killed him!" Penlyn exclaimed.

"Yes, dead! We Spaniards never allow a wrong to pass unavenged. She showed him the evidence of his falsehood in one hand, and with the other she shot him dead upon his own veranda. She was tried and instantly acquitted, and, in consideration of the wrong she had suffered, a law was made constituting her legally his wife. But the disgrace was to her—a high-minded, noble woman—too much; she fell ill and died. Then the old man, Cundall, seeing that it was his friend's evil-doing that had led to our being orphans, said that henceforth we should be his care. So we grew up, and I had learnt to look upon myself and my sister as his heirs, when one day there came another who, it was easy to see, had supplanted us. It was the English lad, Walter Cundall."

"I begin to see," Penlyn said.

"At first," Senor Guffanta went on, "I hated him for spoiling our chances, but at last I could hate him no longer. Gradually, his gentle disposition, his way of interceding for me with his uncle, when I had erred, above all his tenderness to my poor sister, who was sick and deformed, won my love. Had he been my brother I could not have loved him more. Then—then, as years went on, I committed a fault, and the old man cast me off forever. Another man tried to supplant me with the woman I loved—she was worth no man's love; but—no matter how—I avenged myself. But from that day the old man turned against me, and would neither see nor hear of me again. A year or two passed and then I heard from Walter, for my sister and I had left Los Torros (the town where we had all lived) and had gone elsewhere, that the old man was dead. 'He has left everything to me,' Walter wrote, 'and there is no mention of you or Juanna, but be assured neither of you shall ever want for anything.'"

"Stop," Lord Penlyn said, "you need tell me no more. I know the rest."

"You know the rest?" Senor Guffanta said, looking fixedly at him, "You know the rest?"

"Yes. You are Corot."

CHAPTER XIII.

A bewildered look came over the Spaniard's face, and then, after a second's pause, he said:

"Yes. I am Corot. It was the name given me by the Mestizos amongst whom I played as a boy, and it kept to me. It is you, then, Lord Penlyn, who has set this Dobson to look for me?"

"Yes; we found your letters to him, and from one of them we believed you to be in England. We thought that—that——"

"That I killed him?"

"You threatened him in one of your letters. We were justified in thinking so."

"He, at least, did not think so. Read this."

He took from his pocket a letter written by Walter Cundall during the few days he had been back in England, and gave it to Penlyn. It ran:

"June, 188—.

"My Dear Corot:

"I am delighted to hear you are in England, and have got an appointment as agent for Don Rodriguez in London. Perhaps, now, I shall have some respite from those fearful threats which, at intervals, from your boyhood, you have hurled at me, at Juanna, and every one you really love. Come and see me when you can, only come as late as possible, as I am out much; and we will have a talk about the old place and old times.

"Ever yours in haste, W. C.

"P. S.—I wish poor Juanna could have lived to know of your good fortune."

"Do you think I would murder that man, Lord Penlyn?" Senor Guffanta asked quietly. "That man who, when he heard of my good fortune, could think of how happy it would have made my beloved sister—she who is now in her grave."

Lord Penlyn noticed the self-constrained calm of the man, and told himself that he spoke with such an air of certainty that it was impossible to doubt him.

For one moment the thought came to his mind that this apparent calmness, this certainty of finding the murderer, might be a role assumed by Guffanta to prevent suspicion falling upon him. But on reflection that thought took flight.

Had he been the murderer he would never have revealed himself, would never have allowed it to be known that he was Corot, the man against whom circumstances had looked so black.

And Cundall's letter was sufficient to show that what the Senor had told him, about the friendship that had existed between them, was true.

"You must know more than any of us, Senor Guffanta, as no doubt you do—to inspire you with such confidence of finding him. Had he any enemy in Honduras, who may now be in England, and have done this deed?"

"To my knowledge, none. He was a man who made friends, not enemies."

"How, then, do you hope to find the man who killed him?"

"I hope nothing, Lord Penlyn, for I am sure to find him. What will you say when I tell you that I have seen his murderer's face?"

"You have seen his face? You know it!" the other exclaimed, springing to his feet. "Oh, let me at once send for the detectives and lawyers, so that you may describe him to them, and let them endeavor to find him. But," he said suddenly, "where have you seen him?"

There was an almost contemptuous smile upon the Senor Guffanta's face as he said:

"Send for no one—at least not yet. If by the detectives you mean Dobson, the heavy man, he will not assist me, and of the lawyers I know nothing; and at present I will not tell you when and where I have seen this man. But, sir—but, Lord Penlyn, I know one thing. When that man and I once more stand face to face, Walter Cundall, who shielded me from his uncle's wrath, who was as a brother to my beloved Juanna, will be avenged."

"What will you do?" Penlyn asked in an almost awe-struck whisper. "You will not take the law into your own hands and kill him?"

"No; it may be not. But with these hands alone," and he held them out extended to Penlyn as he spoke, "I will drag him to a prison which he shall only leave for a scaffold. Drag him there, I say, unless my blood gets the better of my reason, and I throttle him like a dog by the way."

He, too, had risen in his excitement, and as he stood towering in his height, which was great, above the other, and extended his long, sinewy hands in front of him, while his deep brown skin turned to an almost darker hue, Penlyn felt that this man before him would be the avenger of his brother's death.

So terrible did he look that the other wondered how that murderer would feel when he should be in his grasp.

He stepped forward to Guffanta and held out his hand to him. "Sir," he said, "I thank heaven that you and I have met. But can we do nothing to assist you in your search? May I not tell the detectives what you know?"

"You may tell them everything I have told you; it will not enable them to be in my way. But what I have to do I must do by myself." He paused a moment; then he said: "It may be that when you do tell them they will still think that I am the man——"

"No, no!"

"Yes, it may be so. Well, if they want to spy upon my actions, if they want to know what I do and where I go, I am to be found at the Hotel Lepanto—that is, when I am not here in this house, for I must ask you—I have a reason—to let me come to you as I want."

Penlyn bowed, and said some words to the effect that he should always be free of the house, and the other continued:

"My business here as agent for Don Rodriguez, a wealthy merchant of Honduras, will not occupy me much at present, the rest of my time will be devoted to the one purpose of finding that man."

"I pray that you may be successful."

"I shall be successful," the Spaniard answered quietly.

"And now," he said, "I will ask you to do one thing."

"Ask me anything and I will do it."

"You have a garden behind your house," Senor Guffanta said, "how is admission obtained to it?"

Lord Penlyn stared at him wonderingly, not knowing what this question might mean, and then he said:

"There is an entrance from the back of this house, and another from an iron gate in the side street. But why do you ask? no one ever goes into it. It is damp, and even the paths are partly overgrown with weeds."

"There are keys to those entrances?"

"Yes."

"And in your possession?" and, as he spoke, his dark eyes were fixed very intently on the young man.

"They are somewhere about the house, but they are never used."

"I wish them found. Then, when they are found, I must ask you to give me your word of honor that no living creature, not even you yourself, will enter that garden without my knowing it. Will you do this?"

"I will do it," Penlyn said. "But I wish you would tell me your reason."

"I will tell you nothing more at present. But remember that I have a task to perform and that I shall do it."

Then he left him, and walked away to the neighborhood of Leicester square.

"What I have seen to-day," he said to himself, "would have baffled many a man. But you, Miguel, are different from other men. You are not baffled; you are only still more determined to do what you have to do. But who is he?—who is he? He is not Lord Penlyn."

CHAPTER XIV.

"The story about this Spaniard, Guffanta, is a strange one," Philip Smerdon wrote from Occleve Chase to Lord Penlyn, who had informed him of the visit he had received and the revelations made by the Senor, "but I may as well tell you at once that I don't believe it, although you say that the lawyers, as well as Stuart and Dobson, are inclined to do so. My own opinion is that, though he may not have killed Mr. Cundall, he is still telling you a lie—for some reason of his own, as to the friendship that existed between them, and he probably thinks that by pretending to be able to find the man, he will get some money from you. With regard to his having been face to face with the murderer, why, if so, does he not say on what occasion and when? To know his face as that of the murderer, is to say, what in plainer words would be, that he had either known he was about to commit the act, or that he had witnessed it. It admits of no other interpretation, and, consequently, what becomes of his avowed love for Cundall, if he knew of the contemplated deed and did not prevent it, or, having witnessed it, did not at once arrest or kill his aggressor? You may depend upon it, my dear Gervase, that this man's talk is nothing but empty braggadocio, with, as I said before, the probable object of extracting money from you as he previously extracted it from your brother.

"As to the locking up of the garden and allowing no one to enter it, I am inclined to think that it is simply done with the object of making a pretense of mysteriously knowing something that no one else knows. And it is almost silly, for your garden would scarcely happen to be selected by the murderer as a place to visit, and what object could he have in so visiting it? However, as it is a place never used, I should gratify him in this case, only I would go a little farther than he wishes, and never allow it to be opened—not even when he desires it."

The letter went on to state that Smerdon was still very busy over the summer accounts at Occleve Chase, and should remain there some time; he might, however, he added, shortly run up to town for a night.

A feeling of disappointment came over Penlyn as he read this letter from his friend.

During the two or three days that had elapsed between writing to Smerdon and receiving his answer, he had been buoyed up with the hope that in Guffanta the man had been discovered who would be the means of bringing the assassin to justice, and this hope had been shared by all the other men interested in the same cause.

But he had come, in the course of his long friendship with Philip Smerdon, to place such reliance upon his judgment, and to accept so thoroughly his ideas, that the very fact of his doubting the Senor's statement, and looking upon it as a mere attempt to extort money from him, almost led him also to doubt whether, after all, he had not too readily believed the Spaniard.

Yet, he reflected, his actions, as he stood before him foretelling the certain doom of that assassin when once they should again be face to face, and his calm certainty that such would undoubtedly happen, bore upon them the impress of truth.

And his story had earned the belief of the others—that, surely, was in favor of it being true. Stuart had seen him, had listened to what he had to say, and had formed the opinion that he was neither lying nor acting.

Dobson also, the man who to the Senor's mind was ridiculous and incapable, had been told everything, and he, too, had come to the conclusion that Guffanta's story was an honest one, and that, of all other men, he who, in some mysterious manner, knew the murderer's face, would be the most likely to eventually bring him to justice, and he was also very anxious to know what the secret was that led to his desiring Lord Penlyn to have the garden securely closed and locked.

He could find in his own mind no connecting link between the place of death in the park and Lord Penlyn's garden (although he remembered that, strangely enough, his lordship was the dead man's brother), and he was desirous that the Senor should confide in him.

But the latter would tell him nothing more than he had already made known, and Dobson, who had always in his mind's eye the vision of the large rewards that would come to the man who found the murderer, was forced to be content and to work, as he termed it, "in the dark."

"You must wait, my good Dobson, you must wait," the Spaniard said, "until I tell you that I want your assistance, though I do not think it probable that I shall ever want it. You could not find out that I was Corot, you know, although I had many times the pleasure of lunching at the next table to you; I do not think that you will be able any the better to find the man I seek. But when I find him, Dobson, I promise you that you shall have the pleasure of arresting him, so that the reward shall come to you. That is, if I do not have to arrest him suddenly upon the moment, myself, so as to prevent him escaping."

"And what are you doing now, Signor?" Dobson asked, giving him a title more familiar to him in its pronunciation than the Spanish one; "what are you doing to find him?"

"I am practicing a virtue, my friend, that I have practiced much in my life. I am waiting."

"I don't see that waiting is much good, Signor. There is not much good ever done by waiting."

"The greatest good in the world, Dobson, the very greatest. And you do not see now, Dobson, because you do not know what I know. So you, too, must be virtuous, and wait."

It was only with banter of a slightly concealed nature such as this that Senor Guffanta would answer Dobson, but, light as his answers were, he had still managed to impress the detective with the idea that, sooner or later, he would achieve the task he had vowed to perform.

"But," as the man said to one of his brethren, "why can't he get to work, why don't he do something? He won't find the man in that Hotel Lepanto, where he sits smoking cigarettes half the day, nor yet in Lord Penlyn's house, where he goes every night."

"Perhaps he thinks his lordship did it, after all," the other answered, "and is watching him."

"No," Dobson said, "he don't think that. But I can't make out who the deuce he does suspect."

(To be continued.)

INFECTION AMONG BUGS.

Novel Method of Distroying Farm Pests in Vogue in Kansas.

The business of exchanging sick bugs for well ones is to be conducted on a large scale this year. Professor Frank H. Snow, chancellor of the State University of Kansas, is in charge of it with an appropriation from the Legislature to back him. Just now he is getting into order his hospital for insects, in which the latter are treated, not for the purpose of curing them of anything, but to inoculate them artificially with horrible diseases.

During the coming summer anybody who chooses to send a healthy chinch bug to Professor Snow will receive from him in return a diseased specimen of the same species. Last season consignments of sick insects were forwarded to 3,000 farmers in Kansas alone, and packages of them were shipped by express to various localities in eight other States. The recipients scattered the bugs in their fields, the object being to spread a plague among the chinch bugs that were damaging the crops.

This is a new idea. The theory that some of the most injurious insects may be kept in check by spreading diseases among them artificially is being applied by practical experiments in Europe as well as in this country. Professor Snow's work in the direction has been attended with much success, the destructive chinch bug being well-nigh annihilated over whole districts by his patent plague. His disease-breeding hospital is on plans of his own, involving the use of very elaborate apparatus. The material of infection is placed in small glass jars together with a few healthy bugs. The latter, when they become sick, are transferred to large shallow boxes. In these boxes healthy bugs are put as fast as they are received, and from them is obtained a constant supply of dying and dead insects for shipment to those who want them.

To maintain the supply Professor Snow requires that every person asking for diseased bugs shall send an equal number of healthy ones. Some of the specimens forwarded from the infirmary are, to all outward appearances, well and happy, but they have been exposed to infection and the deadly germs are already beginning to multiply inside of their bodies. After a bit they will sicken and die, the corpse of each one being enveloped in a shroud of white mold. Did you ever see a dead fly attached to a window pane by a network of whitish gossamer filaments? It is a case exactly similar; the fly has died of a fungus disease. The ailment communicated to the chinch bugs by Professor Snow is a fungus, the fruiting of which makes the winding sheet that eventually envelops the victim.—Boston Transcript.

The Gulls' Strategy.

Allen C. Mason is telling a story that would probably ruin any reputation he may have for truth and veracity where he not as well known as he is in Tacoma, says the Ledger of that city. He says he does not absolutely vouch for its truth, but believes it to be true. It was told him by some of the men who work on a boat running from the ocean to Quartermaster Harbor.

They say that in stormy weather, when the sea gulls find it difficult to get their food from its usual sources of supply, they alight on the logs lying on the beach along the shore of the harbor until as many of them are perched on a log as can get on it, and then, apparently by direction of one of their number, they begin to rock back and forth until they turn the log over and then each one grabs off a barnacle and eats it, and they repeat the operation.

MEN WHO FIGHT FIRE

HOW THEY ARE TRAINED FOR THEIR WORK.

Drilled in the Art of Scaling High Buildings—Handle Long Ladders with Wonderful Ease and Celerity—No Time Is Lost.

Powerful and Agile Athletes.

Every pipeman, engineman, and truckman in the service of the fire department of large cities is drilled weekly in the duties of a hook and ladder company. Not only the men serving on the hook and ladders know how to lower a man or woman by means of a rope from a burning building, but when a pipeman or engineman is needed he is as well trained as any to take an active part in saving life, and can do it as well as he can handle an engine or turn a hose where it does the most effective work.

FOUR-MEN LADDER DRILL.

Although this drill usually takes place at every hook and ladder house on some day of every week, it never ceases to be an interesting sight to the neighbors and passersby. Men and boys are never too busy to stop and watch the blue-shirted men as they nimbly run up the ladder, and then pass it on to the window above.

When Marshal Horan and Capt. Thomas O'Connor, of hook and ladder No. 6, at Chicago, gave the order for a drill one day last week four men immediately began to get themselves ready. They were Lieut. James Cunningham, John Tierney, Patrick Sullivan, and William Thompson. The first thing done by the quartet was to bring into the alley upon which the engine house is situated four long ladders. Then they all fastened a broad leather belt about their waists. These were about six inches wide, and in front had a tremendous hook of steel.

"Up you go," called Capt. O'Connor, and the four-men pompier drill began.

The sixteen-foot ladders, with which the men practice when playing that lives are to be saved and that all egress by stairs is stopped by smoke and flame, were seized as though but a featherweight. At the top of each ladder is a long iron hook. This is notched so that it will catch in any width window sill. The first man to mount fastened the ladder securely to the second story window and swiftly ran up the rounds. As soon as he reached the top he opened the big hook at his belt and snapped it about the top round. Then he put out his hands for the next ladder, and it was quickly handed up to him. This he raised high in the air, hand over hand, fastened it on the third floor window, tried its strength to see that it was secure, then quickly ran up. As he went up this he was followed up the first ladder by the second man waiting below. As he reached each floor his manoeuver was the same. When he reached the top of the second ladder the second man was at the top of the first. Both men hooked themselves safely and put out their hands for the ladder below. Quickly it was passed from the third man at the foot to the one on the top of the first ladder. By him it went to the fireman above. Then the third man ran briskly up and the fourth and last one began the mount. By the time he had reached the top of the ladder that stood firmly upon the ground his brother firemen has passed the fourth ladder to the man at the top. Here it was fastened to the summit of the tower, and the first man to mount was soon looking below to Capt. O'Connor for orders.

SINGLE MAN LADDER DRILL.

"All the way down!" shouted the Captain.

And without one moment for breath the descent began.

Each man came down from the top of the ladder upon which he had stood, and snap went three hooks upon the round of the ladder. The ladder at the top was as a wisp of hay in the powerful arms of the man at the third floor window. He took it from its place and quickly lowered it to the man below. This one passed it on with the same rapid movement, and in a second more it was on the ground and resting against the building. Down ran the three men. The one who had removed the ladder stepped aside, and his place was taken by the next to dismount. The same course was taken until the three others were safely on the ground once more and the four ladders standing against the firehouse.

LOWERING MAN FROM A WINDOW.

The "two men drill" is very similar, except that only two ladders are used, one man passing up the lower ladder to the man above him, and then running up the two ladders and in turn receiving the lower one from his comrade. The "one man drill" is performed with one ladder. The fireman fixes it to a window above him, mounts to the sill of the upper window, raises the ladder another story, and so on until he has reached the height desired.

SAVING LIFE WITH THE NET.

The rope drill, likewise, always attracts curious crowds. The noose of a rope is placed around the waist of the person to be lowered, and the fireman who lowers him gives the rope two or three turns around the hook in his belt. Then he pays it out as slowly or as fast as desired. Persons are taken from buildings with ropes, or dropped into nets, when flames or smoke prevent the use of stairways or ladders. The net is a circle of woven rope about four feet across. The rope is an inch thick and the meshes are close. Ten or more men take hold of the net, and the persons rescued are dropped into it. When the firemen execute this drill they drop from a hole feet first into the net with the precision of circus acrobats.

"It's a fine thing," said the Marshal. "But it don't always work. On a dark, black night we hate to use it, for we can't always tell that we are directly under the one that is to jump, and then it is fatal."

She Respected His Dignity.

A Scotch woman was returning by a train from a market town, where she had made a few purchases. Just as the last bell rang a fuesy gentleman, elegantly dressed, and with a "mind-thyself" looking face, rushed into the compartment, flung himself hastily into a corner, pulled out an evening paper and proceeded to devour its contents. Hardly had he become seated when the woman timidly addressed him: "I am very sorry, sir, but——"

"I never listen to beggars," fiercely interrupted the gentleman. "If you annoy me further I'll report you."

The woman's eyes flashed, then twinkled. She said no more, and the old gentleman retired with an angry frown behind his paper.

All went merrily as a marriage bell until the train arrived at Cromlade, when the "auld wife," in stepping out, again addressed the churlish individual in the corner:

"I care na, sir, whether ye report me or no, but I want that pound of butter ye've been sittin' on for these last six mile."—Cincinnati Enquirer.

New Process of Making Maps.

William Kornmacher, a druggist in South Scranton, Pa., has discovered a process of relief map-making which marks a new era in that art. They are made by a chemical process, and the largest country can be done in three hours, and, no cut being used, the cheapness of the process is easily understood. The negative is done in plaster-of-paris, and from it the relief can be finished in one hour. The countries are accurately represented, the mountain ranges elevated in proportion to one another, and the river courses are shown in depression, and the maps can be colored and names imprinted thereon. This process can be used in the manufacture of innumerable other articles.

THE WIFE'S SHARE.

We have a poor opinion of the man, we care not how poor or how well-to-do he is, that does not acknowledge that his wife has a share in the income of the farm. The man who acknowledges this in words and does not give by actually passing into the wife's hand some of the share does her a rank injustice. We are aware some men excuse themselves by saying that "it is all in the family, anyway," or "women are no managers." Both are very slim excuses. What man who has worked hard would like it when the few dollars come in that the toil produced should his wife take them and use them all in buying a sewing machine, an extra cloak, and half a dozen plated spoons, which are "all in the family" when the husband has set his mind upon having a "good new jackknife when those hogs are sold?" She has the right to do it, as much so as the man has to buy a feed-cutter, an extra rubber coat and a whip when the wife had her heart upon having a pair of kid gloves. That women are "poor managers" is proven false every day. Many a successful man owes his success to his wife's good management, and many more would be successful if they left more of their affairs to the judgment and management of the wife.

It is a burning shame the treatment some women get in the money matters of the copartnership made at marriage. We do not believe in marriages for a money consideration, but hold that many a woman would be happier had the promise to "love, cherish and keep" been carried a little further or made more specific so as to have obligated to a literal sharing of the money, be it little or much.

An extreme case was brought to our attention a few days ago. A farm was to be sold, and after the deed was made out the wife hesitated before signing it. When asked why, she replied: "Before signing that paper," and her voice grew steady and firm, "I want to know what my share's to be. I've worked as hard as father all these years on the farm, and I've pinched and managed and earned whatever's to be paid for it, as much as he, and I want a set sum that's all mine, and that I can hold in my own hands and have belong to me alone." The lawyer who made out the paper saw determination in the tone and manner, and acknowledged her right, and asked her how much she considered her share. "I thought of that, too," she replied. "It's been forty years, a good forty years, for we took the farm in the fall, and this is spring, and it seems to me"—her voice broke a little at this critical moment—"it seems to me," she replied, "as if I'd ought to have $20."

That is a true statement of a recent happening. Think of it, man. A woman so belittled by forty years' unrecompensed servitude that she called $20 a fair consideration for her services! Man! are you degrading your wife to such a position?—Farm, Field and Fireside.

Revenue Officer in Skirts.

Miss Lucy E. Ball has just been appointed chief of the spirits department by Collector Kelly of the Brooklyn internal revenue office. There is only one other woman in the United States holding a similar position. The new chief is a pretty girl with dark hair and blue eyes, and a face that is full of intelligence. She lives with her parents at 1062 Dean street, Brooklyn. Four or five years ago she entered the service of the internal revenue department in Greensboro, N. C., the heart of the moonshining district. In 1894 Collector Healey appointed her as a deputy in the Brooklyn office. She was afterward in charge of the income tax department while that law was in operation. Lately she has been keeping accounts of brewers and cigar manufacturers. Her new duties will be in relation to the distilleries of the district.

MISS LUCY E. BALL.

Make It Yourself.

Lanoline cream, which is considered excellent as an emollient for the skin, may be made as follows: Obtain half a pint of lanoline and half a pint of pure oil of sweet almonds. Then putting a tablespoonful on a china plate, add an equal quantity of almond oil; mix thoroughly, and add from half a teaspoonful to a teaspoonful of tincture of benzoin, until the paste drips from the knife—a steel caseknife is best for the mixing process—in about the consistency of thick cream. All three of these ingredients are absolutely harmless. It should be rubbed in at night.

The Lovable Woman.

Very lovely and lovable is the woman who has cultivated a disposition angelic enough to see the good and not the evil side of human nature, who can be severe with her own failings, and excuse the faults of others. We are told that she is a dull, uninteresting creature, and if we take the trouble to look into the matter we find that she does not laugh at her neighbor's pet weakness; she does not enjoy hitting out right and left at the world at large, and is always ready with a plea for unseen and unsuspected reasons, which, if they could be revealed, would go a long way toward modifying harsh judgment. Our lovable woman may not be witty, she may be a little prosy; but she it is to whom we go when in trouble for sympathy and confide with a feeling that our secret will not be torn to shreds as soon as our back is turned.

Curls and Crimps in Profusion.

If nature has been niggardly in the matter of curls, woman must hie her to the hairdresses this season to entreat him to make good the deficiency. For curls of all sorts and conditions are all to be popular. The only thing which is tabooed is the smoothly drawn Madonna-like coiffure which has been the solace of the indolent woman for a season or two. Pompadour combs help to give the roll its stability. They are fastened in the hair in such a way as to press the fluffy puff out toward the face instead of in from it. When the hair is worn a la pompadour, as far as the facially decorative part is concerned, the back hair is generally gathered up on the top of the head. There it is coiled loosely and roundly instead of in the pertly erect and narrow fashion recently prevailing. In deference to the rage for curls the ends of the coils are oftentimes free. Simultaneously with the announcement from the hairdressers that the hair must be curled comes the declaration from hygienists that the curling iron must go. It is branded as the deadliest foe to softness and fineness of the locks. This would be a particularly discouraging conflict but for the fact that the makers of kid curlers have devised an almost picturesque method of curling the hair. The little, inoffensive kid curlers are all provided with narrow ribbons which tie in dainty little bows all over the head.

UP-TO-DATE HAIRDRESSING.

Louisiana Bachelors in Peril.

The palladium of the Louisiana bachelor's liberty has been ruthlessly swept away by a recent decision in the United States Circuit Court, and, if he has not taken to the woods, he is at least as circumspect in his dealings with the fair sex as a Quaker. The civil law in that State has always frowned on breach of promise suits, and refused to recognize them. A certain Mrs. Cheek, however, finding that her venerable suitor, Herman Pilger, would not fulfil his promise to marry her, brought suit against him in the Federal courts and recovered heavy damages against him. The decision may bring to light many hundred breach of promise suits which have lain dormant for years because the State law recognized no damages for a bruised heart.

Equality of Sexes.

The new woman should take her way to Burmah. There, travelers say, is the only place on earth where true equality between the sexes exists. In spite of this, it is claimed, no women are more womanly than the Burmese women, whose good sense enables them to perceive the line where they ought to stop. In the higher classes a woman has property of her own and manages it herself. In the lower classes she always has a trade, and runs her business on her own responsibility. The sexes choose their own occupations, and it is curious to see the men sometimes sewing and embroidering, while the women have nearly all the retail trade of the island on their hands.—Exchange.

Never Used a Hair Brush.

A charming English woman, whose hair always looked like burnished gold, announced one day that she never used a brush on it. However, she had a substitute. With a large silk handkerchief, such as good housekeepers covet for brightening their silver, she stroked it firmly and briskly 100 times, night and morning. She said this method possessed all the good qualities of a brushing, without ever running the danger of breaking a fine hair or tiring the head.

American Girl Who Surprised Paris.

The fete recently given by the Countess Castellane, formerly Miss Anna Gould, was one of the most elaborate ever seen in Paris. Three thousand invitations were issued, and the cost of the fete was not far from $100,000. The event was planned to reproduce the fifth day of the fetes celebrated at Versailles on the occasion of the marriage of Louis XIV. with Maria Theresa of Austria.

Egg-Shells.

Egg-shells have also recently figured as a waste material for which at last a use has been found. It seems that the street ice cream venders use many eggs in their business; but, instead of breaking the shells in the orthodox manner, they pierce them at each end, and blow the contents out into their culinary utensils with their mouths. This, to say the least of it, is unpleasant in idea, and unsanitary in effect. The object of preserving the shells unbroken is that they can be sold at so much per dozen to the shooting galleries, where sportsmen who are precluded by circumstances from seeking higher game may have the pleasure of smashing them from afar.

Whist is as dissipated as whisky, and less fun.

Mother's Last Embrace

She Bid HerSon Good Bye at the Sheriff's Office Yesterday Morning.

The COURIER witnessed a very sad incident in the Sheriff's office yesterda forenoon. A boy of about fourteen or fifteen summers was sent to the house of correction. His life has been one of many peculiar incidents, though he is but a boy. His mother was a Johnson and ore time lived in Allen Co. She there married a Triece. To them were born five children. Some time ago the husband refused to support his wife and family and left with two of the children for Chicago. Since that time the mother has resided with her father trying as best she could to raise the other three children. But with other associates the boys grew up and were idle, and like all boys were into considerable mischief. He was brought here to be sent to the house of correction, but as there were no charges against him, Judge Penfield concluded to have Sheriff Stroh find a place for him to work.

The scene in the office yesterday was very trying as the mother put her arms around her dear boy and sobbed bitterly.

Mike Is Misty

Mike Long comes back at us in the Dispatch, in regard to those silver canes, and says we cant tell silver from tin. To give our readers an idea of the effect a republican convention, or something else, may have on the mind, we quote what we said, and follow it with what Mike thought we said.

"Mike Long and several others in the Wilmington delegation had silver canes, making it look as if they were coming over onto the righteous side. We expect soon to hear them shouting for silver. "COURIER.

And here is how Mike read it:

"The COURIER says Mike Long headed the bands as they came into town Saturday morning carrying a silver cane. Mike says the average democratic editors don't know the difference between silver and tin."

Truly that convention must have had a bad effect.

BAD PLAN

The necessity of keeping up a gold reserve of 100 millions to pay off greenbacks is the direct outcome of republican legislation and republican administrations. Our whole financial system should be changed. Let the government go out of the banking business, and then it would not be obliged to keep up a large stock of gold with which to pay off its depositors.

Did Right.

As soon as Bryan's friends telegraphed to him that Watson was nominated for vice-president instead of Sewall. Bryan telegraphed back to not let his name go before the convention. This was an honorable course to take, and the only course an honorable man could take. It would be very awkard for a candidate for the presidency, to be running with two candidates for vice-president on different platforms. To the average voter, whether populist, democrat or republican, it is plain that Sewall is a better man than Tom Watson. Tom will know "where he is at" in November.

Banks And Bankers

At the St. Louis populist convention Friday, Julv 24, Lafe Pence now of New York, but a member of congrss from Colora do, in favoring the nomination of Sewal, a banker, for vice president said he did not see why this should be an objection and added: "Confidentially, we are none of us bankers, but, confidentially we would all like to be."

There is a great deal in this, so much that we should all stop to consider the injustice that all parties are now doing the men who do the banking business of the country. Why should this especial line of business be singled out for abuse and misrepresentation? Bankers as a class are men of the highest integrity and usually men who have acquired wealth by means as honest as in any other line of business. And to call sharks, shylock, vampires and the like is as uncalled for as it is dangerous in its tendencies. We would like to see the three or four political parties that are now engaged more or less in this poor business, stop and think long enough to see its injustice. What have the banks done? They have tried to do good business, the same as everyone tries to do, no matter what his calling is. If they loan money it is because some one needs it to use. If the borrower borrows money when he does not need it, he should not blame the banks. It is his own folly. If he really needs the money it is an advantageto him to borrow it but no more so to the banker than to any other loan they make. And no bank can do business unless it takes security. And in case a borrower can not or will not pay, he must lose his property. This is a misfortune but no fault of the banks. They can not give out mony that is never to return. In other ways the banks are a benefit besides being a convenient means of carrying on business transactions. There is not a firm doing business in Auburn but has at some time or other had to ask help at the banks. There is not to-day a factory in Auburn, but has been at least a part of the time dependent on the banks for means to run. And every workman in these factaries has reason in this way to thank the banks for half the employment he has had for years past. Many more things might be said but nothing we can say, contains as much in little as the words of Lafe Pence, a populist, quoted above.

Commisary Sergeant H. A. Lobmiller Give the Boys a little Surprise by Having their tents pitched.

Monday's Daily.

Camp of Instruction, Fairview Park, Indianapolis, July 26.—(Special.)

Company K. left Auburn in good spirits and went to camp feeling better. The company has never been out when every man was as quiet and orderly as on this trip. The company arrived at Union depot a 9.20 p. m., street cars were awaiting to take companies to camp, arriving at camp at 10:40, Commisary Sergeant, H. A. Lobmiller had our tents pitched for us, our blankets and straw ticks were issued and filled and by 12 o'clock almost every man was in their quarters and trying to get a wink of sleep, which is a hard thing the first night in camp, as the bands and companies were coming in all night. Our company voted to reduce 1st Sergeant Olla Brandon to 3d Sergeant, and promote 3d Sergeant John C. Noel, to Orderly Sergeant.

Owing to the absence of Lieutenant Col. Studebaker, Major Bowman was detailed to fill the vacancy and Capt. Kuhlman to Major Bowman's place leaving our company under command of 1st Lieutenant Frank Lahnum.

Charles McBride is on the grounds solicitfng companies for history and pictures of crack companies for an illustrated write-up of the Indiana National guard.

The camp ground is somewhat changed; everything is in better shape thin last year. G. C. C.

Court

We pick up the following closing items, of court work for though late, they have some interest.

Harris who was taken to the pen last week to stay one year for stealing Mr. Colvin's clothes and sachel, gave the court only the name of "John Doe." Poor, old, abused John Doe! The courts of England and America have much to answer for.

Anna S. Keller had a new trial granted in the case of Gaskell vs Keller for damages. Mr. Keller later, filed a motion for new trial but was over ruled. He also asked for a new jury to try the case again, and was given ninety days to state his reasons.

The matter of the Knight ditch, an appeal has been granted to the supreme court.

In the case between Zonker and Blucher, the latter asks appeal to supreme court which was granted.

The divorce case instituded by Thomas J. Ray against Mary Ray resulted in a verdict "that said marriage was and is null and void" and judgment accordingly.

Frances S. Glawe was given a divorce from Henry Glawe and custody of child.

Sophia Tombow was granted a divorce from Daniel Tombow.

Wedding

A former Auburn Girl Marries at San Diego.

The San Diego Union of July 19, has this item that will interest many people it Auburn and Waterloo.

Notable among the pleasant social attractions of the past week was the marriage of two prominent young society people of San Diego, Charles L. Parker and Miss Bertha Hale. The marriage was solemnized at high noon Thursday, July 16, at 1209 Cedar street. the home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. D. P. Hale, well known residents of this city, Chaplain John D. Parker, U. S. A., retired, performed the ceremony at which only immediate relatives of the two families were present. At the appointed time when the melody of Mendelsohn's wedding march was filling the rooms the bride entered leaning upon the arm of her father, who conducted her to the groom, when the ceremonial ring service was observed which united them in marriage. Felicitations followed, and after partaking of a most inviting wedding breakfast the bridal pair were borne away on the afternoon train for a wedding journey to the north. The bride and groom are both well known and popular members of society, and their marriage has created unusual interest among their friends. The congratulations are many and sincere and a cordial welcome awaits them on their return to this city, when they will be at home to friends at 1313 Sixth street after August 1.

CORRESPONDENCE.

BUTLER.

Orla Campbell has returned from Colorado Springs.

We understand that Mrs. David McDannell, of Stafford, has rented her farm and will move to town.

Rev. John B. Helwig and family, of Springfield, Ohio, are spending their summer vacation with his sister, Betsey Imhoff, of Stafford. Rev. J. B. is among the foremost ministers of the state of Ohio and an all around prohibitionist. Our people hope to hear him soon on this or some other living topic from a Butler pulpit.

An able discourse from Rev. Fifer, of Crawfordsville, Indiana, at the Lutheran church last Sunday evening, was unceremoniouslr broken off by a threatened storm. The people scarcely gave him time to finish a sentence in their haste to get out out and home. It proved to be only a scare.

E. A. Campbell returned to Toledo Monday.

A wide spread fear for the safety of the potato crop exists. More than half of the growing crop is destroyed by floods already, and grave fears for the balance are felt. Their plentifulness for the past year or two will make their loss more severely felt.

Mrs. Phebe North, nee Potter, died rather suddenly last Thursday after an illness of a few days

In the storm Sunday evening the metal roof of the large livery barn occupied by James Decker, was stripped off by the wind. Many parts of Butler were under water last Monday morning, ruining gardens and making things nasty in general.

The large barn owned by Benjamin Myers, living four miles north of Butler, was burned by lightning last Sunday night, together with its contents, except live stock. Loss about $800. Insured in Hartford of Hartford, in J. A. Campbell's agency.

CORUNNA.

Miss Mattie Franks is lying very low at this writing, with little hopes of recovery.

The leading topic of conversation "nowadays" on the street corners and everywhere else, is the money question.

Children's day exercises at the M. E. church on Sunday evening was excellent.

The young men will give an ice cream festival Saturday evening, August 1, at Gushwa's hall for the benefit of the base ball team. Come and help the boys along.

Farmers say that the oats crop is ruined, also the wheat that is yet out in the fields.

Corunna has organized a base ball team and elected the following officers: C. C. Cremean, manager; Milo Thomas, treasurer and secretary; C. E. Mercer, captain.

WATERLOO.

The supply of dwelling houses is not equal to the demand at present.

Mrs. Silas Sinclair came Saturday to Waterloo, to call upon her relatives and friends, returning Monday to Angola, from there she goes to her home (Chicago) Tuesday or Wednesday. She will be remembered as Mattie Stough of Waterloo. She went to Angola some six weeks ago, on account of ill health fearing lung difficulty and wished to be treated by Dr. Wood, who is her mother s brother. She leaves much improved in health.

Mr. Atchison who had been very ill for some days died some time Friday, and was buried Sunday from the U. B. Church of which he and his wife were members. He was an exsoldier.

A gentleman, wife and five children moved from Edgerton last week Tuesday. They occupy the Day property on pleasant hill. Your correspondent failed to learn the name or business. Another party desired to secure the same place, but was just too late.

Never have we had so many insect pests as this season, all the old varieties, but a number of new ones unlike any that appeared before. Now the tender ends of grape vines from half a yard to a yard in length or more, the undersides of the leaves are dotted with excresecenses as large as a sweet pea. We are told they are the egg which hatches a worm that sets to work eating the leaves as soon as hatched which of course if not prevented will injure the grapes if not ruin the crop. The only remedy is to cut off the vine wherever the eggs are found and burn at once. We also read of a new potato bug near Buffalo that nothing thus far has any effect upon. There seems no kill to it. The army worms are also making their nests and spinning their webs the second time this year.

The big Rain.

ED COURIER:—

Sir—By the statement in the COURIER in regard to the great rainfall of last week, as I understand it, the water would cover the ground to the depth of 2½ inches. If this is correct I will proceed as follows:

One acre equals 6,272,640 sq. in. 2½ cu. in. on every sq. in. of surface is equal to 15,681,600 cu. in of water; this divided by 231 equals 67,885plus gal., or 2,155 barrels and 2½ gallons per acre.

I based my computation on 2½ as I thought it more convenient.

Tuesday's Daily.

There is a well-developed joke out on John Crimmins. When he and some other young people started out on a fishing trip yesterday noon to go to Crooked Lake, John was so intently interested in helping a very good looking young lady onto the train that he followed her into the car leaving his basket of eatables sitting on the ground right where he set it down, when he gave the lady his hand. There were the olives, the pickles, the apples, etc., shining out in a most tempting way. But the employes about there are polite and honest, and John got his basket in response to a very humble telegram, on the evening train.

Barbed Wire

Tuesday's Daily.

This material is seldom a pleasant thing to run into. But there are times and places when it is unusually disagreeable to "mix in" with it. A lot of boys were in swimming yesterday in the high waters of the creek along the Shaffer farm just north of Woodlawn. Everything went well till the boys got to rolling in old logs on which they would float down stream. At the lower end of this stretch of water, a fence of barbed wire was stretched across the stream, and it was now partly under water. The boys knew of this and the most of them would get off their logs as they neared it. But one of Cal. Baird's boys and one of the Yingling boys got reckless and stuck to their logs. And now they wish they hadn't. The Baird boy, when he got into the wire let go his log, and swam ashore, though considerably cut and torn on the chest and legs. But Yingling stuck to his log and was drawn through the fence. His head, hands and shoulder were badly cut and torn, some of the cuts being several inches long. It will be some time before the boys again attempt to "shoot" a barbed wire fence, without at least a night shirt on.

RUNNING ON TIME

An illustrating the degree of efficiency to which the present management of the B. & O. R. R. has brought its motive power equipment and spirit de corps of the operating staff, we call attention to the fact that during the months of April, May and June the passenger trains and fast freight trains have almost invariably arrived at their respective destinations on schedule time. The very few exceptions to the general rule were due to causes inseparable from railway operation, and against which no forethought can wholly guard. It may be safely said that during the period named no road in America, comparable in magnitude to the B. & O., can surpass its record for punctuality in train movement.

GRAND WIND-UP CLEARANCE SALE

We will Inaugurate a

SUMMER CLEARANCE SALE,

Commencing

Saturday Morning August 1 and Ending

Saturday Night, August 8.

Our determination to sell dependable merchandise at unapproachably low prices was never more convincingly evident than it will be during this sale. Many lines of good things bought for our anniversary sale came in too late, and many very desirable lines of goods were overlooked during our Two Days' Push. During this week we will offer seasonable merchandise at prices never before named. This sale will extend over our entire store.

It will be a Dress Goods Slump and the Last Call on Shirt Waists and Wrappers.

It hits the Men's Goods, and hits them hard.

Domestics and Wash Goods,

Muslin Underwear and Embroidery,

Millinery, Notions and Jewelry,

Carpets, Mattings and Rugs,

all have felt the effect of the pruning knife, and every dollar's worth of surplus stock has been marked at prices to close them out in a week.

It is a Buying Opportunity None Should —Miss.—

That You Are Allowed to Send in Several Names for That New Cigar.

The impression is out that only one name may be suggested by a person for the new brand of cigars at E. M. Bishop's. You can send in a dozen names if you choose. There will be no campaign names used, so don't send them in. The new cigar will not be a campaign cigar. It will be one which will always remain on record as one of the best ever smoked in Auburn. Send in a name by mail at once.

Foundry and Machine Shop for Sale or to Rent.

On October 1, 1896, the lessees of the Eagle Mfg. Co. plant at Auburn Junction, Indiana, will give the owner possession of the entire plant, consisting of a foundry and machine shop, and the same will be leased or sold at a price much less than its real value. The plant is in one of the best locations in that part of the state, being situated at Auburn Junction, Indiana, in an angle formed by the junction of the L. S. & M. S., the Wabash and B. & O railroads. The factory land consists of about 1¼ acres, bounded on two sides by the railroads mentioned. In Sept, 1893, this property was appraised by competent men at $3,500. It can be bought for less than half that amount now. If you are interested in this line write me at once. In case of purchase, a clear title to the property can be given. The plant can be leased at $17 per month for a period of 2 to 10 years. If you have a little capital this is a rare chance to go into this line of business with a small investment. The plant can be bought for $200 down and balance in installments to suit purchaser. Possession can be given before Oct. 1, '96, if desired, but the factory must be rented or sold by that date Call on or address —Looking south from near Bachtel's mill the telegraph, telephone, electric light, fire alarm and similar poles are so thickly planted that it reminds one of the masts of the shipping in the harbors of Chicago and New York. Auburn manages to have in one shape or another, all of the modern improvements.

There is no use trying to conceal the fact that many demotrats are not suited with some planks in the platform. And there is no denying the fact that some will not vote the ticket. But we do not see that we will get any better platform by voting the republican ticket, or a better candidate by voting for McKinley. So we apprehend but few democrats will bolt.

—Supt. Merica had engaged as day instructors for his institute August 24 and 28 Mrs. Emma Mont. McRae, of Purdue University, and Prof. Howard Sandison of the state Normal. Because of sickness, Prof. Sandison writes Mr. Merica that he can not be present. His place will be filled and announcement made in due time. The institute lecture course will be an important feature again.

—Queer things happen in politics. Only a few years ago the majority of the people protested against coining and using so many silver dollars. They said they were too heavy to carry and altogether inconvenient. Now everybody likes them and no one objects to their size or weight. All the trouble seems to be to get enough of them. And the great issue now discussed all over the nation is to have more of them coined.

—The city of Cleveland celebrate its 100th anniversary. July 22, 1796, Gen. Moses Cleaveland, with a party of Connecticut people, landed just inside the mouth of the Cuyahoga river and proceeded to lay out a town. The growth was very slow. In 1830 the first paper, the Cleaveland Advertiser, was published, and as the space for the name was too small, the printer had to leave out the "A," and the name has ever since been spelled "Cleveland," instead of the way its founder's name is spelled. The city has about 300,000 people now.

—It doesn't matter much whether sick headache, biliousness, indigestion and constipation are caused by neglect or by unavoidable circumstances; DeWitt's Little Early Risers will speedily cure them all. Davenport the Drugg st.

—Those who assert that this administration refuses to coin silver money are wrong. The mints are actively turning out silver dollars. At present they are running to their full capacity. About seven millions have been coined so far this year.

—Many a day's work is lost by the sick headache, caused by indigestion and stomach troubles. DeWitt's Little Early Risers are the most effectual pill for overcoming such difficulties. Davenport the Druggist.

—John Lochner, of the COURIER, is off on a little jaunt to Michigan City where he will rusticate for a day or so and then be at his post again. At least we know of no intention on the part of the authorities there to keep him longer. But the fact that Sheriff Stroh went up there on the same day gives the matter a look of uncertainty.

—Theories of cure may be discussed at length by physicians, but the sufferers want quick relief; and One Minute Cough Cure will give it to him. A safe cure for children. It is "the only harmless remedy that produces immediate results." Davenport the Druggist.

We have a large stock of Thomas Tedders and Rock Island Hay Loaders that we are selling cheap Brown, Culbertson & Boland.

—There are now good prospects of securing reduced rates on the railroads that enter Auburn for the matrimonial reunion which will occur here on Aug. 20th. The agents of the respective roads have reccommended one fare for the round trip at least.

—Hon. E. D. Hartman and his little son Hubert, start to-day on a trip of two weeks. They go to Peru, then to Lake Manitou, near Rochester, then to Indianapolis and possibly other points before their return.

—Dr. Chas. E. Miller will again be at F. J. Yesbera's jewelry store Monday, August 3. Those needing glasses and those who have had difficulty in getting, are especially invited to call.

—John Krontz, democratic candidate for surveyor, was here this week. He has not fully opened his campaign, but if we are not mistaken, it will be lively when he does get started.

—Geo. Weeks came down from Edon last evening on a business trip, and returns to-day. He left the family in the usual good health.

Mrs. Boullion, 222 Crane St. Writes:

Dayton, O., March 12, '96.—'My baby is two months old and from her birth has had severe attacks of wind colic. I tried almost everything, but nothing gave her any relief until I got Dr. Hand's Colic Cure. I have used two bottles and would not do without it. It surely is the best colic medicine ever made." Dr. Hand's Colic Cure and all of Dr. Hand's Remedies at all druggists, 25c. 1

What stops Neuralgia? Dr. Miles' Pain Pills.

Friday's Daily.

—Brown, Culbertson & Boland have just received a car load of window sash and doors.

—Mrs. J. G. Johnson and daughter, of Angola are the guests of Mr and Mrs. J. E. Ensley.

—S. C. Snyder came home last evening. He had been on a business trip at Rockford, Ill.

—There will be a picnic at Union Chapel a few miles east of town on Aug. 1. All persons are urged to be present.

—Big game of base ball at Lagrange July 31, in the afternoon, between Bryan and Lagrange teams.

—Mrs. Charlie Pommert and children and Mrs. Mary McEntarfer went up to Fremont to-day noon where friends will meet them. And they will spend a week visiting G. W. St. Clair and other relatives in Branch Co. Mich.

—Ft. Wayne Sentinel:—What is said to be the largest flow of gas yet discovered in the oil fields was drilled in Wednesday at Five Points, three miles from Montpelier. The flow is estimated at 5,000,000 cubic feet a day and the derrick is enveloped in a blue mist. The well was put down to sand by the Golden Rule Oil company, but it is said the lease expired before completion and the well passed into the hands of the drillers.

Ft. Wayne Sentinel:—Dixon Edgerton, the general agent for the state of the Blickensderfer Typewriter company, and well known in this city, has the following in the Indianapolis Sentinel: "I travel every quarter of the state and let me assure you that the money question is the all absorbing topic under discussion, and I find a great many recruits from the republican ranks in this movement for a double standard. Mr. Bryan seems an exceptional nominee. While my first choice was, Governor Matthews, I must say, his place cannot be better supplied than by the Hon. Wm. J. Bryan."

—Arrangements were yesterday completed between the American Bell Telephone Co., and the Steuben County Telephone Co., by which the latter's lines will be connected with the Central Union Telephone office at Auburn. This announcement gives Auburn teleponic connection with Ashley, Hudson, Pleasant Lake, Angola, Jamestown, Orland, Fremont, Ray, Clear Lake York Center and Lake James, adding greatly to the convenience and usefulness of the Central Union Companys Lines at this point. The Steuben Co lines are completed to Auburn and connections will be made at once.

Saturday's Daily.

—Rev. W. L. Meese and neices, Misses Edgington have moved into Dr. Matheny's residence on Main street.

—Mrs. I. M. Zent left over the Wabash this morning for Indianapolis where she will visit a week with friends.

—A fresh car load of buggy wheels arrived at the Kiblinger factory this week. That means work again in a short time.

—The Bryan Club meeting at Waterloo last evening was a success. J. M. Robinson was present and made a fine speech.

—S. C. Snyder left this morning for Logansport where he will attend to some business matters with one of their customers at that city.

—Mrs. Tom Sprott and children left on the noon train, for Toledo, where they will visit with Mr. and Mrs. F. E. Myers. The ladies are sisters.

Monday's Daily.

—Chris Ashelman came down from Toledo to-day on some business matter.

—Hi. Cupp has had a bad carbuncle on the back of his neck since July 1.

—P. F. Sharick, of Ashland, O., is here visiting with Phillip Fluke on West Seventh street.

—A. M. Miller and wife, of Hicksville, were guests over Sunday in the family of M. Kline.

—Frank Furnish is working at the Picker Restaurant this week in the absence of the proprietor who is attending the encampment at Indianapolis.

—David Luttman at Corunna, will sell his personal property and household goods at public auction on Saturday, August 1, at one o'clock. Remember the date.

—John H. Merica, now a resident of Allegan county, Michigan, was in town to-day. He is farming some, we believe, but is also a minister of the gospel, and we believe gives that most of his time.

—A letter from T. J. Saxton at Baldwinsville, N. Y. states that he will be home the last of this week. He has had a pleasant five weeks' visit among the friends in old Onondaga County. He adds that the regular visits of the Courier were as good as a letter from home.

—Hon. E. D. Hartman and his son Hubert, spent Sunday at Lake Wawassee, principally at Jones' summer resort hotel where they enjoyed themselves greatly. The lovely lakes and resorts up there are becoming more popular every year, for the people in this section.

—If you have ever seen a little child in the agony of summer complaint, you can realize the danger of the trouble and appreciate the value of instantaneous relief always afforded by DeWitt's Colic & Cholera Cure. For dysentery and diarrhoea it is a reliable remedy. We could not afford to recommend this as a cure unless it were a cure. Davenport the Druggist.

Dr. Miles' Pain Pills are guaranteed to stop Headache in 20 minutes. "One cent a dose."

Tuesday's Daily.

—Miss Anna Shoudel, of Jackson township left yesterday for Fort Wayne.

—There will be a game of ball at Waterloo Thursday afternoon between Auburn and Waterloo.

Rev. W. L. Meese is now located on South Main street first door south of Dr. Matheny's residence.

—The democrats of Garrett organized a fine Bryan club Saturday evening. There were also some speeches we believe including one by Mr. Moody.

—Lee Robbins is selling nice plums now. He says he will have twent-five or thirty bushels of them. Lee is proving to be a success as a farmer.

—Sheriff Stroh left over the Wabash this morning for Logansport where he took Mr. Rummel, of Spencerville. Mrs. Stroh also accompanied him to the asylum.

—Our grocerymen have found it necessary to do a cash business. Hebel Bros. have an ad in the DAILY to that effect now, and we understand others will do likewise.

—We see by the Hicksville Independent, that Manager J. C. Henry will soon be at home, and will have a first-class theater company billed for that town in a short time.

—Miss Bassor, of Chicago, is in the city, a guest in the family of Co. Supt. Merica. Miss Bassor and Miss Stella Merica were roommates while the latter was studying music in the city.

The Kendallville Sun, in copying our notice of wife-beater Beight, adds: "John is quite well knowns here and many will be sorry to learn that the prospects of his getting out of jail are so good."

—Olds Bros. have something new in hanging lamps. People who want the latest, and something nice should call at their store. A visit will convince you that they are leadesr in up to date china, glass and lamps.

Get Married Free!

Any Who Contemplate Marriage Should Wait till August 20.

It occurs to us that if any of the young people of DeKalb county contemplate getting married before August 20, they should change their previous arrangements and be married at the Matrimonial Reunion on the fair grounds on that date. Rev. Meese will perform the ceremony free of charge. The reunion will be largely attended. All Sunday schools in the county are especially invited to attend this gathering in a body. There can be no nicer grove found and the crowd will be large and all will enjoy a day's outing as well as being permitted to witness the grand march by those whom Rev. Meese has united in marriage during the past twenty-five years. To favor Rev. Mr. Meese, Wash Askew has decided to run buses to the ground to accommodate our town people, at 5 cents each way. Every possible effort is being made to accommodate the public at as little expense as possible. With reduced rates on the railroads the reunion will probably be one of the largest gatherings Auburn ever witnessed.

THE CANDIDATES.

The queer condition of our presidential tickets, is a subject of a good deal of comment and inquiry. The democratic national ticket is Bryan and Sewall; the silver republican is Bryan and Sewall; the populist is Bryan and Watson. All three desire the election of Bryan, but are divided on vice-president. The question is, Where are we at?" A brief discussion will perhaps assist us. As all voters know, we do not vote directly for president and vice-president. Their names are of no value on a ballot. The only names that count on a presidential ballot, are the electors. Of those, Indiana has fifteen—one for each congressional district and one for each U. S. senator. These fifteen names will be in the democratic tickets which is printed on the same big ballot as are the repulican and other tickets. The voter, whether democrat, populist or silver republican can vote for these democratic electors by stamping the rooster. But if the populists, at their state convention, put up a new set of fifteen electors, then that set will also be on the big ballot, and the voter stamps the "plow and hammer" votes for that entire set. Or he can stamp the rooster and vote for the democratic electors. Or by not stamping the device on either, he can go through both lists and stamp such names on each as he prefers. And what is true of Indiana, is true of the 44 other states. So it will be seen that the work of the populist convention at St. Louis, was not final, but that all depends on the various state conventions and the electoral tickets they make.

ELECTRIC BITTERS.

Electric Bitters is a medicine suited for any person, but perhaps more generally needed in the Spring, when the languid exhausted feeling prevails, when the liver is torpid and sluggish and the need of a tonic and alterative is felt. A prompt use of this medicine has often averted long and perhaps fatal bilious fevers. No medicine will act more surely in counteracting and freeing the system from the malarial poison. Headache, Indigestion Constipation, Dizziness yield to Electric Bitters. Only fifty cents per bottle at Robbins & McCord's Drug Store.

B. & O. Excursions.

On Sunday of each week the Baltimore & Ohio R. R. will excursion tickets to local stations at rate of one fare for the round trip, good going and returning on date of sale only.

For further information call on or address nearest B. & O. Ticket Agent, or L. S. Allen, Ass't Gen'l Pass'r Agent, Chicago, Ill. 28-31

Rounded Up

St. Joe, July 26, (Special)—A stranger hailing from Spencerville said to be a traveling optician came into town Saturday evening and proceeded to do up the town, in other words was going to paint the town red. After making repeated threats of what he would do, he with young Patterson who was sent to the pen a year or two ago, got in a buggy and went driving up and down the streets, all the while using the contents of a bottle of whiskey which it is said they procured at Spencerville before coming here. Constable Irvin was put on their track and with a posse of citzens proceeded to round them up, which was done in fine shape after a little battle. Patterson made a run east on the R. R., and from reports from over east is yet running. The other who gave his name as F. B. Strouse of Elkhart was arrested on two different warrants and pleading guilty to both was fined $3 and costs on each, amounting to $10.05 which was paid and was discharged, a much wiser if not better man.

LITTLE MAID O' DREAMS

Never dreamed of anything so good for the human race as Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin. So pleasant to take and so potent as a cure for constipation, indigestion and sick headache, three of the greatest troubles that flesh is heir to. In 10c, 50c and $1 00 sizes of Davenport, the druggist. 2731

Sensible

The idea of making Gov. Matthews the next Senator from Indiana, as advanced by a recent article in the COURIER seems to be favored everywhere. And republicans are taking a similar sensible view of the matter. They see it is not wise to take up a millionaire like Fairbanks, who has nothing to recommend him but his wealth. So if they get the legislature, they will likely choose ex-president Harrison, who is an able and clean man. If the democrats win, they have a man equally good in Matthews

Cattle Killed.

Monday's Daily.

During the severe electrical storm this morning at 5:30, the lightning struck and killed a lot of fine Jersey cattle, belonging to John Rundels two miles east of Huntertown. There were thirteen of them, and the bolt struck a black oak tree standing near them, and all were killed. Among them were ten milk cows.

Tuesday's Daily.

That is the way the attorneys mark a case of assault and battery. August Kugler this morning had Christ Heilman arrested and brought into 'Squire Walter's court for assault with intent to batter. Heilman plead guilty and had to pay $1 and costs. And even this may not be the end. The parties live in Fairfield.

B. & O. Changes.

The B. & O. changed time Sunday on two of its trains. No. 5 going west in the morning, goes nearly two hours earlier, having changed from 6:17 to 4:25. No. 7 going east in the evening, now passes the Junction at 8:05 instead of 7:35 as before. The reason these changes were made, is to accommodate roads west of Chicago. It was found that No. 5 did not reach the city in time to put her passengers on the trains going west and northwest over the lines friendly to the B. & O. And No. 7 coming east, left too soon to get passengers from the west and northwest, going to points in the east. The change is a little worse for Auburn people, but will no doubt be a benefit to the road and its interests.

BRYAN'S LIFE STORY

Path He Has Trodden from Obscurity to Fame.

MAN OF THE PEOPLE.

Early Days and Public Services of Our Candidate.

Democracy's Nominee a Man of Wonderful Brilliancy and Magnetic Personality—His Home Life and Family—Mrs. Bryan His Mascot—She Is a Lawyer Because Her Husband Is One, and Studies Politics Because He Does—Wept for Joy in the Convention.

WILLIAM J. BRYAN, OF NEBRASKA,
Next President of the United States.

William Jennings Bryan, the Democratic standard bearer, was born in Salem, Marion County, Illinois, March 19, 1860. The name Salem is noted in the history of Illinois, for it was in the village of New Salem that Abraham Lincoln passed the years of his young manhood. It is no less curious to note that Bryan was born in the same year that Lincoln was elected to the presidency of the United States. He sprang from Virginia ancestry. His father, Silas L. Bryan, was born at Culpeper Court House, but removed to and was long a resident of Illinois. He was a judge of the Circuit Court when William was born. He served as judge for twelve years, when he resigned. In 1872 the elder Bryan ran for Congress on the Greeley ticket, but was defeated by the narrow plurality of 240 votes. He died in 1880. Mr. Bryan's mother was Maria Elizabeth Jennings. She was born in Marion County, Illinois, where she lived all her life. She died very recently, after a protracted illness.

Young Bryan received his education in the public schools of Salem and at Illinois College in Jacksonville, where he was graduated in 1881. Here he was prominent in every phase of college life during his course. He was a good debater, but was even more famous as an all-round athlete. He was one of the best baseball players the college ever had, and it was said that he pitched as good ball as any man ever at the college. Then he was a good batter, who could be depended upon to get at least a base hit nearly every time he came to the bat. In field sports he was also active, and he holds to this day the record for the hop, skip and jump. Several years after he left the college he attended its games, and, although not in training, outskipped the younger men in several field events. To this day the college takes pride in his literary and athletic achievements alike, and when the Sigma Phi Literary Society thereof held its triennial reunion last June during commencement week, he was chosen to be the orator of the occasion. His speech was a masterly effort, and delivered with that same splendid eloquence which captivated the Chicago convention.

While at the Illinois college, Mr. Bryan met Miss Mary E. Baird, the daughter of a merchant in Perry, Ill. She was a student in the Annex, and graduated the same year with Mr. Bryan, and, like him, carried off the highest honors of her class. His eloquence stampeded her love. At a country school house, in those days she listened to his recitation one Friday afternoon when the "Soldier of the Legion" was enjoying the early stages of its popularity in provincial oratory. The foundation of a pretty romance was laid. The young people met frequently. In the course of time young Bryan proposed. That was the sweetest speech he ever made, according to the girl who was made happy by its delivery.

GRACE BRYAN.

Bryan moved from Salem to Jacksonville. He was poor. She said that she would wait. And she did. The struggling young lawyer finally saved enough money to pave the way for a marriage certificate and a humble home. He had meantime pursued a study of law in Chicago, where he was a student in the office of Judge Trumbull, afterward being graduated at the Union College of Law. Admitted to the bar in 1884, after a brief experience in the office of Brown, Kirby & Russell, at Jacksonville, he commenced the independent practice of his chosen profession, following the same with good success for three years. His "first case" is yet a reminiscent detail with his old associates. He was sent to the local justice court to look after a suit involving $20 or so which had arisen between two farmers. He was as careful in preparing his argument as if he had been arguing before the United States Supreme Court. He won the case, and Mr. Brown, solicitor of the Alton Railroad Company, recalls with enthusiasm the young lawyer's beaming face, as he reported at the office, all smiles, and shouted, "I have won my first case!"

"I remember him as a thoroughly upright, frank, straightforward young man," says one of his associates of those days. "He was eminent in debate, eloquent and forceful. We used to think that he was somewhat apt to rush to conclusions, but he was a deep thinker, and, as I see it now, he was generally right in his views and always some years ahead of his time. Even at that time he was talking low tariff; just as he began to talk free silver more than three years ahead of the crowd. Among other arguments he used were these: When Alexander was the ruler of the world he kept all ports open and freed the slaves. The last fifty years of England's success have been largely due to free trade. Those views were fixed in Bryan's head, and I have never heard of his going back upon any one of them. Any business intrusted to his care always met with prompt attention, and his efficiency and reliability were often the subject of comment."

His most noticeable personal characteristic was his loving disposition. He had a winning smile and a kind word for all. This, with his pleasant manner and his personal magentism, made him a universal favorite in Jacksonville. Everybody in the city was his friend. He was a member of the Presbyterian Church and a leader in the movements of the young people in the congregation. He used to walk to church every Sunday with his wife and her blind father. His devotion to his afflicted father-in-law was touching. He was assiduous in his attentions to him, and both were happy, the one in the companionship and kindness of the other and the other beaming with affection for his wife's parent.

While in Jacksonville Mr. Bryan was very active in politics. His labors were always in behalf of some one else, however, and he was never a candidate for office. Then as now he was a Democrat.

Finally, Mr. Bryan thought of going West and picked out Nebraska as his destination. He felt that a wider field would open before him, and in this he found his convictions correct.

In 1887 the young couple moved to Lincoln, Neb., and there Mr. Bryan entered upon his profession and also engaged in politics. At a bound he sprang into prominence, and his silver tongue was an incalculable re-enforcement to the Democratic party, long accustomed to defeat. He gave life and force to the tenets of Democracy and he was recognized as a leader of men.

Possessed of a magentic personality and a tongue of velvet he soon made a hit in county politics. Then his fame spread to State politics, and finally he secured the Congressional nomination through the efforts of Edgar Howard and others. His wife was ever at his side whispering words of encouragement and fanning his ambition. She was the angel of his campaign. He was elected, and when his famous speech on the tariff in 1891 won him the sobriquet of "the boy orator of the Platte," the same modest woman sat in the gallery. Mrs. Bryan has always witnessed his greatest triumphs.

RUTH AND WILLIAM BRYAN.

W. J. BRYAN'S RESIDENCE, LINCOLN, NEB.

It was Bryan's good fortune to be nominated for Congress in the year of tidal wave Democracy, and after a contest of unparalleled brilliancy he was elected over his Republican opponent in a district normally and heavily Republican by a majority of 6,700.

In Congress his reputation as a debater preceded him, and he was appointed by Speaker Crisp to a place on the Ways and Means Committee. This gave him a splendid opportunity to be heard on the tariff question, and he soon gained the ear as well as the applause of the House as an orator and debater.

In 1892 he was again elected and in the Fifty-third Congress made his reputation national as an orator, thinker and statesman. In 1894 he refused the nomination for the lower house, but aspired to the Senate, and was nominated at the Democratic State convention in Nebraska for that office. He canvassed the State and had two joint debates—one at Omaha and one at Lincoln—with John M. Thurston, the Republican candidate, which attracted attention beyond the limits of the State. But 1894 was not a propitious year for the Democrats. The Republicans carried the Legislature, and Mr. Thurston was elected Senator. Since that time Mr. Bryan has been lecturing on his favorite themes of the tariff and the free coinage of silver in almost every State of the Union, and he has thus added to his reputation as an orator. For a time he was the editor of the Omaha World-Herald, but the editorial tripod was not as congenial to him as the stump and the platform, and he did not long remain in the sanctum.

The events of his life are not numerous, and consequently there is not much to relate of him of things performed. Whatever he has been called upon to do he has done with all the earnestness of his nature. As Chief Justice Fuller once said: "The republic is opportunity," for it affords an opening to every man who has it in him to make his mark. Mr. Bryan has profited by all his chances, and by none better than that of the second day of the convention, when he made the speech that swept his audience like a torrent and gave him the Presidential nomination. It was one of the few instances of matchless and unconquerable speech that the world has known. James Otis in Boston, Patrick Henry in Richmond, and Fisher Ames on Jay's treaty are like parallels in American history.

Mr. Bryan during his service in Congress introduced over a half dozen petitions against the opening of the World's Fair on Sunday, or the sale of intoxicants on the ground. He attempted to aid his State by introducing bills for the erection of public buildings at Lincoln, Plattsmouth and South Omaha; he also attempted to have a branch mint established at Omaha. Bills were also introduced to place salt, lumber, barb wire, and binding twine on the free list. Another measure which attracted attention was a bill for the election of United States Senators by direct vote of the people.

His personal appearance is attractive and impressive. He is tall, with a great depth of chest, a back as flat as a board and admirable proportions. His complexion is swarthy, his eyes are dark and what is called "piercing," his hair is jet black and slightly worn away in front, accentuating the scope of his forehead; his nose is aquiline, very; his mouth extraordinarily large, but handsome, strong and sensitive; chin, broad, square and immense; the whole head poised like that of a Grecian statue. He looks you squarely in the face and never averts his gaze. Yet he does not by any means convey the impression that he is aggressive. He rather tells you that no man in all the world has more self-reliance. He leaves you the notion he could stand alone when all was falling about him. He is an oak. An indefatigable worker, his labor goes on twelve, fourteen, eighteen hours, if necessary, and he never tires. His stock of vitality is inexhaustible.

He is the youngest candidate that was ever named for the Presidency by any party in all United States history, being little more than one year past the constitutional age. His reputation is spotless, and the American people will have a Presidential campaign void of all distracting personalities, in which they may consider the tremendous issues involved seriously and dispassionately, as becomes a great and a free people.

The Bryan home in Lincoln is not a sumptuous one, but comfort and happiness are always within its walls. There are three children—Ruth, aged 11; William, 5 years old; and Grace, the baby, 3 years of age. Mrs. Bryan is a good-looking woman, 33 years of age, medium build and height, and quiet in her mannerisms. A wealth of dark brown hair frames a face of intellectual attractiveness. Her dress is simplicity personified. She is a woman of literary accomplishments, well posted on the issues of the day. Her home life is an ideal one. She cares comparatively little for society. Devotion to husband, children and home are her prime characteristics. Her confidence in Mr. Bryan's future has always been his guiding star. No one ever heard of her appearing in evening dress during their Washington life. It is not thought she ever possessed a low-cut gown nor a dress with silk linings, and Bryan surely never has owned a full dress suit.

When the Bryan boom for President was launched in Nebraska, Mrs. Bryan at once decided to accompany her husband. With just a bit of feminine superstition she reminded him that in every instance where she had attended assemblages in which he was interested he had won. When she remained away he always lost, and upon such occasions she invariably comforted him in the hour of defeat.

In the recent national committee meeting, when the Nebraska delegation contest was pending, she was not in the hotel where the case was decided. Bryan's enemies won. The next day she was a silent spectator at the Coliseum. The committee report was reversed and she waved her handkerchief with a greeting of joy to the Bryan silver delegates when the convention gave them the seats which her husband's political foes occupied the preceding day.

With a loyalty made eternal by a love that has never faltered, she saw the dream of her life shaping itself into a reality. Her husband now had an opportunity to address a convention. She knew that in that array of orators he would rise like a giant and that the standards would soon be at his feet. She knew that if he would open his mouth the convention would do the rest, and it did.

"I will be in the crowd to-day, William," she said, cheeringly, at their hotel on the morning of that eventful Thursday in Chicago. "Remember I am your mascot. Do your best. I have prayed for your nomination and it will come if you speak to-day." Bryan made the effort of his life. He caught the eye of his wife once during the delivery of his great speech. It was just before the climax. He read his political destiny in that one short glance. He knew that the speech was the passport to the nomination. The mascot nodded approvingly, and the next instant the convention was on its feet to verify the telegraphy of love which flashed the message of cheer from wife to husband and kindled the spark which electrified 20,000 people under one roof.

The muscles of the mocking bird's larynx are larger in proportion to the size of the bird than those of any other creature.

GEMS IN BRYAN'S GREAT CONVENTION SPEECH

BRYAN DELIVERING HIS GREAT SPEECH.

We say not one word against those who live upon the Atlantic coast; but those hardy pioneers who braved all the dangers of the wilderness, who have made the desert to blossom as the rose—those pioneers away out there, rearing their children near to nature's heart, where they can mingle their voices with the voices of the birds—out there where they have erected schoolhouses for the education of their young and churches where they praise their Creator and cemeteries where sleep the ashes of their dead—are as deserving of the consideration of this party as any people in this country.

We do not come as aggressors. Our war is not a war of conquest. We are fighting in the defense of our homes, our families, and prosperity.

* * *

We have petitioned and our petitions have been scorned. We have entreated and our entreaties have been disregarded. We have begged and they have mocked, and our calamity came.

* * *

We beg no longer; we entreat no more; we petition no more. We defy them!

* * *

When we have restored the money of the Constitution all other necessary reforms will be possible, and until that is done, there is no reform that can be accomplished.

* * *

You come to us and tell us that the great cities are in favor of the gold standard. I tell you that the great cities rest upon these broad and fertile prairies. Burn down your cities and leave our farms and your cities will spring up again as if by magic. But destroy our farms and the grass will grow in the streets of every city in this country.

* * *

If they dare to come out and in the open defend the gold standard as a good thing we shall fight them to the uttermost, having behind us the producing masses of this nation and the world. Having behind us the commercial interests and the laboring interests and all the toiling masses, we shall answer their demands for a gold standard by saying to them you shall not press down upon the brow of labor this crown of thorns. You shall not crucify mankind on a cross of gold.

CAREER OF SEWALL.

STORY OF THE LIFE OF BRYAN'S RUNNING MATE.

Arthur Sewall Descended from One of the Oldest Families in America and Head of a Long Established Maine Shipbuilding Firm.

Bears an Honored Name.

Arthur J. Sewall, of Bath, Me., the Democratic nominee for Vice President, is 61 years old, but is rugged and well preserved and might pass for a man a decade younger. He prides himself on his descent from an old and honorable family—one of the oldest in America, in fact—and he points to a business career devoted to the maintenance of an industry in which America was supreme until the fortunes of war intervened to nearly destroy it. Following in the footsteps of his father, he has for many years been a successful shipbuilder and has striven to restore the United States to supremacy in that industry.

MRS. SEWALL.

Mr. Sewall believes the demonetization of silver in 1873 was a financial mistake, and in spite of his wealth he has been an ardent advocate of free silver for the last four years. He has been prominent in politics for many years, but has never held any political office. Several years ago he was the candidate of the Democratic members of the Maine Legislature for United States Senator, but as there was no possibility of his election the incident was little more than an acknowledgment of the indebtedness of his party and a testimony of its admiration

The grandfather of Bryan's running mate was William D. Sewall, who established shipbuilding yards at Bath in 1823. He was succeeded by his sons under the firm name of E. & A. E. Sewall. The present firm is Arthur J. Sewall & Co. The Democratic nominee has associated with him his nephew, Samuel S. Sewall, and his son, William D. Sewall. From the days of its first boat, the little Diana, to the steel ship Dirigo, launched in 1894, this firm has led the country in designs for merchant vessels. For seventy-three years its private signal, a white S on a blue field, has fluttered from the main spar of some of the stanchest, finest and swiftest vessels in the merchant marine.

ARTHUR SEWALL, OF MAINE.

MR. SEWALL'S RESIDENCE.

In politics Mr. Sewall has been a lifelong Democrat. For eight years he has been Maine's representative on the Democratic National Committee. Ever since the greenback craze he has been a close student of finance and for a number of years has been an avowed free silverite. In 1893 he was an unsuccessful candidate for United States Senator.

Mr. Sewall's wife, to whom he was married in 1859, is a daughter of the late Charles Crooker, a noted ship builder. She was educated abroad, is a woman of artistic temperament and natural refinement, has traveled much, is proficient in several languages, has received diplomas for work in amateur photography and would grace Washington society, yet her husband's nomination has displeased her, for the glare of publicity has always been detestable to her. She has rare social attainments and lives in a beautiful mansion. The Sewalls have two children, the elder of whom, Harold, has attained some notoriety in politics.

Far-Seeing Scotchwoman.

It wou d probably take many generations of undesired and undesirable adversity to train Americans into the far-seeing thriftiness of the Scotch. An illustration of this thrift is contained in t e story of a Scotchwoman who had been promised a present of a new bonnet by a lady. Before she made the purchase, the lady called and asked t e good woman:

"Would you rather have a felt or a straw bonnet, Mrs. Wilson?"

Weel," said Mrs. Wilson, "I think I'll tak' a strae ane; it'll ma be be a mouthfu' to the coo when I'm done w 'it."

With many readers, brilliancy of style passes for affluence of thought. They mistake buttercups in the grass for immeasurable gold mines under ground.

OH! WHAT A RELIEF.

"I suffered with terrible pains in my left ovary and womb. My back ached all the time.

"I had kidney trouble badly. Doctors prescribed for me, and I followed their advice, but found no relief until I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. Oh! what a relief it is, not to have that tired feeling day after day, in the morning as much as at night after a hard day's work, and to be free from all pains caused by Ovarian and Womb troubles. I cannot express my gratitude. I hope and pray that other suffering women will realize the truth and importance of my statement, and accept the relief that is sure to attend the use of the Pinkham Medicine."—MRS. KILLED ON THE FARM.

A STARTLING RECORD OF TERRIBLE CASUALTIES.

Dangers Attending Life on a Farm Seem Greater than Those Surrounding Work on the Railroad or in a Powder Mill.

Die in the Hayfield.

Fatalities, mishaps and odd incidents have always seemed to attend unduly the gathering of the hay crop, says a western New York correspondent of the New York Sun, but they seem to have been unusually numerous in their occurrence this season. Following is the record of the hayfield in this respect for but little more than a week in Chautauqua and adjacent counties alone:

Russell Waterhouse, aged 77, a leading farmer of Arkwright, Chautauqua County, was helping his son Thomas in the hayfield. They were loading hay. The elder Waterhouse stood on the top of the load, distributing the hay as his son pitched it up. A thunder storm was coming up, and this was the last load to be hauled in. Suddenly a terrific clap of thunder broke so sharp and near that it frightened the horses. They sprang forward, jerking the wagon so that Farmer Waterhouse was thrown from the load to the ground. He struck on his head. His neck was broken and he died instantly.

Farmer Thomas Reynolds needed help one day last week to gather a field of hay before it was damaged by a coming storm, on his farm at Sullivan, Pa. Some men were engaged on another part of his farm in a job of sawing with a portable sawmill. He sent his son to request the men to suspend their work at the mill and hasten down to help with the hay. One of the operators at the mill, Fred Holcomb, aged 21, in his hurry to respond to the call, stumbled and fell in front of the saw. Before he could regain his feet or the bystanders could aid him he was cut to pieces by the saw, his head, an arm, and both legs being severed from his body.

Two fatal accidents occurred on the Brush farm, near Darien Centre. John Schrader, the hired man, fell from a load of hay with his pitchfork in his hand. In some way he fell on the tines, which passed entirely through his body. He lived but a short time. Before the news of this casualty reached the owner of the farm he was mowing hay in his orchard with a mowing machine. His 12-year-old son was near by. Farmer Brush called to him to come and hold up the low-hanging bough of a tree so he could drive under it. The boy held it up, but stood so close that as the machine passed him the knives an that end of the cutter bar struck him, cutting off both his feet at the ankle. He died three hours later.

Ethel Rice, aged 9, was watching her brother, John, run a mowing machine in a field near the house. John stopped the horses where she stood, dismounted from the machine, and told Ethel to hand him the wrench, which lay near. The little girl got the wrench, and stepped up near the machine, getting between the cutting forks, and handed it to her brother. As he was reaching for it the horses started. The quickly shifting knives caught the child and cut off both her legs near the knees.

At Bedford, Pa., on Thursday, Joseph Bell, aged 73, was at work in his hay field. Levi Shay was driving by and stopped to talk to Farmer Bell, who walked over to the fence.

"Might better let your hay rot down in the field," said Shay. "It won't bring $3 a ton the way this country is being run."

"Three dollars a ton!" exclaimed Farmer Bell, excitedly. "Why, that would drive us to the poorhouse."

"Certainly it would, and it will," declared Shay.

Farmer Bell stood with a disturbed look on his face a moment, staggered forward and fell heavily to the ground. Shay, supposing Bell had fainted from effects of the heat, jumped from his wagon to help him, but the farmer was dead.

Awful Work of Yellow Jackets.

George Ring, a hired man on the farm of William Smith, his father-in-law, near Alton, was riding a mowing machine one day last week, when one of the horses stepped in a yellow jacket's nest. Instantly the irritable occupants of the nest came out in a swarm and stung the horses, which, frenzied with the pain of the poisonous stingers, ran away. Ring was thrown from his seat on the mower, and although he fortunately fell out of the way of the knives, he struck a spot where a patch of elder brush had been cut, at the edge of the field, leaving stiff, sharp butts standing. When other men working in the field hurried to his aid they found him impaled on the stubbles, one having been forced through the fleshy part of his left thigh and one through his right shoulder. One ear was torn from his head, his lower jaw was broken, and his body badly lacerated by the jagged elder stubble. The full extent of Ring's injuries was not known nor could he be extricated from his awful situation for ten minutes after the arrival of the men. A horde of yellow jackets which followed him as he was thrown from the machine, were stinging him fiercely on every bit of flesh exposed, and had to be fought away and killed before the men could rescue the unfortunate Ring, who was unconscious and uttering heart-rending cries of agony. His rescuers were terribly stung by the yellow jackets before they could get Ring away. He was carried to the farm house. It is thought that, notwithstanding his frightful injuries, he will recover.

The frenzied horses, crazed by the stinging of the yellow jackets, dashed madly across the field and in among a group of young chestnut trees. There the mowing machine was smashed to pieces. Along the edge of the field opposite the one where Ring was thrown and ten feet below it runs Cutler creek. The horses, freed from the machine, ran straight for that side of the field, and plunged down the steep bank into the creek.

The water is wide and deep at that spot, and, handicapped by their harness and being hitched together, both horses were drowned. It is probable that they would have had to be killed at any rate, for they had been blinded by the stinging of the yellow jackets, and their bodies were swollen to an immense size by the poison.

VICTIMS OF THE SEA.

Thirty Thousand People Drowned by the Tidal Wave in Japan.

Thirty thousand souls hurried to eternity; thirty thousand lives blotted out in five minutes; probably the same number of emaciated sufferers stalking hungry-eyed about the ruins of their former homes—that, briefly, is the story of the great wave that swept up from the sea and engulfed the coast of the island of Yezo, Japan. Following is the summary of the results of the disaster:

Iwate—25,413 deaths, 1,244 wounded, 5,030 houses swept away or destroyed.

Miyagi—2,557 deaths, 505 wounded, 688 houses swept away or destroyed.

Aomori—346 deaths, 243 wounded, 484 houses swept away or destroyed.

Totals—28,416 deaths, 1,992 wounded, 6,202 houses swept away or destroyed.

Of various towns and villages that were visited by the calamity Kamaishi and Taro suffered most. In the former 4,700 out of 6,557 people were drowned, while in the latter 2,655 out of 3,747 were killed.

It was shortly before 8 o'clock on the night of Monday, June 15, that dwellers near the coast heard a strange sound that came out from the sea, swelling on the calm evening air. The dreaded tsunami (sea wave) was not altogether new to some of those who were so soon to become its victims. But it is asserted that the people were exceedingly slow to realize the immensity of the danger that threatened them. "Tsunami!" cried a terror-stricken fisherman, and "Tsunami!" passed the echoing wail swiftly from man to man until the silent fishing hamlets rang with the cry. Mad with terror that lent speed to their flying feet, the dwellers forsook their frail, thatched huts, and rushed for the bluffs topping the sleeping villages.

Some of the first to flee gained places of safety, saw the phosphorescent waters clamor and toss timbers and human beings almost at their feet, and heard them sullenly retreat with their ghastly burden. Others caught by the sea and beaten most cruelly by the debris which it bore on its crest were yet left behind when it withdrew. But by far the most were swallowed up and their poor bodies are now only being thrown back on land.

The town of Kamaisni, situated a few miles from the iron mines of that name, was almost wiped out, only a few houses standing on high ground behind the town being spared. In this town 4,700 persons, out of a total population of 6,557, lost their lives; 500 were injured; 1,080 out of 1,213 houses were destroyed. Taro was a village of 2,500 population. Three hundred persons escaped from the catastrophe. At this point the wave appears to have been most destructive; some of the survivors declare it to have been eighty feet high, and the marks left on the rising grounds show it to have been of such a height that it is a marvel any human beings survive. The loss of life would have been greater, but for the fact that over a hundred of the Taro fishermen were at sea and knew naught of the disaster till they returned. Owing to the destruction of the telegraph lines along the coast it was not till late next morning that news of the catastrophe began to spread, and for three days it was all but impossible to afford official aid to the survivors.

Meanwhile the weather had grown warmer. Decomposition of the bodies had set in and it began to be a dreadful experience to venture in the vicinity of those spots where formerly there had been human habitations. But, worse than the awful scenes to which one could never become accustomed, in passing near the ruined houses was the spectacle of groups of swollen once-human forms rocking to and fro on the sea almost within reach of the shore, while on the beach itself other similar awful objects were rolled over and over in rows by each succeeding wave as it reached the strand. There can be no exaggeration of this frightful calamity or of the never-to-be forgotten scenes that have followed and are yet coming in its wake. It has been found extremely difficult to secure laborers to assist in locating, recovering and decently interring the dead, and the gravest fears are entertained that disease will be bred by the presence of so many decaying bodies.

It would be idle to discuss the causes of this extraordinary visitation. It may have originated in some tremendous volcanic outburst far away in the Pacific ocean, or it may have been caused by a displacement of the ocean bed on the higher edge of the Tuscarora Deep, which was discovered by Admiral Belknap in the Tuscarora, and stretches a mighty abyss, five and one-third miles deep, off the Japan coast. Sea waves have invaded Japan before, but never with such disastrous results. It is well within the memory of those still alive that in 1854 the harbor of Shimoda was visited by three huge waves, which destroyed many lives and much shipping, leaving the Russian frigate Diana a total wreck. Moreover, in 1892, a small wave which fortunately wrought little destruction, was experienced in parts of the very regions that have now been devastated.

The Emperor and Empress promptly gave 14,000 yen, to be devoted to the relief of the sufferers, and foreigners and Japanese are subscribing to funds started for a similar purpose.

FULL BINS FOR FARMERS.

Country's Corn Crop Promises to Equal that of Last Year.

Information regarding the growing corn crop has been received at the Department of Agriculture in Washington. There is every indication now that the crop of the country will equal the enormous crop of last year, which was 2,151,139,000 bushels. That was the largest crop the United States has produced for many years. The crop of 1892 had only been 1,212,000,000 bushels, and it was but a trifle more in 1893 and 1892. In 1891 it reached beyond 2,000,000,000 bushels.

The extent of the corn crop of the United States this year is about 1,000,000 acres less than it was last year. Then it was 82,000,000 acres. In 1894 it was only 76,000,000. The average acreage in the principal corn States is reported as follows for the two years:

	1896.	1895.
Ohio	106	104
Michigan	106	106
Indiana	103	104
Illinois	103	105
Iowa	97	106
Missouri	99	107
Kansas	105	117
Nebraska	102	107
Texas	83	112
Tennessee	94	107
Kentucky	97	102

The official method of the Government for communicating the state of growing crops to the public is to take a basis of 100 as a reasonable standard of excellence. Averages in excess are exceptionally good, and averages below 100 become less encouraging the lower they go. With this explanation the statements of the officials of the Agricultural Department become plain to those outside the Board of Trade. The reports received justify the following estimates of the average condition of the crop in the leading corn States, which are given alongside the averages for July, 1895:

	1896.	1895.
Ohio	106	91
Michigan	106	91
Indiana	111	95
Illinois	98	92
Iowa	94	105
Kentucky	97	96
Missouri	81	109
Kansas	102	104
Nebraska	103	95
Texas	93	118
Tennessee	90	98

For the entire country the present average is 92.4, against 99.3 in July, 1895.

The condition of the entire crop of winter wheat throughout the United States is 75.6, against 65.8 in July, 1895, distributed as follows:

	1896.	1895.
New York	70	78
Pennsylvania	70	88
Kentucky	64	85
Ohio	70	60
Michigan	73	69
Indiana	66	52
Illinois	80	59
Missouri	75	68
Kansas	75	42
California	100	82
Oregon	95	95
Washington	100	93

The reports received by the department in a general way on all crops are encouraging. This ought to be a prosperous year for farmers in most sections of the country, unless some great calamity befalls the harvest. Generally poor condition of fruit throughout the country is announced in the agricultural report. Apples declined in condition from 71 to 64.6 during June. The peach crop promises to be of medium proportions. During the past month a fall of 12.9 points has taken place, leaving the general average now 51.8.

LINCOLN'S OVATION TO BRYAN.

Big Demonstration in His Home Town—Reception at the State House.

Amidst an uproar of booming cannon, pealing church bells, screaming steam whistles and the shouts of 20,000 people, Wm. J. Bryan, the Democratic nominee for President, entered Lincoln, the capital city of Nebraska, his home. It was an ovation the like of which the people of that part of the country never before witnessed. Half the people of the city, men, women and children, were at the depot to welcome him home. It was a nonpartisan reception, for both Democrats and Republicans participated in it. The Mayor of the city, the City Council and distinguished citizens of every political belief were at the train. As far as the eye could reach were thronged streets, crowded windows and enthusiastic shouters on the roofs of the houses. There were bands of music, men carrying banners with mottoes complimentary to the Democratic leader and flags and bunting hung from the fronts of the business houses and dwellings. Even the newsboys crying the evening papers wore Bryan caps and thousands of people blew tin horns or rang cow bells. When the reception was over Mr. Bryan went to a platform erected at the north end of the State House, where he addressed what is said to have been the largest congregation of people ever assembled in Lincoln.

Gutta-Percha.

Gutta-percha heated in hot water to about 100 degrees Fahrenheit becomes plastic and will take a fine impression with light pressure. When gutta-perch is soaked in benzine or naptha it becomes swollen, and, if it is then di ped in hot water, it becomes so plastic that it may be used with safety on very fragile and delicate objects. It is specially adapted to electrotyping.

"I like the small package of Pearline," a lady says; "it lasts two weeks and does two washings." Then she admits that she has been using soap with her Pearline. Now this is all unnecessary. If you don't put in enough Pearline to do the work easily and alone, you bring Pearline down to the level of soap, which means hard work and rubbing. If you use enough Pearline, the soap is a needless expense, to say the least. Use Pearline alone, just as directed, and you'll have the most thoroughly economical washing.

Beware Peddlers and some unscrupulous grocers will tell you, "this is as good as" or "the same as Pearline." IT'S FALSE—Pearline is never peddled; if your grocer sends you an imitation, be honest—send it back. 505 JAMES PYLE, New York.

Obituary.

Mary Townley Shugers was born in Shelby, Co. Ohio, August 17, 1843, and departed this life at her home near Auburn, Ind, July 15, 1896; her age being 52 years, 10 month and 28 days.

John Shugers and Mary Townley were united in marriage July 8, 1860, since which time they have ever lived happily in their home. To them were born five children, Cory, Aldy, who died Aug. 11, 1865, Frank, George and Mrs. Della Leedy.

Mrs. Shugers was much beloved by all who knew her. She was a kind, faithful mother, wife, and neighbor. She leaves a husband, four children, three grand children, and a large number of friends and relatives to mourn her loss. On march 3, 1877, she united with the Presbyterian church of Auburn. Her home and family life was very happy. She enjoyed company and many can bear testimony that it was always a pleasure to visit this home that has now been broken. Funeral services were conducted at the home July 19, by Rev. F. C. Colvin. Her remains were deposited in Evergreen, there to await the final resurrection.

CARD OF THANKS.

We wish to thank all our neighbors and friends for constant and neighborly assistance and sympathy shown through the long sickness of wife and mother.

Summer Complaint.

Last summer one of our grand children was sick with a severe bowel trouble. Our doctor's remedies had failed, then we tried Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhœa Remedy, which gave very speedy relief. We regard it as the best remedy ever put on the market for bowel complaints—Mrs. E. G. Gregory, Frederickstown, Mo. This certainly is the best remedy ever put on the market for dysentary, summer complaint, colic and cholera infantum in children. It never fails to give prompt relief when used in reasonable time and the plain printed directions are followed. Many mothers have expressed their sincere gratitude for the cures it has effected. Matrimonial Reunion.

And a Picnic In Which All May Participate

There are reunions but Rev. W. L. Meese proposes the latest novelty in this line, which is a reunion of all those now living whom he has united in marriage since he was licensed to perform such ceremonies. The reunion will take place in the beautiful grove on the fair ground east of Auburn, on Thursday, August 20, 1896. The reunion is to partake of the nature of a picnic, and all are requested to bring well filled baskets. There will be singing, speech-making and other entertainments to make all feel that with Rev. Meese's subjects "marriage has not been a failure." While everybody is most cordially invited to attend and to participate in this novel reunion, the friends of all the couples married and of Rev. Meese are urgently requested to do so. It is to be hoped that the press and the clergy of the county will give their hearty support. The grove is one of the most beautiful. A well of good water is within a hundred feet of where the largest picnic ever assembled in the county will meet. More than three hundred stalls on the fair ground can be used for horses.

Any further information can be obtained by addressing Rev. W. L. Meese Auburn, Indiana.

The Prison North.

The Courier Reporter Pays a visit to that College of Criminals.

A visit to the Northern Prison located at Michigan City on the south end of Lake Michigan is well worth anybody's time and the small expense connected. The COURIER reporter left for that city Wednesday noon and it happened that Sheriff Stroh took the same train and so we had very acceptable company, in fact he acted as a guide for us. Mr. Stroh was taking the young man who gave his name as Will Harvey to the prison to serve a year's sentence. Harvey will be remembered as the fellow who tried to get out of town with Rev. Colvin's clothes on, but was captured at the Wabash depot. He is only nineteen years of age, and has been in jail before he came to Auburn. We interviewed him in regard to his past career. He said he was only with Robbinson show three days before he came to Auburn. He seemed to know all about the prison life. When he was turned over to the Deputy Warden he bade us good by, and was as cheerful as if he was entering a base ball game. It now being after six o'clock we returned from the prison to the city. Pedestrians were not numerous until about 8:30 o'clock when one of as good bands as we ever heard gave an open air concert on the street.

THE PRISON.

At about 5:30 Thursday morning we took the street car for the prison and through the courtesy of the Deputy Warden we were admitted and allowed to remain and see the prisoners, 878 in number, come from their cells, march back and forth and then go to breakfast. This was done in squads, about twenty-five men being in charge of a guard. The lock step movement looks very nice, as all are dressed in the striped clothing. In the dining room all are seated at the tables and at the sound of the bell they are given the food. As near as we could see they ate hash, the principal part being onions, bread and coffee. They are given plenty of food. At another tap of the bell they arise from the tables and march out to their various departments of labor. It matters not whether they have finished the repast or not, they must then go to work.

THE FACTORIES

With the assistance of a guard we were shown through the factories, the cooper shops, coming first. In one department they hoop barrels. In about the middle of the building on an elevated stage or office, the guard may be seen standing or sitting as he chooses keeping watch over the men. It is said that some of them hoop more barrels a day than any man out of the prison. They are compelled to work very hard. Some of the men who have life sentence are skilled workmen at the machines. Entering another large building we came to where they were making chairs. Some of the finest kind of engraved work on wood may be found here. The daily out put is from 10 to 12 thousand. The next building is the facing and woolen mills. Here they make yarn and knit mittens and gloves. This department is very interesting. A pair of gloves or mittens is made in a few minutes. In the leather department shoes are made. The cutting is all done by machinery and all the operators need to do is to run them properly. On the first floor above the dining room is the chapel. Here church services are conducted. During the services about one week ago a large negro stabbed a fellow convict and in the evening he died. Just why he did this is not known. It was done before the guard could get to him. He was severely punished for the crime.

THE CELLS

The prison has only something over 800 cells and therefore two are kept together in one cell. Some cells are fixed up in a very taestful manner. One in particular we noticed which had lace curtains draped back from the door, a fine white spread on the bed, the occupant's picture enlarged and hanging on the wall, also a small stand on which were numerous ornaments which had been made there. Each cell contains one incandescent lamp.

THE PRISONERS

The average age of the prisoners is twenty-seven years. By looking at them one can readily see that it is mostly young men who are committing lawless acts in this country. Some of the most intelligent looking fellows are to be found there. Many of them pull their caps over their eyes when they see a person in citizen's clothes. Some prisoners have been there so long that they are allowed out side of the walls without guards. Others are sent out on the farm to work, the farmer having charge of them. Of course they could hardly escape as guards are walking on top of the prison walls all the time, each carrying a repeating rifle. One man of whom we bought a picture of the prison has been there 28 years. Many of them become very sassy to the guards. While in the office of the deputy Warden a few hours several complaints came in concerning prisoners who needed punishment.

We met Mr. Kinney of Kendallville who is one of the guards. Frank Parrett, sent there for shooting John Fretz, works under Mr. Kinney. We saw Parrett as he was coming from breakfast. There was an excursion to the prison from Indianapolis. There were over one thousand people came on the train. A continued rain all day made it very unpleasant. They hurried to the prison and then returned to the depot. Just west of the depot lies the big sand hill known as the Hoosier Slide. This hill is over 100 feet high all white sand. It affords a fine view of the city and lake by going to the top. Many men and women who came on the excursion climbed the hill while the rain was pouring down.

Miss Rose Skilling.

A sad bereavement is reported from Garrett in the untimely death of Miss Rose Skilling, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. James Skilling well known citizens of that place. She died about two o'clock Wednesday night or rather Thursday morning, and the funeral will be Saturday, to-morrow at two o'clock. Her disease was consumption, of which she had suffered for more than a year. Her age was about twenty, and she was a young lady of the highest charcter and intelligence. The stricken family have the sympathy of many Auburn friends.

More Rain.

Another hard rain began last evening about five o'clock and gradually grew heavier keeping up almost a steady rainfall till this morning at seven. This means the loss of a great deal of wheat and oats. Many farmers remembering only the dry seasons had stopped hauling in wheat in order to cut their hay. And there they made a mistake. The hay would have got along with but little loss compared with what will be lost on the wheat and oats. But we cannot always foresee what is to come. It looks now as if the loss on these two crops would be heavy.

Calling Names.

We are sorry to see in many papers, and even in some democratic papers, a tendency to "call names" rather than present arguments. This is all wrong. There is no argument in calling an opponent a harsh name. Parties are not built up, nor are they sustained by such means. If a party is to live, it must live by contending for a principle. If it has no principles, it soon dies, for the world has no use for it. To call an opponent a "plutocrat" an "anarchist," a "gold bug" or a "silver fanatic" counts for nothing, and only betrays a lack of a more substantial means of discussing live issues. Let us have arguments, reasoning, and with them statements of facts and elaboration of principles. In this way we shall not drag our readers down to lower planes, but to higher and better ones.

Pugsley-Haney

Rev. W. L. Meese joined in the bonds of holy matrimony at his rooms yesterday, Walter G. Pugsley and Miss Maude E. Haney both of Butler. They were accompaned by Wilbert Lutz of Concord and Miss Etta Pugsley of Mt. Hope. Mr. and Mrs. Pugsley are highly respected young people. They will reside in Butler where Mr. Pugsley is enployed in the bicycle factory.

It's a Girl!

There are girls, and girls, but the little 9½ pound lady at Dr. Buchtel's is "the" girl just at present. She was born last evening, July 23, at about 9:15 o'clock, and is as fine a little one as has ever graced West Seventh, a street that has been noted for years for its fine babies, and lots of them. That reminds the COURIER that Seventh street is on a boom, and "westward the star of empire takes its way," in the good old-fashioned way. We have only to add, that the Doctor is "as well as could be expected," and he will be able to take care of the other two.

Poor Blood

PICTURESQUE CONGRESSMA

His Wife Was a Captain in the Salvatio Army.

And so Cy Sulloway has come to congress.

Up in Manchester, N. H., where locomotives and cotton prints are made beside the Merrimac, everybody knows Cy, says the Washington Post. He is 6 feet 6 inches tall and probably will be the tallest man in congress. His heart is as big as the rest of his body and a thousand men whom he has befriended would rise in all their might to save him from all harm. For twenty years the Manchester people have been saying that some day Cy should go to congress. So here he is.

Well, in his younger days Cy rather wandered from the path that led to the church in which the rest of the family worshiped. He had wild oats to sow and he sowed them. While engaged in this occupation the salvation-army people came to town. They held their meetings upon the street corners and of course they gathered crowds. Thus it happened that one day the police came along and arrested them—carried off lads and lasses to the station house. The news of the arrest came to Cy as he sat up in his barn of an office, and it made his big heart feel sad. He wasn't religious, you know, but he had enough sympathy to take in all the world.

"It doesn't seem to me to be quite right," mused Cy, in his quiet, honest way. "These people have as much right to worship God in their way as I have to worship him in mine. I think I will go down and see them."

So down he went. He told them that he had some little reputation as a lawyer and if they wanted his services they were welcome to all he could do, without money and without price. They listened, thanked him, and then thanked God, singing the doxology as he went away. "Curious people," said Cy to himself, as he moved away. "There they were, as happy as if they had all been at home. They said they were in prison like St. Paul, but they knew that the Lord would send his messenger. Talk about faith in Israel! They had more faith than I have seen in Manchester in all my born days!"

The next morning Cy was true to his promise. He went down to the police court, made an eloquent speech, and had the satisfaction of seeing the lads and lassies walk out of court acquitted. Then Cy began to go to their meetings; then he was converted, and finally, on a visit to a little town in Massachusetts, he met a salvation army captain who is now his wife.

That is the story of Cy Sulloway, who has come to congress.

Scare Among Parrot Owners.

Visitors to Paris cannot have failed to notice the long rows of psittaceous birds displayed for sale on the quays that border the Seine, for if by chance the variegated spectacle escaped their eyes their ears must have informed them of the neighborhood of the loud voiced creatures. It seems, however, that this flourishing industry is at present in danger, if not absolutely doomed to extinction, greatly to the horror and alarm of the syndicat des Oiseliers. Prof. Gilbert, physician to the Brousais hospital and chief of the therapeutical laboratory of the faculty having traced several cases of infectious disease among his patients to parrots, felt constrained to reopen the old controversy and so effectual has been his demonstration of this channel for contagion that the love of the Parisians for their gayly plumaged pets has undergone complete revulsion. The sale of perruches has consequently dwindled down to next to nothing and to make matters worse the desire to get rid of the discredited birds has led to immense numbers being thrown upon the market, causing an unprecedented glut. —London Lancet.

Miniatures on Dinner Cards.

The miniature craze has gone so far that today even the dinner card has a miniature head for ornamentation. Some cards are about four inches square and have in the upper left-hand corner a miniature head in colors to match the decorations. The name is written across the card in gold. When the decorations of the dinner table are in delicate colors cards are made of ribbons harmonizing in tint, about eight inches in width, with miniature heads occupying the upper portion and the name written vertically below. A pretty idea was carried out recently at a reunion dinner given by a Scotch family. In place of the cards there were tiny booklets, decorated on the cover with purple Scotch thistle and the family coat of arms, the inside cover being used for the name of the guest. The autograph of each of the party was written in each of the tiny booklets and taken away as a souvenir.

Maine Girl's Pet Pig.

A Saco, Maine, girl has a pet pig which she leads about the streets of that town as other girls sometimes lead a poodle. The pig is young, and pretty as pigs go, and wears a broad bow of scarlet ribbon about its neck. It ambles along contentedly as a poodle would, except when its mistress' walks take it past an inviting puddle, when there is usually a sharp and noisy struggle for a minute or two before the porker can be persuaded to pursue its promenade.

Gala Day for a Veteran Equine.

There is a horse in Greenville, Ohio, that has been driven between the town and the railroad station to carry the mail for more than a quarter of a century. A few days ago the people of the town turned out and celebrated the veteran mail carrier's 34th birthday. Both horse and wagon were gayly decorated.

A Wife Beater.

John Beight, from near Corunna, was brought to Auburn yesterday on a charge of beating his wife. It is said he has for some time drank a good deal, and would often have trouble with his wife and would now and then beat her. This time he seems to have been unusually brutal, as shown by a heavy black-and-blue mark on Mrs. Beight's forehead. A number of the neighbors came down as witnesses. Justice Walter was surprised to see the wife do all in her power to screen the brutal fellow to whom she was tied for life. He fined him $1 and costs, and for want of sufficient free silver, Bro. Beight is now eating at the hospitable table of H. P. Stroh.

March and Battle

Our Soldier Boys Get a Taste of the Real Thing.

Thursday's Daily.

As briefly noted yesterday at 2:30 p. m. Tuesday there came an unexpected order from brigade headquarters for the Third and Fourth regiments to get under arms and proceed north on a forced march. It is not the part of a soldier to ask "why" in the face of an official command, and so like true soldiers of the state, marched away silently to the north. Within a half hour after that there came another order for the First and Second regiments to do exactly the same thing, and if possible by detour to meet the command which preceeded them.

And the second force of men marched as ordered. The intention was that when the regiments should meet it should be a sham battle, the whole moneuver to be carried out with the same precision and military methods as would have been the case if the regiments were to march away to engage in real rather than unreal battle. The meeting took place, the conflict occurred and the soldiers marched back to beans and black coffee and a well deserved rest.

The heavy rain of Tuesday evening was preceded by a sudden and severe wind storm which came from the northwest. The tents had been well placed and stoutly anchored, and but few if any, were blown from their fastenings. During the storm, however, the mess tent of company B, Second regiment, was caught by a sharp gust and ripped into ribbons. Camp kettles ond dutch ovens, tin skillets and coffee pots were blown about in promiscuous confusion, and it seemed for a few moments as if the elements were actually at war with the military, During the thunder storm the lightning struck a tree near one of the links and several of the ponderous limbs were torn off and fell to the ground with a crash. A sentry on duty not far away caught a fragment of the thunderbolt, so to speak, and throwing his gun to the green sod with the same alacrity that he would hurl a red hot coal into space, came to his knees with the taste of sulphur and brass in his mouth. He was not seriously shocked, however.

The Discovery Saved His Life.

Mr. G. Caillouette, Druggist. Beaverville, Ill., says: "To Dr. King's New Discovery I owe my life. Was taken with Lagrippe and tried all the physicians for miles about, but of no avail and was given up and told I could not live. Having Dr. King's New Discovery in my store I sent for a bottle and began its use and from the first dose began to get better, and after using three bottles was up and about again. It is worth its weight in gold We won't keep store or house without it" Get a free trial bottle at Robbins & McCord's drug store. 2

Trustees' Report.

Attorney-General Ketcham submits the following opinion: "The law requires township trustees to publish statement of their indebtedness in details, giving number and total of outstanding orders, warrants and accounts. This applies to the trustees now in office and said report should be published by said trustees on the first Monday in August, or as near that date as a weekly paper in circulation in his county can be had. I think a publication in the next issue during that week would be sufficient. The statute says explicity that the trustees shall cause a copy of his report in full to be published and that doesn't mean simply a statement of receipts and expenditures of each fund, but that he shall publish a statement showing his indebtedness in detail, giving the numbers and total amount of the outstanding orders, warrants and accounts chargeable to such funds, which shall be sworn to."

SPLENDID OPPORTUNITIES

For home-seekers and others of desirous of changing their location are offered in the great states of Wisconsin, Iowa, Minnesota, South Dakota and Nebraska. CO. K. In Camp.

All Day Sunday Chewing Gum Girls, Ogled and Grinned, Giggled and Tittered at the Soldier Boys.

Wednesday's Daily.

Sunday was a fine day in camp. The soldiers had but little to do. At 3:30 the companies assembled for dress parade and review. The review was preparatory to the general review of the troops by Gov. Matthews Thursday. Gen. Compton rode a gray horse in the review. While going at a fast clip the horse began to "feel his oats" and "bucked." At the same time his front foot stumbled on a little knoll, and away went Gen. Compton, sailing through the air like a bird.

Monday forenoon Co. K. was out on the Target Range. Out of 20 men 14 qualifield themselves for the 300 yard range. This is the best shooting the company has ever done. There were crowds of people in camp Sunday, but on Monday there were but few visitors.

From the appearance Sunday the boys in uniform are as attractive to the tender sex as ever. All day long the chewing-gum girls, arm-in-arm, sweating like a "washerwoman" paraded up and down before the rows of white tents, ogled and grinned, giggled and tittered and made real bright remarks in answer to comments from the soldiers. The latter didn't wait to be "knocked down," but jumped up, took the chewing-gum girls by their arms and marched away. The girls who like to flirt, and prefer men who "catch on" with alacrity will enjoy an earthly heaven this week by spending their days in and about Fairview park. The usual way in which these things are done is this. A band of gigglers come along, looking in the tents as they pass:

"Hello, Mary!" says a soldier.

"Hello-a-a!" responds a lass as she slips her cud down back of her teeth for a minute.

Then she can't hold herself any longer. She just lets loose and laughs. The other lassies laugh and the soldiers laugh and there you are. The soldier boy jumps up and says:

"Mary, I haint seen you for a long time." He shakes hands with her and presses her fingers a little to emphasize the gladness of the meeting. She feels sort o' strange, and giggles a little. He seizes her by the arm and away they go.

When evening came the guards at the park were almost as lover-like as the ladies. Girls yet in their teens paraded the tented streets and said:

"I'm looking for a soldier."

And the soldier was ready for duty.

The various companies are made up of all kinds of boys. Co. M. of Evansville, is composed entirely of Y. M. C. A. boys. They sang hymns together, Sunday afternoon and evening. Whether their singing had an appreciable effect on the boys of the Vincennes company, who were indulging in a game of seven-up is not known. Snap judgment would say that it had not. This devout Evansville company, however, has periods of levity. For instance, in the evening, just before taps are sounded, they strip themselves to the skin, save a meager shirt and revel in what is called a shirt-tail parade, which affords no little amusement to their fellow soldiers.

TUESDAY 2:30 P. M.

The first and second regiments, eight pieces of artillery and signal corps all just leaving camp with instructions for a 24 hour march. Nothing can be learned as to where they will go. At 2:30 this morning we had a heavy storm and as this was written another thunder shower came up. Some places on the ground there are fish ponds. The boys are moving their straw ticks in order to keep them dry for the night's rest. Some boys are fishing in a puddle of water in front of Major Miller's qarters. Others are walking on their hands to keep their feet dry. Acting Captain Lahnum left his tent to the mercy of the wind just before the rain this afternoon. Co. K. are fortunate as they are located on the highest part of the ground. During the shower water ran under the tents and when Frank Jolliff crawled out he discoved that he had wet pants. Acting Major Kuhlman is compelled to wade water knee deep to perform his duties successfully. Dr. J. B. Casebeer and E. C. Altenburg were callers this afternoon.

MURDER!

Newville, a Small Town Thrown in Great Excitement

Mrs Webster

Shot in the Left side the bullet passing through her liver. She will probably die.

Sandbagged

Mr. Webster the trustee of Stafford township.

The Murderer Escaped. Sheriff Stroh Chasing Him.

Friday's Daily.

St. Joe, Ind. July 31, (Special)—At about eleven o'clock last night some person unknown forced an entrance to the house of Henry Webster, trustee of Stafford township, who lives about 14 miles northeast, of Newville, sandbagged Mr. Webster and fatally shot Mrs. Webster. The facts as we got them from Mr. Webster himself at an early hour this morning are as fol lows: About eleven o'clock last night Mrs. Webster was aroused from her sleep by hearing a noise in the house when she promptly aroused Mr. Webster and made known to him her suspicion. Mr. Webster immediately got up, and started to go down the stairs and at the same time said, "Who is there?" For an answer a revolver flashed in his face and a bullet whizzed past him and mortally wounding Mrs. Webster who had by this time also got up. A second shot flew past his head and lodged in the ceiling. The robber then seeing that neither of these shots had taken effect on Mr. Webster hit him over the head with a billy or leather bag filled with shot, but this failing to do its work the robber fled down the stairs with Mr. Webster in close pursuit, but as Mr. Webster reached the head of the stairs he became faint and fell landing at the bottom. The falling somewhat revived him and he again took after the murderer who by this time had gained the outer door and as Mr. Webster reached the door he was disappearing down the road toward Newville. As the murderer came down the stairs he dropped the billy and revolver on the floor and later they were picked up by Mr. Webster. The balance of the family were by this time up and caring for Mrs. Webster who was in a dying condition. The neighbors were hastily summoned and everything done to make the mother comfortable. Drs. Bowman, of St. Joe, and Bronson, of Newville, were sent for and examination of Mrs. Webster's injury proved that the ball had entered her left side passing through a portion of the lungs and through the stomach and liver lodging just in under the skin on the right side. At this writing she is just alive, with no hopes of recovery.

Mr. Webster's wounds while painful are not serious. Excitement runs high and should the murderer be found he would perhaps pay the penalty at the end of a rope. No development have been made that would show who the murderer is. Sheriff Stroh is on the ground and will do all to bring the guilty party to justice.

□ Later—Mr. Olds of St. St. Joe informs us that the murderer is probably their son. He has a bad reputation and has not lived at home much lately. He was there a day or two before, and the only words Mrs. Webster has said point to her son as the assassin.

Caught In Chicago.

Duane Webster Accused of killing his mother and Attack on his Father with a Billy, now in Jail.

Mrs. Webster Begs of Sheriff Stroh to Not allow Duane to Escape.

He has Many times Threatened to kill His Parents.

Duane Webster accused of killing his mother and attack his father with a billy is now in jail, being brought here from Chicago at 12 o'clock Saturday night by Sheriff Stroh. He had previously worked in Chicago and Mr. Stroh had notified about twenty guards there, giving a description of him. The detectives first learned that he had boarded with Mrs. Morris at 479 north Clark street and they learned that he had been there. They left orders with the landlady in case Webster returned for his clothes, to have some one follow him from the minute he left the house. About noon Webster put in an appearance, and, after getting his clothes, left the house. Meantime Mrs. Morris hastily summoned a colored barber, Ellis Blackman, who lives at 442 North Clark street, and, after telling him the facts in the case and giving him 25 cents, told him to follow the man until he found a chance to turn him over to a policeman.

Blackman did his part of the work without a mistake and followed the alleged matricide to the corner of Stony Island avenue and Sixty-fourth street, where Webster, was about to take a Windsor Park car. At the corner of Madison and Michigan street the colored detective asked a policeman to arrest the man, as he was wanted for murder.

"Oh, I haven't time to bother with him," was the reply, "Get somebody who doesn't have to travel a mile beat."

The next officer of the law was found at Randolph and Clark streets, but he was slow to understand what was wanted and Webster slipped away. In the confusion the negro barber became separated from Webster, but succeeded in again tracking his man. He followed him to within a few blocks of the Woodlawn police station, where he saw Lieutenant Musser who called Officer James Bagnell of the same station and Webster was taken into custody and identified by Captain George Shippy.

Webster had at one time worked in the drugstore of A. Gaul, at Clark street and North avenue, and Detective Sergeants Trehorn and Smith, who were detailed on the case, at once went to the store, which several weeks ago was robbed by the "long" and "short" men.

They found Webster had been employed as a soda water clerk in the store and that he had stolen a revolver from one of the other clerks, who had no difficulty in recognizing the weapon from the description given him.

Sheriff Stroh had reached Chicago a few minutes before Webster had, and was in the office of Inspector Fitzpatrick when word was sent there from Woodlawn station asking whether the man had a cork leg. He was brought to the Central Station and locked in a cell below until 7 o'clock when Mr. Stroh brought him to Auburn. When Mr. Stroh met Webster at the police station he said to him, "Webster, why did you kill your mother and then attack your father with a billy? You had a good mother and a most respected father, who may now be dead. Tell me why you did it, for there is no use in your denying it."

Webster, who seemed entirely indifferent to the fate of his parents, replied: "I don't know what you're talking about. No one accused me of killing my mother. I did not kill her, and that is all I will say."

"Yes, you did, and we know it beyond a doubt. Your brother and sister were married and set up to housekeeping by your parents and that made you angry. We have identified the revolver you stole and persons saw you whittle off the bullets which were fired from that same revolver, and by you too."

Webster declared that he had been to Pittsburg before going to Chicago. But this hardly can be possible. The colored getleman who followed him so closely in Chicago was highly complimented by the police. Sheriff Stroh paid him $4 for his trouble. When Webster was examined at the police station a newspaper clipping giving an account of the Butler homicide was found in Webster's pocket, also a razor. The newspaper clipping was the only thing about the prisoner that led the police to suspect him of the crime charged.

Sheriff Stroh drove down to Newville yesterday and notfied Mr. and Mrs. Webster that he had landed their son in jail. Mrs. Webster stated that on previous occasions he had threatened to kill them. She said he was of a disposition that when he would make up his mind and make threats generally carried them out. She called Sheriff Stroh back into the house the second time and urged him to use every effort to keep Duane in jail as they were afraid he would kill them both.

Will Recover

Mrs. Webster's Wounds Not So Bad As First Announced

Further Developments Prove That Their Son is the Would-be Assassin.

Saturday's Daily.

St. Joe Ind. Aug. 1. (Special)—This morning Drs. Bowman of this place and Bronson of Newville made a thorough examination of Mrs Webster's wound and removed the ball from the right side where it had lodged. It now seems that the wound is not so dangerous as at first supposed as the ball struck against rib on the left side and glanced or followed around the body just under the skin and did not penetrate the vital parts of the body at all as was at first supposed, and at this writing the Drs. have given their opinion that she would recover. While if this should prove to be the case it will greatly relieve the minds of a great many friends and neighbors and will keep for the present the stain of murder from the would-be assassin who from the developement that came out yesterday would point to their son. It seems that Mrs. Webster fully identified her boy when he fired the first shot and said to parties coming in shortly after that it was Duane that shot me.

The facts are this son has been of a roving nature and has not been at home since he was fifteen years old but has frequently made demands on his parents for money and was at home only the day before the tragedy occurred for the purpose of obtaining money but Mr. Webster being out of funds had refused to give him any, and he left home vowing his intention of killing them both. How well he has succeeded at this time has been shown.

We doubt not but what bad companions and whisky have had their effect on a life that other wise might have been a better one and while at this time, this has not terminated in murder, yet it has brought sorrow and anguish to these parents hearts.

Richland S. S.

Institute Lectures.

Supt. Merica returned from the Winona Assembly Saturday where, as noted Friday, he went here Dr. Lamar of Galveston, Texas. He did not give one of his popular lectures that evening but from stereoptibon views gave a short talk on "Pilgrims Progress." Mr. Merica met a number of representative men there however who heard the doctor's great lecture last year on "Dixie before and after the War" and they say it was the best thing ever given on the grounds. The universal verdict was "you will make no mistake in taking Lamar." He will lecture either Wednesday or Thursday of the Institute week, August 24 to 28.

QUEEN VICTORIA

May Retire from the Throne of England.

London special: The rumor that Queen Victoria intends to retire in favor of the Prince of Wales is again current and it is added that court circles are greatly troubled regarding the condition of the Queen's health.

Such reports have frequently appeared of recent years, only to be semi-officially contradicted later, but it now seems that there may be some actual foundation for the statements made.

It is added that her Majesty has decided to spend her time in the future at Balmoral or at Osborne and that she will give the Prince and Princess of Wales the use of Buckingham Palace and Windsor Castle.

There is no doubt that the Queen seems to feel greatly the weight of her years and bereavements, and her Majesty is quoted as having repeatedly remarked during her last stay in this city at Buckingham Palace, upon the occasion of the recent marriage of Princess Maud of Wales to Prince Charles of Denmark: "This is my last visit to London." Color is given to the rumors in circulation by the deep emotion displayed by the Queen as she bowed in reply to the enthusiastic cheers of the multitudes which lined the route from Buckingham Palace to the railroad station, where she took the train for Windsor after the marriage ceremonies.

Strike to Be Renewed.

The strike at the works of the Brown Hoisting and Conveying Machine Company of Cleveland will be renewed by order of the strikers' executive committee. The men find the settlement effected by the State Board of Arbitration does not include recognition of the authority of labor union committees nor the discharge of all non-union men, and on these points will continue the battle. Trouble is almost certain to come, and the police will use sterner methods than those recently employed.

Distillers Decide to Close.

The arbitration committee, appointed by the Kentucky Distillers' Association at Louisville, has accomplished the end for which it was appointed, and is ready to report that the distillers have agreed to suspend for eighteen months. This agreement has been entered into by all but two of the larger concerns, and those interested express the belief that the plan will be successful. The purpose is to allow a production of 12½ per cent. to fill contracts already entered into.

The Jig Is Up.

Crowd Point (Ind.) special: All hopes of Chicago racing men were shattered the other day when Judge Gillette in the Lake Superior Court made the restraining order in the case of the State vs. the Roby-Forsythe-Sheffield race tracks. Judge Gillette confessed that the recent action of the Supreme Court changed his opinion regarding the interdependency and juxtaposition of the tracks in relation with each other. Law and order people are jubilant over the cessation of racing.

Blast Went Off Too Soon.

While Ben Kays, a well digger, and Doc Young, a negro assistant, were preparing a dynamite blast in a well thirty feet deep, at Danville, Ky., there was a premature discharge of the explosive. Both men were horribly mangled, but escaped instant death. Both had their eyes blown out, fingers torn off, and received serious injuries about the face, head, and other parts of the body, hundreds of pieces of stone striking them. Both are in a critical condition.

Claims to Have Solved It.

In the opinion of experts, Rev. J. S. Axtel, pastor of the Presbyterian Church of Portland, Ind., has mastered the intricacy of aerial locomotion, and the drawings of his invention, the aeriodome, meet with the approval of all to whom they have been submitted as involving original and plausible ideas. A company will likely be organized to give the aeridome a practical test. Rev. Axtel has worked at leisure moments for years on it.

Died in Holland.

Word has been received at Providence, R. I., by cable message, that Judge George M. Carpenter, of the United States District Court for the District of Rhode Island, has just died of paralysis of the heart in Holland, where he was traveling.

Five Persons Killed.

London special: A special dispatch received here from Vienna says that the explosion of a powder magazine at Fuinkirchen has resulted in the death of five persons, the injuring of eighty others, and the wrecking of the town hall.

Railroad Line Is Wiped Out.

The fact has just become known in Denver that the flood of a few days ago entirely destroyed the Catskill branch of the Union Pacific, Denver and Gulf road, forty miles in length, running from Trinidad, Col., to the Maxwell land grant in New Mexico.

Kills His Wife and Children.

It has just transpired that W. E. Burt, a member of one of the best families in Austin, Texas, killed his wife and two children, aged 2 and 4 years, and then sank their bodies in the house cistern.

Youthful Desperado at Large.

John Toms, a youthful desperado of St. Joseph, Mo., is at large in the vicinity of Dearborn. A deputy sheriff corralled him in a cornfield, but Toms held the officer at bay with a shotgun and has since successfully resisted arrest. He is wanted for highway robbery.

Too Young for State Prison.

Gov. Bushnell, of Ohio, transferred Charles Gilbert, a 15-year-old boy, to the State Reform School. He was recently convicted in Fayette County of horse stealing, and sentenced to the State prison for five years. He is said to be a most precocious criminal.

PRISON FOR JAMESON.

Verdict of Guilty in the Cases of Transvaal Raiders.

The London jury in the Jameson South Africa case returned a verdict that all the defendants had been found guilty of the charge of violating the neutrality laws in invading the territory of the South African republic. Besides Dr. Jameson, the defendants were: Major Sir John Willoughby, Col. R. Grey, Col. H. F. White, Major R. White and Captain Henry F. Coventry. Dr. Jameson was sentenced to fifteen months' imprisonment without labor, Sir John Willoughby to ten months' imprisonment, Major R. White to seven months' imprisonment and Captain Henry F. Coventry, Col. R. Grey and Col. H. F. White to five months' imprisonment each. The court was packed with people. Lord Russell's remarks were distinctly hostile to the defendants. He began by pointing out that there was no doubt the prisoners had taken part in or abetted the proceedings at Pitsani and Mafeking, where the invading forces were mustered preparatory to entering the Transvaal. There was no doubt the expedition was of a military character, and whether it was aimed to overthrow the Transvaal government or to force a change of the laws in the interests of others, it was equally an expedition against a friendly State.

SCARED TREASURY GUARDS.

Two Explosions of Gas Brought the Guards Out in a Hurry.

Intense excitement was created in Washington about 10 o'clock Monday night by two successive explosions at the east front of the treasury building. The noise was equal to the discharge of a 13-inch gun, and the concussion was felt all along the opposite side of Fifteenth street. The treasury guards turned out fully armed, thinking an attempt was being made to blow up the building. Within five minutes the second explosion occurred, and for a few minutes there was considerable alarm. A conduit containing electric wires extends beneath the sidewalk beside the treasury. Workmen have been making excavations just within the exterior basement wall of the building for the location of elevator engines. By some means illuminating gas, perhaps from an old rusted pipe, had filled the conduit. The method of ignition of the gas has not been explained, but at all events it was set off. The immense flagstones of the sidewalks were hurled fifteen feet in the air and broken into small pieces.

EXPORTS OF GOLD CHECKED.

Committee of New York Bankers Reports a Plan Which Is Adopted.

The committee of seven appointed at the recent meeting of the exchange bankers to devise a plan for the prevention of gold exports during the next ninety days, presented a complete report to the full body at a meeting held at the offices of J. P. Morgan & Co., in New York. The plan was pronounced effective, and was unanimously adopted and the committee discharged. The plan will take effect immediately. A member of the firm of J. P. Morgan & Co. said no public statement could be made at this time. Deposits by local banks at the subtreasury foot up $375,000, and swell the grand aggregate to $18,015,000.

Declared Unconstitutional.

United States Circuit Judge Sanborn has decided the Iowa anti-cigarette law unconstitutional, and ordered released on a writ of habeas corpus Donald C. McGregor, of Cedar Rapids, Iowa. The law was passed by the Iowa Legislature last winter, and went into effect on July 4, 1896, and prohibited absolutely the manufacture or sale of cigarettes in the State, or their importation into the State. McGregor was arrested for importing cigarettes and selling them in the original packages, and an application for a writ of habeas corpus was made to Judge Sanborn. The attorneys for the petitioner rested their arguments on the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in the famous prohibition case that went up from the same State some years ago, after the prohibition law was enacted there. That decision is to the effect that the Federal constitution, having delegated to Congress the power to regulate commerce between the several States, the Legislature had no power to prohibit the importation of liquors into the State, or their sale in the original packages by the importer. Attorney General Remley argued that the Legislature had power to prohibit the importation and sale of cigarettes, and cited other authorities to sustain his view. Judge Sanborn followed the decision of the Supreme Court and granted the writ.

All Want the New Note.

The Treasury Department at Washington has almost sprung a sensation on the country in the issue of the new one-dollar silver certificates. The bill has proved very popular, and demands for it have come in from banks in all parts of the country. The officials have been obliged to put a limit on the amount that will be issued for the present to any one bank, and the figure is fixed at $500. There has been every day since Thursday, when the notes first came out, a string of applicants for them, like that at a box office at a popular playhouse. For three weeks people have been writing with inclosures of cash asking for an exchange. Some of the banks have offered gold for the new notes, and these have always been accommodated to the full amount offered. In all about $10,000 of the notes has been drawn out in Washington, while some $50,000 has gone to the country at large. Over $25,000 was sent away Saturday. It is only a question of a short time when there will be plenty to supply every call.

At the Treasury.

No gold went out for export Saturday and the only withdrawals were domestic, $307,100 for hoarding and $5,400 in gold bars. On the other hand, $1,490,000 in gold coin was deposited in the sub-treasury by New York bankers, making the gold reserve at the close of business stand at $103,688,180. The other financial centers are also coming forward to reinforce the treasury, and gold was offered in exchange for legal tender notes to the amount of $6,000,000. Of this Chicago offered $2,500,000, Philadelphia $2,500,000, and Boston $1,000,000.

Satolli Will Return to Rome.

The report that the pope had offered Cardinal Satolli the choice of returning to Rome or remaining at his present post, and that the latter course had been decided upon, is denied by Cardinal Satolli. It is officially stated that no advices as to a change in plans have been received, and that it is almost a certainty Cardinal Satolli will go back to Rome after the assembling of the next consistory, when his successor will be announced.

Big Corn Crop in Oklahoma.

Corn this year in Oklahoma will be so plentiful that it probably will bring not more than 8 cents a bushel. Aside from a few districts, where the crop was injured by hail, an unprecedented yield is reported, and it is thought that there will be a surplus of almost half a million bushels in the territory to ship.

Epoch in Railroading.

The tremendous speed of over ninety-four miles an hour was reached at the trial of the Holman friction-geared locomotive drawing a train over the tracks of the South Jersey Railroad Wednesday afternoon at Cape May, N. J. The speed did not, however, meet the expectations of Inventor Holman, who is bent upon sending the engine along at the rate of 100 miles an hour. He declares that any good, well-built engine can be made to go at the rate of nearly two miles a minute, if equipped with the friction gearing. The engine drew a tender and two ordinary passenger coaches. The cars were filled with interested persons and newspaper men. The speed during the run was terrific, and the wind whistled through the cars like a cyclone. The engine worked smoothly and started and stopped without shock. Those in charge of the run claimed that the distance covered was too short for the locomotive to get fairly started. It was claimed that the friction gearing was just getting into running shape when the steam had to be shut down preparatory to stopping.

TO TEST POSTAL LAW.

Lake Shore Road Will Start Carrying Its Own Letters.

The railroad people propose to test the right of Postmaster General Wilson to prohibit them from carrying their own and the letters of other roads. The Lake Shore railroad will make a test. Its superintendent has issued an order to all of the road's employes to carry mail pertaining to the business of the road, and letters for other roads relating to joint business affairs. Maj. Stuart of the Chicago postal inspection department, to whom the enforcement of the postal laws falls, said that he had not heard of any agreement to test the law, but if the Lake Shore desired to make a test of it the government would be very apt to accommodate it by prosecuting the violators. "If the Lake Shore violates the law and it comes to my knowledge," said the inspector, "I will make a report on the case to the Postmaster General and do whatever he instructs."

LOST IN THE FOREST.

Aged Man Tramps in Dense Woods, Living on Tree Bark.

Richard Kingdon, an aged Wilkesbarre, Pa., man, went into the woods Monday to pick berries and lost his way. The forest is alive with wildcats, and his only protection was to keep continually moving. He wandered miles upon miles in the forest and lived upon the berries and tree bark. His faithful dog remained with him and guided him toward a mountain stream that flowed under the rocks and bowlders. While resting at this spot a shrill whistle of a locomotive came to his ears and he wearily tramped toward the sound. He reached the edge of the forest at length and was found by fishermen in an exhausted condition. It is doubtful if he recovers.

DROVE OVER A LITTLE GIRL.

Child Deliberately Killed by the Driver of a Two-Wheeled Cart.

Grace Pierce, the 10-year-old daughter of Elisha Pierce, a well-known New York G. A. R. man, was run over and killed by a cart driver, in Eighth avenue. The little girl, with a boy friend, had been riding their bicycles up and down the avenue and in turning out for a passing carriage ran in front of a two-wheeled cart, loaded with paving material. She became frightened and fell from her wheel. The driver of the cart stopped, and then, for some reason, started up again and drove deliberately over child and bicycle, injuring her so that she died shortly afterward.

Victim of the Bike.

William Klink, a Chicago butcher, was struck by a woman bicycle rider while crossing the street. He was taken to his home, where he died in a short time. The woman bicyclist, when she saw what had happened, increased her speed and disappeared down a side street. According to witnesses she was scorching at the time of the accident and was going at a very rapid rate when Mr. Klink was struck. The collision did not throw the woman from her wheel, and it is thought the handle bar struck him in the stomach.

Robert Garrett Dead.

Robert Garrett, ex-president of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad and a member of the prominent Garrett family of Baltimore, died at Deer Park, Md., Wednesday morning. For many years he had been a sufferer. He had been hopelessly infirm of mind and weak in body during this time, having been afflicted with chronic nephritis, which eventually caused his death.

Death List Is Increasing.

Tales of death and devastation from the awful storm, which swept over Western Pennsylvania, continue to pour in. Four more drownings are reported, and another victim of the Sugar grove accident is not expected to survive. This will make the death list fifteen, including the seven drowned at Cecil.

Cholera Decreasing in Egypt.

Cholera is decreasing, and there were only 130 new cases and 100 deaths throughout Egypt on Saturday. The deaths include those of Captain Fenwick at Firket and Surgeon Captain Trask at Kosheh, who were members of the Nile expedition.

Girl Killed by Lightning.

Lightning struck the farmhouse of Jacob Heasley, two miles south of Elkhart, Ind., and instantly killed a domestic, Miss Katherine Ott, while she was in bed sleeping.

BRYAN AND WATSON

These Are the Candidates of the People's Party.

WILD SCENE ENACTED

Nebraskan Carries the Convention with a Whoop.

"Boy Orator of the Platte" Is Named for President by More than Two-Thirds Majority at the Populist National Convention—His Refusal to Run Without Sewall for a Mate Is Ignored—Great Confusion Attends the Calling of the Roll.

W. J. Bryan was nominated at St. Louis Saturday afternoon by the Populists as their candidate for President of the United States.

Only two other candidates were nominated to contest the field against Bryan. One was Seymour F. Norton, a lawyer from Chicago, and the other was Gen. Coxey. The general's name was withdrawn before the balloting was begun. Eugene V. Debs would have been a candidate had he not sent a message to the convention declining to accept the nomination. The voting was all one way, and when the result was announced bedlam broke loose and pandemonium reigned for fifteen or twenty minutes. The Texas, Arkansas and Maine middle-of-the-road men, with their guidons together, took no part in the demonstration.

The middle-of-the-road men finally massed about their standard on the left of the hall, about 300 in number, and made a counter demonstration. They cheered and yelled and pushed and fought for ten minutes. The sergeants at arms were powerless to restore order, and, after rapping for five minutes, Chairman Allen declared Mr. Bryan the nominee of the convention.

Senator Allen called the convention to order at 9:35 o'clock Saturday morning. After the invocation the chairman announced that the first thing in order was the selection of members of the national committee and the committees to notify the candidates for President and Vice-President. Several resolutions were presented and referred without reading or debate.

Weaver Names Bryan.

The chairman then called for the nominations of President and Vice-President, and Judge Green of Nebraska took the stage to place Mr. Bryan in nomination. A Texas delegate interrupted with a point of order that the States must be called in alphabetical order for nominations. Judge Green was driven off the stage by the Texan's point of order. When Alabama was called Gov. Kolb yielded to Gen. Weaver of Iowa, but Col. Gaither of Alabama got to the platform first and interjected a speech about joining the cotton fields of the South with the wheat fields of the West. At the conclusion of his remarks Gen. Weaver came forward and formally placed Mr. Bryan in nomination.

Gen. Weaver in his opening remarks asked the convention not to applaud, and the delegates listened to him without much demonstration. But when he concluded by naming "that splendid young statesman, William J. Bryan," the convention broke loose. Cheer followed cheer. The delegates jumped to their chairs, and flags, handkerchiefs, coats, hats and State guidons were waved in wild confusion. The enthusiasm that followed Gen. Weaver's speech was something terrific. Miss Minerva Roberts led the cheering in the Colorado delegation. While the demonstration was at its height thousands of copies of the "Bryan Silver March" were flung high in air and fell in clouds on the frantic delegates.

When quiet was restored Gen. Field of Virginia, who was Gen. Weaver's running mate in 1892, hobbled forward on his crutch, and, after a brief speech, moved to suspend the rules and make Bryan's nomination unanimous. The convention rose almost en masse and cheered, but above the chorus of cheers came the sharp cries of the Texas men. "No," "no," they yelled. Chairman Allen declared the motion carried, but, yielding to the protest, decided to allow a call of States on the motion. The Texas men wildly protested. The Nebraskan having asserted that he positively would not accept the nomination if Sewall was rejected, Robert Schilling of Wisconsin attempted to secure a recess until Bryan could be heard from, but he was howled down. The greatest confusion prevailed, and Bryan's nomination was seconded by orators from nearly every State, and at last, after six hours of speech-making, the roll call on the ballot was reached. When Alabama, the first State, was called she divided her vote between Bryan and Norton. Arkansas gave her twenty-five votes for Bryan; Colorado, Connecticut and Delaware voted solidly for Bryan. Georgia gave five of her sixty-one votes for Norton of Illinois. As the roll call proceeded it became apparent that Bryan would be nominated before it was completed. At its conclusion the tally clerks had figured the totals, and without further delay Chairman Allen announced the official vote as: Bryan, 1,042; Norton, 21; Donnelly, 1. It was then 4:22. Someone made a motion to adjourn. The chairman put the motion and declared the convention adjourned sine die.

The Vote by States.

Following is the vote by States, the totals being those announced to the convention:

	Bryan.	Norton.
Alabama	28 1-4	14 3-4
Arkansas	25	.....
California	24	12
Colorado	45	.....
Connecticut	6	.....
Delaware	3	.....

TERRORS IN THE TOILS.

The Whole Gang of Chicago Robbers Now Under Arrest.

After five months of terror, caused by a series of the most daring robberies ever perpetrated in any city, Chicago now rests easily, for the perpetrators are in custody. For some time the police have had out their drag net and have arrested every suspicious character they have found in the city limits. More than a hundred have been hauled into the cells, but it is now almost certain that only ten men have been implicated in the robberies. These ten are Red Sullivan and John Orme, the leaders of the gang who have become famous as "the long and the short men," Thomas McGowan, Michael Monahan, James Dempsey, Barney Hunt, Alfred alias "Sleepy" Burke, Joseph Gordon, Jesse Thames and John McLane. The police are still looking for Jesse Thames. The others are under arrest.

"RED" SULLIVAN.

All of the prisoners are under 22 years of age, but are old in crime. Some of them were waifs and bootblacks who never knew a home; others are the vicious children of respected parents. It was while confined in the Pontiac reformatory last year that a criminal organization was formed among them, at the instigation of Orme, who is 21 years old. An oath bound each member of the society to the other by a pledge of death. Any one who betrayed another member of the society was to be put to death. If arrested and put on the witness stand and he told the truth there, he was to be shot in the court room. If he was put in a police sweat box and betrayed his comrades a bullet was to end his existence at the first opportunity. On the other hand, if one of them was captured and remained loyal, every effort was to be made for his release. Money was to be used and this failing, it was arranged that the others were to go into whatever court room their associate might be in with their pistols, stand off the bailiffs, shoot down the police who might resist them, and fly with the rescued one. In the event rescue in a court room was not favorable, they had another scheme for rescue. That was to follow the train on which their convicted associate would be, hold it up when it was in the country and take him off. That is the kind of young fellows the police department has been fighting against all spring and summer. Chief Badenoch says that in his lifetime and with the knowledge which he has of once famous Chicago criminals, he has never met with a more bloodthirsty or better organized band of thieves than the one which Orme put together.

CHIEF OF POLICE BADENOCH.

In February the gang who had finished their terms at the reformatory began their depredations. Citizens were held up on their way home at night. In almost every instance assault folowed the robbery and the victims in some cases were found unconscious in the streets. The thugs transferred their operations to the large stores and the depredations there have been alarming. More than a score of business places have been robbed and one murder has been committed. That more lives have not been sacrificed is due to the fact that the robbers have not met with resistance, for they were prepared at all times to shoot down whoever opposed them. Their method almost invariably was to enter a store, draw revolvers, get the drop on all present and then grab the money box and escape before the frightened proprietors, employes or customers could regain their senses sufficiently to act. Sometimes two men did the robbing, sometimes three, four or five, but in nearly every case a tall man and a short man took a leading part, and fully half the robberies were committed by these two without assistance. The tall man was very thin. The short man had a red face covered with blotches and pimples. For weeks the police seemed dumfounded. Almost in their sight the robbers operated as boldly as if no police officer existed.

MONAHAN. ORME. DEMPSEY.

The activity displayed by the gang was something surprising and the detectives never knew where they were going to operate next. One night they would do a job in the center of the city and a few hours later they would complete another ten miles away. This they kept up for weeks. Finally about two weeks ago Red Sullivan was captured while drunk and from him was obtained information which led to the arrest of the others. Orme, Dempsey and Monahan were the last to be arrested. They were captured in Detroit, where they had laid plans for similar work.

Orme, the leader, is a good dresser and would be taken for a student. There is nothing about him to suggest a criminal and on this account he succeeded so well. Orme generally walked into the stores first and the soft smile on his face would disarm suspicion until he got close to the person he intended to cover, when he would pull out the big revolver and shove it at the man, saying in a low voice: "Now be quiet or I will blow daylight through you."

Serious floods have occurred in the Swiss Alps, the Jura mountains and the canton of Vaud and the lower valleys of Switzerland. Bridges have been carried away, roads destroyed and railway travel interrupted. Much damage has been done to crops. No fatalities are reported.

Another blue book on Venezuela has been issued by the English foreign office.

OVER FORTY DEAD.

FLYING EXPRESS CUTS EXCURSION TRAIN IN TWO.

Awful Disaster Occurs at a Crossing Near Jersey City—Reading Express Catches a West Jersey Excursion Broadside—Sixty Are Injured.

Scores Are Killed.

A flying express train on the Reading and Atlantic City Railroad crashed into a West Jersey Railroad excursion train at the crossing of the two roads Thursday night. At least forty people were killed outright and about sixty injured. Of the killed twelve were women, twenty-four men and four children. The crash was the most disastrous in the history of eastern railroad traffic.

The accident was the result of a collision between the 5:40 p. m. express train from Philadelphia over the Reading and Atlantic City Railroad and an excursion of Red Men from Bridgeton, N. J., and vicinity, returning from Atlantic City, over the West Jersey Railroad, at the crossing of the two roads a short distance out of Atlantic City.

At the second signal tower the tracks of the two roads cross diagonally. The Reading train was given the signal, but it either failed to work or the speed of the express was too great to be checked in time. It caught the excursion train broadside and plowed through it, literally cleaving it in twain. The engine of the Reading train was shattered to pieces. Every car was jammed to its fullest capacity.

As soon as the news reached Atlantic City the utmost consternation prevailed. Relief trains were dispatched to the scene, loaded with cots and bearing staffs of surgeons. As fast as the bodies were recovered they were carried into the local hospitals and undertakers' shops. A general fire alarm was sounded, and the department promptly responded and aided in the work of digging for the victims.

The worst fears were realized as the vigorous work of the relief gangs revealed the awful extent of the disaster. The first Reading relief train bore into the city twenty-seven mangled corpses, men, women and children. The next train, not an hour later, carried fifteen of the maimed and wounded, and two of these died soon after reaching the city.

Hospitals Overtaxed.

As train after train was hurried to the scene of the wreck and came back with its ghastly load the sanitarium which does duty as the city hospital quickly found its capacity overtaxed. Meanwhile others of the dead and injured were being carried to the private hospital at Ocean and Pacific avenues.

Edward Farr, engineer of the Reading train, was killed outright, as was another road man who rode on the engine with him. This man saw the collision coming and leaped from the cab an instant before the crash. Almost at the same instant the engine cut its way through and caught him directly in its path. His body and that of Farr were found under a heap of debris, but the engineer lay in what remained of the cab and his right hand still grasped the throttle. He had been faithful unto death and met it at his post. The fireman on the train had leaped a few seconds before and escaped with trifling injuries.

Not Known Who Is to Blame.

The excursion train was made up of fifteen cars, the foremost of which was a baggage car. This and the next two coaches caught the full force of the crash and were utterly demolished. What remained of the third car was tumbled into a ditch at the roadside. The responsibility for the accident cannot now be fixed.

Charles C. Rynick, of Bridgeton, who was in the excursion party, was in one of the rear cars. "When we saw that a collision was unavoidable," he said, "the scene in our car was terrific. Women fainted and men rushed in mad panic for the door. But it came almost before we had time to think. One car was cut right in two and the lower portion of it lifted bodily from the track and tumbled over. The roof of one of the cars fell in a mass and everybody in that car was buried under it. It simply dropped on top of the people. I don't know who is to blame. When we were about two miles out from Atlantic City, N. J., we came to a stop out in the meadows and stayed there for several minutes, but I do not know why. I think there must have been fully eighty or 100 killed. The only person with me was my 6-year-old son, and he was not hurt."

Fourteen of the injured are reported to have died at the sanitarium.

Superintendent I. N. Swigard, of the Philadelphia and Reading Company, places the number of dead at thirty-seven and the injured at about the same number.

William Thurlow, the operator at the block tower situated at the crossing, has been placed under arrest by order of the coroner.

Scene at the Fatal Place.

An Associated Press reporter was on one of the first relief trains sent out by the Pennsylvania Railroad. The train was in charge of a number of railroad officials and Prosecutor Perry of Atlantic County. It drew up in the darkness a few feet this side of the fatal point. Staggering in and out of ditches and stumbling over masses of broken timber, with only a few lanterns, the rescue gang set bravely to work. Axes and shovels were piled with the greatest vigor, and almost at every half a dozen strokes a mangled form was brought up and laid tenderly on the pallets. It was a terrible task, and the strongest of men turned aside, faint from the revelations of the workers.

A heap of blood-stained timbers, turned aside by one of the rescuers, brought to sight a woman's arm. It had been wrenched off at the shoulder.

Not five minutes later a chance blow from a pick revealed a human heart.

A Poisonous Orchid.

Few departments of botany are more interesting than that in which are considered the various ways in which nature provides for the protection of certain plants. A singular defensive quality has been discovered in a comparatively common orchid, one of the oldest of cultivated species. This plant has decided poisonous properties. The poison is localized in the stems and leaves, and those who are imprudent enough to handle the orchid instantly find themselves attacked by a special cutaneous irritation, which resembles in some measure that which appears in persons who have handled poison ivy. The offensive substance consists of an oily matter secreted by the glandular hairs. This matter is found, as in the Chinese primrose, deposited between the cellular wall and the cuticle of the terminal cellule of the hair. It is set free by the rupture of the cuticle. This poisonous secretion seems to perform the function of protecting the reproductive portion of the plant, for the virulence of the poison and the quantity secreted increase as the plant develops, and attain a maximum during the formation of the seeds.

Minor State Items.

A. B. Clarke & Co. of Elkhart, retail shoe merchants, have made an assignment. Liabilities and assets not stated.

The body of Seth Coy, a farmer, near Anderson, was found in a field near home. He had died of epilepsy.

Henry Bonkemper of Minster, Ohio, was instantly killed at Knox, by being thrown from a wagon, his head striking a bowlder.

Frank Carithers of Shelbyville, while dressing, crossed his leg to tie his shoe. In some way the leg was broken four inches below the hip.

The home of Charles Savage, who lives northwest of Centerville, was robbed of $30, a gold watch and $1,000 in notes, while the family were at church.

The third one to suicide in the last month is Earn Burgess, an orphan, 18 years old, of Yellow Bank Creek, a few miles from Brookville. He used a shotgun.

Alex. Bell, horse thief, and Sim Bryant, burglar, broken jail at Columbus by knocking Jailer Hull down while serving dinner. Bell had formerly served seven years in prison.

Dr. James W. Green, aged 72 years, a brother-in-law of the Hon. J. K. Gowdy, Chairman of the Indiana State Republican State Central Committee, died at Shelbyville, of Bright's disease.

William Hackmaster, a well-to-do farmer, aged 60 years, residing at Haubstedt, 11 miles south of Princeton, was struck by an Evansville and Terre Haute passenger train and instantly killed. He was deaf.

James Buchanan of Plymouth, aged 16, accidentally shot his sister Mattie, aged 10 in the right shoulder with a thirty-two calibre revolver. He had just taken it down from a shelf and was in the act of placing it in his pocket, but didn't know it was loaded. The girl may die.

A number of ice houses at Lafayette belonging to the Northern Lake and Artificial Ice Company, remote from fire protection, were destroyed by fire, with a loss including buildings and contents of perhaps $15,000, although much of the ice can be saved. The insurance is in excess of $8,000.

The 16-year-old son of William Woods, a farmer residing in Lafayette Township, in the west part of Madison County, was drowned in Indian Creek. His father had chastised him early in the day, and in a fit of anger the boy left home. There was nothing to indicate that his death was suicidal.

C. W. Binkley, a prominent young farmer and stock raiser near Princeton, it is alleged, has forged the names of his father, Lewis Binkley, and his father-in-law, Lewis Watkins, to notes and checks for over $5,000. Mr. Binkley, when last seen, was purchasing a ticket for St. Louis. He deserted a wife and a blind baby 2 years old.

At Dublin, George Corwin killed himself rather than live and suffer from a cancer. Corwin was about sixty-eight years of age, and for several years past he has had a cancer upon his nose. For a long time he had hoped that it would be cured, but for several months past he has been despondent and had come to the conclusion that he had not long to live, and so put a bullet through his brain.

Frank Reahard, a farmer of Pleasant Township, near Wabash, attempted to drive across Eel River at a ford. The stream was high and the current carried the team and Reahard into deep water. Reahard and both horses were drowned. The team and wagon were found on an island half a mile below the ford, but the body was not in the wagon and has not been recovered. He was about 30 years and married.

At a meeting of the Western Window Glass Manufacturers' Association at Anderson, J. E. Van Deventer of Anderson, J. H. Johnson of Dunkirk, and J. R. Jones of Hartford, were appointed as the Western Association's committee which will join with the Eastern Association's committee and meet the workers committee. These men will settle the wage question for the coming year. The workers will demand the restoration of the straight scale before the 22 per cent. cut three years ago. About 8 per cent. of this has been restored.

Charles A. Pajunk of Hammond, has brought suit against the Monon Railway Company and Fred Hall, chief engineer, demanding $15,000 personal damages, growing out of his arrest, as he alleges, at the instigation of defendants, during the American Railway Union strike in 1894. The plaintiff was arrested by the soldiers and removed to Chicago, where he was confined for several days, and he was then taken to Indianapolis. Thirty days afterward he was released. Mr. Pajunk now claims that he was not a member of the Debs organization, and that he took no part in the riots.

The State Bureau of Statistics has issued a crop bulletin. The figures given in this bulletin are compiled from reports made by the 1,016 Township Assessors to this Bureau, as required by law. The average yield of wheat for the several counties is made from reports received from 574 threshers, representing every county in the State, giving the number of bushels threshed from 144,648 acres. The acreage for 1896 is 2,862,236, an increase over last year of 144,043 acres. The total bushels is 24,574,358, being an average per acre of 8.5 bushels. This takes no account of abandoned or uncut acreage for this year, which last year was estimated at 8 per cent., and is doubtless fully as large this year. The reports from threshers show that much of the wheat is of an inferior quality, weighing 55 to 58 pounds.

THE SILENT SHORE.

By John Blundelle Burton

CHAPTER XV.

It was true enough that Guffanta did pass a considerable time in the Hotel Lepanto, smoking cigarettes, and always thinking deeply, whether seated in the corridor or in his own room upstairs.

But, although he had not allowed himself to say one word to any of the other men on the subject, and still spoke with certainty of ere long finding the murderer, he was forced to acknowledge that, for the time, he was baffled.

And then, as he did acknowledge this, he would rise from his chair and stretch out his long arms, and laugh grimly to himself.

"But only for a time, Miguel," he would say, "only for a time. He will come to you at last, he will come to you as the bird comes to the nest. Wait, wait, wait! You may meet him to-day, to-night! You will surely trap him at last!"

Meanwhile Lord Penlyn, when he was left alone, and when he could distract his thoughts from the desire of his life, the finding of the man who had slain Walter Cundall, was very unhappy.

Those thoughts would then turn to the girl he had loved deeply, to the girl whom he had cast off because she had ventured to let the idea come into her mind that it was he who might have done the deed.

He had cast her off in a moment when there had come into his heart a revulsion of feeling toward her, a feeling of horror that she, of all others in the world, could for one moment harbor such an idea against him.

Yet, he admitted to himself, there were grounds upon which even the most loving of women might be excused for having had such thoughts.

He had misled her at first, he had kept back the truth from her, he had given her reasons for suspicion—even against him, her lover.

And now they were parted, he had renounced her, and yet he knew that he loved her as fondly as ever; she was the one woman in the world to him. Would they ever come together again?

Was it possible, that if he, who had told her that never more in this world would he speak to her of love, should go back again and kneel at her feet and plead for pardon, it would be granted to him?

If he could think that; if he could think that when once his brother was avenged he might so plead and be so forgiven, then he could take courage and look forward hopefully to the future.

But at present they were strangers, they were as much parted as though they had never met; and he was utterly unhappy.

When Guffanta had declared himself, it had been in his mind to write and tell her all that he had newly learned; but he could not bring himself to write an ordinary letter to her.

It might be that, notwitnstanding the deep interest she took in his unhappy brother's fate, she would refuse to open any letter in his handwriting, and would regard it almost as an insult.

Yet he wanted to let her know what had now transpired, and he at last decided what to do.

He asked Stuart to direct an envelope for him to her, and he put a slip of paper inside it, on which he wrote:

"Corot has disclosed himself, and he, undoubtedly is not the murderer. He, however, has some strange knowledge of the actual man in his possession which he will not reveal, but says that he is certain, at last, to bring him to justice."

That was all, and he put no initials to it, but he thought that the knowledge might be welcome to her.

He had not expected any answer to this letter, or note, and from Ida none came, but a day or two after he had sent it, he received a visit from Sir Paul Raughton.

The baronet had come up to town especially to see him, and having learned from the footman that Lord Penlyn was at home, he bade the man show him to his master, and followed him at once.

As Penlyn rose to greet him, he noticed that Sir Paul's usually good-natured face bore a very serious expression, and he knew at once that the interview they were about to have would be an important one.

"I have come up to London expressly to see you, Lord Penlyn," Sir Paul said, shaking hands with him, coldly, "because I wish to have a thorough explanation of the manner in which you see fit to conduct yourself toward my daughter. No," he said, putting up his hand, as he saw that Penlyn was about to interrupt him, "hear me for one moment. I may as well tell you at once that Ida, that my daughter, has told me everything that you have confided to her with regard to your relationship to Mr. Cundall—which, I think, it was your duty also to have told me—and she has also told me the particulars of your last interview with her."

"I parted with her in anger," the other answered, "because there seemed to have come into her mind some idea that I—that I might have slain my brother."

"And for that, for a momentary suspicion on her part, a suspicion that would scarcely have entered her head had her mind not been in the state it is, you have seen fit to cast her off, and to cancel your engagement!"

"It was she, Sir Paul, who bade me speak no more of love to her," Penlyn said, "she who told me that, until I had found the murderer of my brother, I was to be no more to her."

"And she did well to tell you so," Sir Paul said; "for to whom but to you, his brother and his heir, should the task fall of avenging his cruel murder?"

"That, I told her, I had sworn to do, and yet she suspected me. And, Sir Paul, heaven knows I did not mean the words of anger that I spoke; I have bitterly repented of them ever since. If Ida will let me recall them, if she will give me again her love—if you think there is any hope of that—I will go back and sue to her for it on my knees."

The baronet looked thoughtfully at him for a moment, and then he said: "Do you know that she is very ill?"

"Ill! Why have I not been told of it?"

"Why should you have been told? It was your words to her, and her excitement over your brother's murder, that has brought her illness about."

"Let me go and see her?"

"You cannot see her. She is in bed and delirious from brain fever; and on her lips are but two names which she repeats incessantly, your own and your brother's."

The young man leaned forward on the table and buried his head in his hands, as he said:

"Poor Ida! poor Ida! Why should this trouble also come to you? And why need I have added to your unhappiness by my cruelty?"

Then he looked up and said to Sir Paul: "When will she be well enough for me to go to her and plead for pardon? Will it be soon, do you think?"

"I do not know," the other answered sadly. "But if, when the delirium has left her, I can tell her that you love her still and regret your words, it may go far towards her recovery."

"Tell her that," Penlyn said, "and that my love is as deep and true as ever, and that, at the first moment she is in a fit condition to hear it, I will, myself, come and tell her so with my own lips. And also tell her that, never again, will I by word or deed cause her one moment's pain."

"I am glad to hear you speak like this," Sir Paul said, "glad to find that I had not allowed my darling to give herself to a man who would cast her off because she, for one moment, harbored an unworthy suspicion of him."

"This unhappy misunderstanding has been the one blot upon our love," Penlyn said; "if I can help it, there shall never be another."

As he spoke these words, Sir Paul put his hand kindly on his shoulder, and Penlyn knew that, in him, he had one who would faithfully carry his message of love to the woman who was the hope of his life.

"And now," Sir Paul said, "I want you to give me full particulars of everything that has occurred since that miserable night. I want to know everything fully, and from your lips. What Ida has been able to tell me has been sadly incoherent."

Then, once more—as he had had now so often to go over the sad history to others, with but little information added to each recital—Lord Penlyn told Sir Paul everything that he knew, and of the strange manner in which the Senor Guffanta had come into the matter, as well as his apparent certainty of finding the murderer.

"You do not think it is a bold ruse to throw off suspicion from himself?" Sir Paul asked. "A daring man, such as he seems to be, might adopt such a plan."

"No," the other answered, "I do not. There is something about the man, stranger as he is, that not only makes me feel certain that he is perfectly truthful in what he says, and that he really does possess some strange knowledge of the assassin that will enable him to find that man at last, but also makes the others feel equally certain."

"They all believe in him, you say?" Sir Paul asked thoughtfully.

"All! That is, all but Philip Smerdon, who is the only one who has not seen him. And I am sure that, if he too saw him and heard him, he would believe."

"Philip Smerdon is a thorough man of the world," Sir Paul said. "I should be inclined to give weight to his judgment."

"I am sure that he is wrong in this case, and that when he sees Guffanta he will acknowledge himself to be so. No one who has seen him can doubt his earnestness."

"What can be the mystery concerning your garden? A mystery that is a double one, because it brings your house, of all houses in London, into connection with the murder of the very man who, at the moment, was the actual owner of it? That is inexplicable!"

"It is," Penlyn said, "inexplicable to every one. But the Senor tells us that when we know what he knows, and when he has brought the murderer to bay, we shall see that it is no mystery at all."

CHAPTER XVI.

Although the Senor Guffanta had not, as yet, in answer to many questions put to him, been able to say positively that he was on the immediate track of the murderer of Walter Cundall, he still continued to inspire confidence in those by whom he was surrounded; and it had now come to be quite accepted amongst all whom he met at Occleve House that, although he was working darkly and mysteriously, he was in some way nearing the object he had in view.

It may have been his intense self-confidence, the outward appearance of which he never allowed to fail, that impressed them thus, or the stern look with which he accompanied any words he ever uttered in connection with the assassin; or it may have been the manner he had of making inquiries of all descriptions of every one who had known anything of the dead man, that led them to believe in him; but that they did believe in him there was no doubt.

In the time he had at his disposal, after transacting any affairs he might have to manage for the merchant who had appointed him his agent in London, he was continually passing from one spot to another, sometimes spending hours at Mr. Cundall's house in Grosvenor place, and sometimes a long period of time each day at Occleve House; but to no one did he ever say one word indicative of either success or failure.

And, when he was alone in either of these places, his proceedings were of a nature that, had they been witnessed by any one, would have caused them to wonder what it was that he was seeking for.

He would study attentively every picture that was a portrait, whether painting or engraving, and for photograph albums, of which there were a number in both houses, he seemed to have an untiring curiosity.

He would look them over and over again, pausing occasionally a long time over some man's face that struck him, and then would turn the leaf and go on to another; and then, when he had, for the second or third time, exhausted one album, he would take up another, and again go through that.

To Dobson, who was by the outside world regarded as the man who had the whole charge of the case, the Senor's actions, and his absolute refusal to confide in him, were almost maddening.

To any question that he asked, he received nothing but the regular answer:

"Patience, my good Dobson, patience," and with that he was obliged to be content.

For himself he had done nothing; he was no nearer having any idea now as to who the murderer was than he had been the morning after the deed had been committed, and as day after day went by, he began to doubt whether Guffanta was any nearer finding the man who was wanted than he was.

"But if he doesn't do something pretty quick," he said to one of the men who was supposed to be employed under him in investigating the case, "I shall put a spoke in his wheel."

"Why, what will you do, Mr. Dobson?" his underling asked.

"I shall just go up to the Home Office, and when they ask me, as they do regularly, if I have got anything to report in connection with the Cundal case, I shall tell them that the Senor professes to know a good deal that he won't divulge, and ask them to have him up before them, and make him tell what he does know."

"And suppose he won't tell, Mr. Dobson. What then?"

"Why, he'll be made to tell, that's all. It isn't right, and it isn't fair that, if he knows anything and can't find the man himself, he should be allowed to keep it a secret and prevent me from earning the reward. I'll bet I'd soon find the man if I had his information—that is, if he's really got any."

"Don't it strike you, Mr. Dobson," the other asked, "that there is some mystery in connection with Occleve House that he knows of? What with his having the garden locked up, and his always being about there!"

"It did once, but I have thought it over, and I can't see how the house can be connected with it. You see, on that night it so happened there was no one in the house but the footmen and the women servants. His lordship and the valet had gone off to stay at the hotel, and Mr. Smerdon had gone down in the morning to the country seat, so what could the murderer have had to do with that particular house? And it ain't the house the Senor seems to think so much about—it's the garden."

"I can't make that garden business out at all," the other said; "what on earth has the garden got to do with it?"

"That's just what he won't say. But you mark my words, I ain't going to stand it much longer, and he'll have to say. If he don't tell pretty soon what he knows, I shall get the Home Office to make him."

Meanwhile the Senor, who had bewildered Lord Penlyn and Mr. Stuart by the connection which he seemed to feel certain existed between the garden of Occleve House and the murder in the Park, excited their curiosity still more when he suddenly announced one evening that he was going down, with his lordship's permission, to pay a visit to Occleve Chase.

"Certainly," Penlyn replied; "you have my full permission; I shall be glad if you will always avail yourself of anything that is mine. But, Senor Guffanta, you connect my houses strangely with this search you are making—first it was this one, and now it is Occleve Chase—do you not think you should confide a little more in me?"

"I cannot confide in you yet, Lord Penlyn. And, frankly, I do not know that I have much to confide. Nor am I connecting Occleve Chase with the murder. But I have a wish to see that house. I am fond of old houses, and it was Walter's property once, though he never possessed it. I might draw inspiration from a visit to it."

For the first time, since he had known the Senor, Lord Penlyn doubted if he was speaking frankly to him.

It was useless for Guffanta to pretend that he was not now connecting Occleve Chase in his own mind with the murder, as he had certainly connected the old disused garden previously—but whom did he suspect?

For one moment the idea flashed through his mind that perhaps, after all, he still suspected him; but another instant's thought served to banish that idea.

Whatever this dark, mysterious man might be working out in his own brain, at least it could not be that.

Had he not said that, by some strange chance, he had once stood face to face with the assassin?

Having done so, there could be no thought in his mind that he, Penlyn, was that assassin.

But, if it was not him whom he suspected, who was it?

"Well," he said, "you must take your own way, Senor Guffanta, and I can only hope it may land you aright. Only, if you would confide more in me, I should be glad."

"I tell you that at present I cannot do so. Later on, perhaps, you will understand my reason for silence. Meanwhile, be sure that before long this man will be in my power."

FOOD ADULTERATION.

How the Abuse Is Dealt with at the Hub.

A little cheese story is told in the annual report of Dr. Charles L. Harrington, milk inspector, to the effect that during the early part of the year the first of what was intended to be a series of carloads of "filled cheese" from Wisconsin was received in Boston and sold to reputable dealers. Analysis of samples showed the article to be a product of lard and skimmed milk. A warrant was issued for the arrest of the selling agent, who at once left the city. The dealers who had bought were notified not to sell, and all stopped payment of their checks and returned the goods to the agent in Chicago. Since that time, so far as is known, there have been no further shipments.

"The local oleomargarine trade is now virtually dead," says Dr. Harrington, "owing to the enforcement of chapters 58 and 412 of the acts of 1891. Chapter 58 prohibits the sale of oleomargarine colored in imitation of yellow butter, and chapter 412 prescribes a number of regulations to be observed by dealers, and prohibits the serving of oleomargarine in restaurants and hotels without notification to the guest of the true character of the substance served. But ten persons or firms were licensed or registered as dealers in oleomargarine during the year, against seventy-four during 1894. Most of these ten ceased selling after a short experience, the sale of colored goods meaning prosecution, the keeping of uncolored natural oleomargarine meaning limited sales and greater or less pecuniary loss. The prosecution of complaints based on twenty-one sales of the colored article sufficed to drive the fraudulent imitation out of the market. At present those desiring to use colored oleomargarine obtain it on order from Rhode Island, or by ordering through agents who have regular canvassing routes in the city. The tubs are forwarded by express. The chief buyers are keepers of restaurants and boarding houses. For a time a considerable increase was observed in the use of the article in restaurants, and seventy-one cases were entered in court for failure to notify guests."

In regard to milk, Dr. Harrington states that, while a number of samples examined have shown unusually extensive adulteration—one, for instance, from a store, being more than half water—the tendency has been, as in previous years, constantly toward improvement. This is conspicuously noticeable in the case of restaurants. The adulterations were, as heretofore, mainly abstraction of cream and addition of water. The use of preservatives and coloring agents is very uncommon, and, although more samples containing these substances were found than was the case during the year 1894, their use is more restricted, for the colored and preserved specimens came chiefly from two dealers, both of whom paid heavy fines on several counts.

The character of the vinegar and cider vinegar samples obtained has continued to be uniformly good, but few being found which required complaint in court.—Boston Transcript.

Hawaiian huckleberries grow in clusters on low bushes right on the very brink of the brimstone beds, and are so numerous that a bushel may be easily gathered in half an hour. In appearance they somewhat resemble a cranberry, and the flavor is pleasantly suggestive of grapes.

PLAYING THE PIANO.

NEW AND INTERESTING THEORY IS ADVANCED.

Prominent Instructor Says the Study of Anatomy, Physiology and Knowledge of Acoustics Is Necessary for a Thorough Mastery of the Pianoforte.

Hints to Pianists.

H. A. Kelso, of Handel Hall, Chicago, presents a new theory of piano playing based upon principles of anatomy, physiology, acoustics and psychology, and in an exhaustive article which he has published on the subject undertakes to show how piano playing may be reduced to a scientific basis. He advises the study of anatomy, that the teacher may learn to develop a good "piano hand" of physiology that we may learn the fundamental causes which operate in velocity playing. We learn, he says, to avoid and successfully treat weeping sinews and musician's cramp. By the understanding and application of the laws governing muscle innervation we learn to control and husband the potent force termed nervous energy. Misdirected nerve energy causes physical disease and disorders nature's internal arrangements; sickness is the result. Misdirected nerve energy makes sickly piano players and unhealthy music is the result. Extracts from his article follow:

Better modes of developing the power of memorizing and of preserving untouched the pupil's individuality, are the result of psychological study. That we should study acoustics "goes without saying," as we cannot know too much of sound. Pedal management, tonal coloring and the science of harmony are all better understood through a knowledge of the properties of acoustics. A knowledge of the anatomy of the hand, wrist, fore and upper arm gives the student greater facility in individual muscular control. In consequence of the control thus gained, the whole arm becomes more expressive. A crisply-leggiero effect can best be produced by energizing the muscles of the upper arm and those of the fingers, while relaxing the wrist muscles. This is a very important point, and is simply the application of the mechanical principle of the resistance being equal to the force of the blow.

WHAT SHALL I PLAY?

The outer side of the hand is naturally weaker than the inner side, yet it is just as essential a factor in playing. The melody and fundamental bass notes are most frequently played with the weakest fingers; hence the necessity of building up the outer region of the hand. A development of the pronator muscles in the forearm renders possible a good position of the hand for playing octaves, arpeggios, scales, chords and trills with the fourth and fifth fingers. Rolling octave playing is dependent upon a separated control of the supinator and pronator muscles from those of the fingers. Speed requires the shortening of the latent period of the muscle, and this can be accomplished only by taking up the slack of the tendons. The principal muscle concerned in producing a crisply staccato effect with finger action is the extensor, as upon this muscle depends the brevity of tone.

MOVEMENT IN STACCATO OCTAVE PLAYING, NO. 2.

By elevating the wrist, curving the second finger, and depressing it at the knuckle joint, the finger is in the best possible position for producing the effect.

The physiology of velocity playing is a subject of great interest to the practical piano teacher. In some persons rapidity of movement is natural, the muscular tissue is very irritable and exercises of speed do not demand great effort. In others the muscles, although energetic, obey the orders of the will with considerable slowness. A great expenditure of nervous energy is necessary to obtain a rapid movement. Illustrations of these differences may be noticed in the gymnasium, in fencing, boxing, rowing, walking, and in piano playing. Pfluger is authority for the statement that when a nerve is stimulated by action of the will or otherwise, the stimulus received by the nerve increases in intensity as it reaches the muscle.

The three attributes of tone are force, pitch and quality. Force is dependent upon the amplitude of the vibrations. Pitch is dependent upon the vibrational number—the greater the number the higher the pitch. From these facts we deduct principles of study which are practicable to an intelligent student of piano playing. The overtones of tones sounded in the upper registers are of such great vibrational number that the ear fails to establish a definite pitch for them. Then, again, the waves of such tones are so short that they vanish almost immediately after sounding; therefore the pedal, which permits the tone to be re-enforced, may be used more freely in the upper register than in the middle or lower. One tone sustained by the pedal in the middle is equal in intensity to about four in the upper register. It is possible by a delicate manipulation of the pedal to obliterate the discordant harmonies in the upper, without losing an organ point in the lower register, which sometimes of necessity must be sustained by the pedal.

A point which is of equal importance with the manner of striking is that of the manner of leaving the keys, for upon this hinges the entire system of legato octave playing. Wide skips, such as a bass note and its chord, and broad intervals either in the accompaniment or melody, may be made to sound legato without the use of the pedal, by releasing the finger from the key slowly, thus damping the tone gradually. Many beautiful effects may be produced by this use of the pedal.

All movements of the body are either natural, habitual or hereditary. In certain states of consciousness we bring into play certain muscles just as naturally as water seeks its lowest level. It is for this reason that a pupil is sometimes taught to play a passage with widely differing movements of the hand and arm by different teachers. Thus it not infrequently happens that an instructor scatters broadcast over the land, through his pupils, peculiar mannerisms which he inherited from his ancestors. It may readily be seen that this is radically wrong, and that such would not be the case were all teaching based on philosophic principles.

In playing the piano habits will necessarily be formed, and movements based on the natural laws of expression of the body are more easily acquired, and, when acquired, enable us to express musical thoughts more clearly and more forcibly than habits formed at hap-hazard. Technic, as applied to piano playing, is the power to express musical thoughts. This involves not only the ability to play the proper notes with correct fingers, but requires such control of the muscles and nerves that all gradations of tonal coloring may be expressed. Piano playing has been compared to an electric current—the musical thought emanates from the brain, passes through the nerves which move the muscles to be used, the finger strikes the key, the hammer strikes a wire, which in its turn produces a tone, the ear conveys the tone back to the brain, thus completing the circuit. Weak or sluggish muscles, therefore, not readily yielding themselves to the nervous stimulus flowing from the brain, will break the circuit, and the musical phrase will fall short of the ideal conception.

In piano playing the purely mental intellectual phrase finds its expression in the circumscribed movements of the fingers and hand, using the knuckles or wrist as the center of motion. Passages from Bach's "Fugues and Inventions" admirably illustrate this statement. An emotional phrase demands more freedom of movement, which the firmness of the elbow—the emotional center—and length of the forearm readily supply. Climaxes and passionate outbursts of musical feeling demand the added strength and wider swing through space of the entire arm from the vital center of the shoulder.

From a technical standpoint I classify all music under five general heads—octaves, chords, arpeggios, scales and embellishments—and these are again subdivided. Octaves are of five varieties, namely, legato, staccato, broken, interlocking and deceptive. Chords are either broken or solid. In order to play an arpeggio properly it must be taught in ten or twelve different ways, and the pupil will then understand how to correctly practice all arpeggios. I usually teach the principles of arpeggios before attempting scales, as the movements of the arm, wrist and fingers are very much the same in both, and are more easily comprehended in the former than in the latter. Under the head of embellishments I include all varieties of trills, mordents and appogiaturas.

I consider the wrist the distributing center for the energy of the upper and forearm. It is impossible for the nervous stimulus from the brain to be properly conducted to the finger tips when the many tendons that pass through the wrist are tense. Almost every pupil beginning the study of the piano has some unconscious mannerism or trick peculiar to himself of using the agents of expression. Before eradicating these bad habits and building up those which are correct, a certain condition of passivity or relaxation must be achieved, just as the potters' clay must be rendered soft and plastic before it can be modeled into the desired forms. I find for this purpose the Delsartean exercises known as relaxing or devitalizing of inestimable value to the beginner and advanced student alike.

We can utter so many words with one breath, and when that is exhausted we must draw upon the reservoir—the air—for another supply. We can play a rapid succession of notes with a given supply of nerve energy, and when that is exhausted we must draw upon the reservoir—the brain—for another supply. This necessity of our physical nature is the basis of rhythm, and if the regularly recurring inclination to build up the waste is unheeded, health and strength will be impaired. Do not wait until a sensation of weariness is felt before renewing the energy, as we should no more play with exhausted strength than speak with exhausted breath.

While conscious technic kills expression, the very core of the true system of technical expression is embodied in Hamlet's advice to the players, "Suit the action to the word," which, freely adapted, may be made to read, "Suit the technical interpretation to the musical thought."

A PATH FOR THE CYCLERS.

How the Indianapolis Wheelway League Built an 18-Mile Roadway.

Two months ago the Wheelway League of Indianapolis was incorporated for the purpose of building a bicycle path to be open to the public. It was capitalized at $10,000 and the riders of the city were asked to take stock at $5 a share. Subscriptions came in quite rapidly and work was soon begun on the first section of the path, which occupies what was once the towpath of the old Indiana canal. This path had not ben used for many years, and when work began on it it was little more than a mere levee, with a rank growth of trees and shrubs on one side and the slow running waters of the canal on the other. The canal is on the east side of the path, which gives the full benefit of the shade of the trees during the afternoon.

The path extends to a suburb ten miles distant. All of this is so well shaded that except early in the afternoon a rider can scarcely get a glimpse of the sun after 12 o'clock. The path varies in width, conforming to the top of the levee, but is not less than eight feet wide at any place, and in some places as much as twelve feet. The levee was first dressed off with a road scraper and then a coat of gravel, slightly mixed with earth, was well packed with a heavy roller. On top of this was rolled a thin coating of cinders and sand mixed, making as smooth a coat as could be desired, and one that has no suction to cling to the tire.

At many places along the path rustic seats have been placed, and at one point, where there are two very fine springs, there are a number of long rustic benches and a bicycle rack that can accommodate nearly 100 wheels.

ART AMONG THE ESKIMOS.

Clever Carvers in Ivory and Some Who Can Sketch.

We did much entertaining, as we were continually visited by different members of the tribe of two hundred or more. They were content to sit and share the warmth and shelter of our house, and gaze on the curious things it contained. They would turn the pages of a magazine by the hour, and, holding the book upside down, ask questions about the pictures. What particularly pleased them was anything in the shape of a gun, knife, or ammunition. Of eating they never tired. The amount of food they consumed was astonishing, and they particularly reveled in our coffee, biscuit, and pemmican. This love was manifested by a little ditty that they sang quite often:

"Uh-bis-e-ken,
Uh-pem-e-kem."

The women are very clever with the needle, and as most of us had adopted the Innuit boc, of sealskin, which required frequent mending, they were always in demand. In mechanical ingenuity they are remarkable. Both men and women are carvers in ivory, and the tiny figures—human as well as animal—that they fashion in this material, although somewhat crude, show no mean ability. This skill is also to be remarked in regard to the use of the pencil. One of them, As-sey-e-yeh, drew from memory a steamer in perspective, with the reflections in the water, and that, too, in a suggestive and artistic way.—Century.

DEATH TO SEVENTEEN.

Awful Havoc Wrought by the Storm in Pennsylvania.

One of the most terrible results of the Pennsylvania storm Monday night was the drowning of a number of coal miners in the Painter's Run district, just over the Washington County line. The boarding house which they occupied was blown down and swept away, and of the sixteen miners sleeping in it fifteen are believed to have been drowned. They were all foreigners, mostly Italians, and were employed in the mines of Col. W. P. Rend and the Ridgeway-Bishop Coal Company.

The boarding house was a little mining settlement called Cecil, on the line of the eight-mile branch of the Panhandle road, which leaves the Chartiers division at Bridgeville. The branch runs over to McDonald and Cecil is located midway between the two points. The fatality occurred at 4 o'clock in the morning, when the small stream, Painter's Run, which empties into Chartiers creek, was suddenly swollen into a raging torrent by a cloudburst. The stream had been very high on account of the rain, but little damage had been done before the rush of water which carried away the tenement house.

A great deal of mining and oil property was damaged in the district along the run. The water rose some places to a depth of eighteen feet. The loss in the district will amount to thousands of dollars. Many narrow escapes are reported from the valley through which Painter's Run courses, and it is not unlikely that some others have perished. Several houses in the valley were swept away.

The full extent of the damage wrought by the hurricane in Pittsburg and vicinity Monday night was not known until daylight, when wreck and ruin were apparent on all sides. Steeples were blown from churches and adjoining buildings crushed, houses were unroofed, trees broken off and in some cases torn up by the roots, while the havoc caused by the heavy rainfall of last week was repeated. Summed up, with many outlying districts to hear from, the result in Pittsburg was two lives lost, thirty-six persons injured, many, it is feared, fatally, and property damaged to the amount of $100,000.

MAUD IS MARRIED.

Daughter of the House of Wales Wedded to Charles of Denmark.

Princess Maud, third daughter of the Prince and Princess of Wales, was married at 12:30 o'clock Wednesday to Prince Charles, second son of Crown Prince Frederick of Denmark. The ceremony took place in the private chapel of Buckingham Palace, London. So far as the general public of London is concerned the wedding did not attract as much attention as had been bestowed upon other royal marriages of recent years. As Princess Maud's procession entered the chapel the choir sang the hymn "Paradise." The archbishop of Canterbury met the bride and bridegroom at the altar and there performed the marriage service, at the conclusion of which he delivered a short address.

COLORADO FLOOD VICTIMS.

Twenty-nine Persons Known to Have Been Drowned.

The cloudbursts in the foothills west of Denver Friday night, resulting in floods in which twenty-nine people are known to have perished, was followed Saturday afternoon by another terrible storm, the like of which has seldom been seen. At Morrison, seventeen miles from Denver, in the foothills, where twenty-two persons were drowned in the flood Friday night, people were terror-stricken when they saw the second storm approaching. Hail began to fall soon after 1 o'clock. The storm kept on with steadily increasing force till nearly 4 o'clock, when a black cloud of unusual density began to gather in the vicinity of Mount Vernon, a few miles from Morrison. Then the cloud burst, and in an instant a wall of water came down the gulch fully six feet deep. Everything in its path was carried away. The raging torrent carried along with it houses, barns and debris of all kinds. Morrison is indeed a stricken city. The dead number twenty-nine. Numerous parties from Denver, camping out at Evergreen, Idlewild, Idledale and other places in the mountains near Morrison are safe. Many hairbreadth escapes and thrilling rescues are reported.

Damaging floods have also swept down the valleys in some of the Eastern States. The general conditions throughout the Monongahela valley is critical. In many places the rains were the heaviest known in twenty-five years. The Ohio valley will experience a flood its entire length. Reports from West Virginia, Kentucky and Ohio show all the tributaries of the Ohio river overflowing their banks. The damage to railroads and other property is general and very great. The wheat and crops that were in shock are generally ruined. The loss on highway bridges and the railroads is the heaviest ever known in the Ohio valley.

Don't Scare.

James Griswald has received one of the calamity circulars, that are being sent out by the Connecticut Mutual Life Insurance Co. to their policy holders all over the land. It states in substance, that if free silver prevails, they will have to pay their policy holders in depreciated dollars. Or, in other words, that the selling value of a policy will be greatly reduced. This is a dodge similar to that when the "protected industries" sent out circulars to those who had business relations with them, telling what stagnation would result if these "infant industries," were not "protected." It is merely an electioneering scheme, to get votes for Hightaxer McKinley. Mr. Griswold is 77 now, and feels that it may not be many years before his three policies in that company mature. But he sends word to the company that if they feel scared, he is willing to toke his policies all in silver at 100 cents an the dollar. Mr. Griswold is an earnest advocate of the white metal, and this leads us to the remark, that his son Howard now at Leadville, votes this fall with the democrats for the first time.

Campaign Songs.

We have just received from the music publishing house of The Brainard's Sons Co., 151 Wabash Ave., Chicago, a copy of the "Red Hot Democratic Campaign Song Book" for the campaign of 1896. The book contains solos, duets, mixed and male quartets and is especially arranged for campaign clubs. It is not a cheap word edition, and is sold for the remarkably low price of 10 cts. or a $1.00 per dozen post-paid.

Still Going.

The Angola Magnet makes that silver cane story one degree wilder.

"Mike Long, of Butler, marched into Auburn at the head of the Butler delegation on the day of the recent Republican County Convention, and used for a walking stick a cane made of American tin. The editor of the Auburn COURIER (Democratic) saw it, and being unable to tell the difference between tin and silver, THE COURIER came out with a flaming announcement that Mike Long had "come out for free silver."

As to this we have already published the exact words we did say. Now we say again.

1. Mike did not march at the head of any procession, or if he did, we did not see him. And we nowhere said he did.

2. The COURIER did not come out with flaming headlines, or any other, but in a modest little local note, gave Mike the joke.

3. We have a small auger we will lend republican editors. So they can make an entrance into their skulls large enough to let a little joke in. At present their heads apyear to be solid bone.

First Gun.

The first state election of the campaign was in Alabama Monday. The democrats and silver voters, generally, beat the combined populist and republican ticket by about 40,000. It was a regular landslide, and is a straw to show which way the wind blows. Vermont, Arkansas and Maine come early in September; Florida and Georgia, Oct. 7, come next.

Bogardus

The great rifle shot expert, who has for many years held the championship of the world, is also a great speaker on political questions. Last evening he held a large audience spell bound by his eloquence and argument on the silver question. He has a very ingenious and original way of campaigning. At 4 p. m. he gave an exhibition of his wonderful shooting. Then at 6:30 he he had his speaking stand put up by the public square, and a fine singer collected a great crowd by his songs. Then Mr. Bogardus talked awhile about a book he wrote and is selling. It is made up of household recipes. Then another song and then his talk on free silver. He is an ardent Bryan man.

The Lightning

Sunday, Mr. and Mrs. Sherman Dickinson were driving near the McKinley school house, and saw where the lightning had struck a good sized tree, and torn out a piece as large as a rail, throwing it across the road in such a way as to plow a large hole under the fence. Hall and Son

Were The Unfortunate Men who were shot.

MR. FRANK BOYLE

Of Auburn Juct. Caught One Man In the woods.

Tuesday's Daily.

Another unfortunate and bloody affair took place yesterday. It was the fight in Butler township between the Halls, father and son, and the tramps who broke into their house. Rumors of the trouble began to reach here in the afternoon, and by night all sorts of rumors were afloat. We will give the correct version, as we obtained it from Co. Supt. Merica who went down there last evening after it was all over and got the story from Mr. and Mrs. Hall, and their son Howard. Mrs. Merica and Mrs. Hall are sisters.

Mr. Hall lives on a small farm just below the station at New Era, near the track but was then working with the Lake Shore bridge gang who were putting in a bridge near Stoner's crossing. The son, Howard, about sixteen years old, had gone over in a buggy to LaOtto to get his father a pair of rubber boots, and came back by the bridge and gave them to him, and then drove home. We now go back to Mrs. Hall. She was alone, and at about ten a. m. was away from the house for a time, though only a few rods distant, getting potatoes for dinner. After a little, she saw A. J. Shutt call at the house, and went in to see him, as she wanted to buy some of the extracts he sell. She went to get Mr. Hall's money to pay him, and found it was not there. Then she looked for Sunday school money she knew her son, Howard, had, and it, too, was gone. She could not understand it, and at last concluded Howard had taken the money all with him. So she did not make the purchase. After Mr. Shutt had left, she went into the house again, feeling a little uneasy about the matter. She then for the first time noticed that things were in some disorder, and then saw that a screen at one of the windows had been torn down. This puzzled her still more, and the son coming in about that time from his trip to LaOtto, she asked him about the screen, and about the money. He knew nothing of either They concluded at once, they had been visited by thieves, in fact, found that some of Howard's clothes were gone. Howard at once concluded to go on the war path. He went up to the station and borrowed a revolver from the station agent, Mr. Pearson, came back, got into his buggy, and believing the thieves must have gone south, he drove down that way, and to the bridge where, his father, Tom Hall, was working. The men were just eating dinner, and Howard called to his father to get in the buggy and go with him, as their house had been entered and some money and clothes taken. Just then Howard saw two men coming down the track and remarked that he believed they were the men, and the two fellows evidently noticed they had attracted attention, turned off the track into the wagon roads, as if they were going across the country. Howard jumped from the buggy, ran up the road, and the bridge men told Hall, if he wanted to keep up with the boy, he had better take the buggy, which he soon did and followed up. When Howard met the men, he saw one had his, Howard's, pants on, and said to him: "Hold on, pard, I guess I'll take those pants." "The hell you will!" said the tramp." "That's what I said" rejoined Howard, and as he spoke, the tramp had out a revolver and shot him at close range, the ball grazing and making a slight wound across his right side. Mr. Hall had almost got to them and had seen the tramp draw the revolver, and called not to shoot, and jumped from the buggy. The boy seemed dazed by the sudden attack, and stepped back a little, then pulled out his revolver and fired. The tramp fell and doubled up as if hit, but it is believed this was only a trick, and as he fell he fired again hitting the boy in the left side, the ball striking a rib near the heart, making a bad wound. The tramp then rose up, and fired at Hall who was rushing in, hitting him squarely, on the left leg about four inches above the knee, grazing the bone and lodging at the skin on the outside of the leg. Both tramp and boy, jumped behind trees, and the battle began in earnest. The boy got an advantage by "uncovering" his enemy, getting one side far enough to leave the tramp exposed. The latter seeing this made a dash to get away, managed to get through wire fence to the railroad track, the boy following in the same way, through wire fences and so on over into the ground beyond. They both kept shooting, and just as the bridge men came hurrying up, the tramp stopped and they called to Howard to shoot him. Howard incautiously called back that his cartridges were all gone. The tramp had pulled out a second revolver and used it, and it was seen it would no longer be safe to follow him, they gave up the chase.

We now go back to Mr. Hall and the other tramp. When Mr. Hall was shot, and the two combatants took to trees, Howard told his father to take care of the second tramp and he would take care of the one behind the tree. The other tramp was unarmed, as also was Mr. Hall, but he did not want to go with Hall. He said he had a girl, or a mother (Hall and his son differ as to the word used), who lived in Auburn, and said "What would she think of it?" He even produced a small book to prove who he was, and said he had nothing to do with the trouble. Hall told them he would hang to him, although he was hurt, and made the fellow get through onto the track, and as the bridge men came up, Hall feeling faint from loss of blood from an artery being cut off, called to the bridge men, then caught his prisoner by the neck and both fell and the bridge men relieved Hall of his charge He soon recovered and the prisoner was later taken to Fort Wayne, as this ground is in Allen county. The tramp with the revolver was followed and it was discovered he had pulled off Howard's pants and thrown them away. Mrs. Hall had gone to the station and sent a message to Sheriff Stroh at Auburn, at the same time that her son started off to hunt the thieves. But Stroh could do nothing as the man was caught in Allen county, and later the officers over there came on. At Hall's it was found the thieves had taken Mr. Hall's hat, Howard's coat and pants, two razors, and a revolver belonging to one of the bridge men boarding there. After the fight and escape of that tramp, many men from the surrounding farms tured out to hunt the tramp, and later on the young bloodhounds owned by Agent McAllister of the G. R. & I. road at LaOtto, assisted. But up to this afternoon have not got him Hall and his son had their wounds dressed and are doing well, neither being in danger, though seriously hurt.

LATER—At half past two this afternoon the tramp who did the shooting was brought in and lodged in jail. He was captured near Coburntown by by Frank Boyle, of the Junction. He is no doubt the man wanted, as he wears a "green sweater" as the Halls say he did. Boyle was visiting at St. Joe and some chileren reported seeing a man asleep in the woods. He got a revolver and routed the fellow from one swamp to another, then borrowed a gun, and when he got near him again, took aim and ordered him to hold up his hands, which he did and Frank had him.

This, Wednesday morning, we learn that the tramp caught by Boyle had robbed a house near St. Joe, and today the parties came up and recognized a quilt and pillow he got, and he had just 26 cents in change, the amount their little girl had missed. Sheriff Stroh took him in a buggy this morning, and went down to Hall's to have him identified by Mr. Hall, who cannot get out of bed. The son was here last night and identified him easily. He will be taken on down to Ft. Wayne. The other tramp is still there and not here, as we were told yesterday.

RUNNING ON TIME

An illustrating the degree of efficiency to which the present management of the B. & O. R. R. has brought its motive power equipment and spirit de corps of the operating staff, we call attention to the fact that during the months of April, May and June the passenger trains and fast freight trains have almost invariably arrived at their respective destinations on schedule time. The very few exceptions to the general rule were due to causes inseparable from railway operation, and against which no forethought can wholly guard. It may be safely said that during the period named no road in America, comparable in magnitude to the B. & O., can surpass its record for punctuality in train movement.

Child Killed.

Tillie Marie Cledwell Mangled By the Lake Shore Local.

At about 9 o'clock Wednesday morning, Tillie Marie Caldwell fell from the caboose of the north bound Lake Shore local and was killed instantly. A sister of Mr. Caldwell who has a position in Indianapolis has been visiting here and this morning took the local for Waterloo expecting to get a train there for Ligonier. Mrs. Caldwell and Marie accompanied her to the train and as the local was not ready to leave they entered the caboose and waited as company for Miss Caldwell, Marie was walking back and forth in the caboose and happened to be on the front platform just as the trainman coupled the train. The sudden jar tipped her forward falling to the ground, and a brake beam struck her, killing her almost instantly. The little girl was nearly six years of age and an adopted child by Mr. and Mrs. Caldwell.

CORRESPONDENCE.

BUTLER.

Adam Sternberg sr. an old soldier is very dangerously ill with cancer in his throat, with no hopes of his recovery.

Elder Hudson of the M. E. church held quarterly meeting at Butler last Sunday. The house was well filled in day time, and at night much larger numbers attended. He was assisted at night in communion services by Rev. Smith of the U. B. church, Rev. Dustman of the Lutheran church, and the preacher in charge.

Mrs. M. I. Campbell was sick last week.

The sensation of the week has been the Webster murder. Our people turned out in large numbers to visit the scene last Friday.

Nine Epidemics

Since 1878 there have been nine epidemics of dysentery in different parts of the country in which Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhœa Remedy was used with perfect success. Dysentery, when epidemic, is almost as severe and dangerous as Asiatic cholera. Heretofore the best efforts of the most skilled physicians have failed to check its ravages, this remedy, however, has cured the most malignant cases, both of children and adults, and under the most trying conditions, which proves it to be the best medicine in the world for bowel complaints. For sale by Davenport, the druggist. 35

Sent It to His Mother in Germany.

Mr Jacob Ebensen, who is in the employ of the Chicago Lumber Co., at Des Moines, Iowa, says: "I have just sent some medicine back to my mother in the old country, that I know from personal use to be the best medicine in the world for rheumatism, having used it in my family for several years. It is called Chamberlain's Pain Balm. It always does the work." 50 cent bottles for sale by Davenport, the druggist. 35

My Baby.

CANTON, O., 2-26-'96—Hand Medicine Co.—"My baby had been having wind colic since her birth and she was two months old when I procured a bottle of Dr. Hand's Colic Cure. In less than two weeks' time she was cured of having colic and has never had it since. We had tried several other medicines, but they did no good. I can cheerfully recommend your colic cure to be the best. Mrs. F. H. Rock." Sold by Fischler & Son, 25c. 2

Horrible! Horrible!

Innocent children by the thousand are constantly dying of diarrhœa whose life might be saved. How quickly the demon works! Flesh speedily wastes away as though subjected to fire. You try change of water, and change of food and change of air. The handiest and quickest and safest thing you can do is to procure at once a bottle of Dr. Hand's Diarrhœa Mixture, at any drug store, for 25c. It's wonderful how quickly it brings good results. Fischler & Son.

Foundry and Machine Shop for Sale or to Rent.

On October 1, 1896, the lessees of the Eagle Mfg. Co. plant at Auburn Junction, Indiana, will give the owner possession of the entire plant, consisting of a foundry and machine shop, and the same will be leased or sold at a price much less than its real value. The plant is in one of the best locations in that part of the state, being situated at Auburn Junction, Indiana, in an angle formed by the junction of the L. S. & M. S., the Wabash and B. & O railroads. The factory land consists of about 1¼ acres, bounded on two sides by the railroads mentioned. In Sept., 1893, this property was appraised by competent men at $3,500. It can be bought for less than half that amount now. If you are interested in this line write me at once. In case of purchase, a clear title to the property can be given. The plant can be leased at $17 per month for a period of 2 to 10 years. If you have a little capital this is a rare chance to go into this line of business with a small investment. The plant can be bought for $200 down and balance in installments to suit purchaser. Possession can be given before Oct. 1, '96, if desired, but the factory must be rented or sold by that date Call on or address

SPINAL weakness easily cured by Dr. Miles' Nerve Plasters

—L. C. Loveland from the east part of the county was in town to-day.

—The street sprinkler started again to-day. We hope he will not be stopped again very soon.

—If you are suffering fram Catarrh or any disease of the nose, throat or lungs, Dr. Nusbaum's specific treatment will cure you. W. H. Nusbaum, M. D. tf.

—Mr. Morgan Gibney is at the head of the profession, and no one can afford to not hear him in the greatest of his plays—his newest one—"Fallstaff Up to Date."

—It doesn't matter much whether sick headache, biliousness, indigestion and constipation are caused by neglect or by unavoidable circumstances; DeWitt's Little Early Risers will speedily cure them all. Davenport the Druggist.

—Bro. Higley, in the Record, and a reader named Stough, have got into a spat over the silver money question. Ditto on the streets of Auburn every day. In fact, those who understand these questions are "running a daily."

—Henry McIntyre and Will Schaab went out this morning for the purpose of doing up a limited number of red squirrels. When the battle was on and the slaughter growing hot, Will got a dose of shot that struck the side of his face and back. No great damage done except two men considerably frightened.

—Geo. Stebing and wife at the south end, got into a little domestic difficulty yesterday afternoon and both are in a situation to claim a pension. It would appear that she wanted him to go up town on an errand and he refused, then she struck him a savage blow with a stick. He struck back and in the fight that ensued both were considerably hurt.

—Theories of cure may be discussed at length by physicians, but the sufferers want quick relief; and One Minute Cough Cure will give it to him. A safe cure for children. It is "the only harmless remedy that produces immediate results." Davenport the Druggist.

—Bucklen's Arnica Salve.—The best salve in the world for cuts, bruises, sores, ulcers, salt rheum. fever sores tetter, chapped hands, chilblains, corns and all skin eruptions, and positively cures piles or no pay repuired. It is guaranteed to give perfect satisfaction, or money refunded. Price 25 cents per box. For sale by Robbins & McCord. tf

—As an offset to the domestic trouble we note elsewhere, we wish to say that Auburn has several model husbands as well as wives. One man we have in mind gets up early and helps his wife get out the washing. And there is peace and happiness in that household and the husband is as highly regarded as any. We would mention his name but about a score of ladies we know of would all go crazy to catch him.

—Petoskey (Mich.), Resorter:—Geo. A. Bishop, one of the most devoted anglers that visits this region, left on Sunday evening for his home in Auburn, Ind., after a week's outing here and at Burt Lake Springs. Mr. B. is a prosperous business man of Auburn, and this is his fifteenth season here. He is contemplating the purchase of a site for the erection of a cottage at Burt Lake Springs next season.

—Mrs. G. C. Fox and sister, Miss Celia Schorpf, of Fort Wayne, have been in the city visiting Mrs. Myron Brandon. This morning they received a telegram announcing that their father, at Leo, Ind., was dangerously ill and probably dead They left on the 10:11 train for their home, and it was only through kindness of the conductor, in waiting, that they were able to catch the train. Just what was the trouble with their father they could not learn.

—If you have ever seen a little child in the agony of summer complaint, you can realize the danger of the trouble and appreciate the value of instantaneous relief always afforded by DeWitt'e Colic & Cholera Cure. For dysentery and diarrhoea it is a reliable remedy. We could not afford to recommend this as a cure unless it were a cure.—Davenport the Druggist.

—COURIER readers will remember mention in these columns a few days ago of the killing of a convict in the prison north by a fellow convict. The Kendallville Sun has the following to say concerning the crime: "Warden Harley is authority for the statement that Henry Jones, the Marion county convict, who killed Homer Thomas in the prison north, at chapel service, has killed his fourth man. In an interview Jones said he expected to expiate his crime on the gallows. He shows no remorse for the deed. If he meets death on the gallows it will be the first execution within the walls of the prison north."

—Poison Ivy, insect bites, bruises scalds, burns, are quickly cures by De, Witt's Witch Hazes Salve, the great pile cure. Davenport the Druggist.

—There will be a big farmer's institute Aug. 8, at Blue Lake, near Churubusco, Whitley, Noble and Allen will unite.

—Notices to be inserted in the Weekly, must be brought in early as it goes to press Wednesday forenoon. Please remember.

—Horace Shoemaker left this morning over the Wabash for Crawfordsville where he will visit a few weeks with friends.

—Dr. Baxter is paying special attention to Diseases of Children also Diseases of the Liver, Stomach and Nervous system. tf

—A shipment of live turtles was transferred here by C. B. Weaver the express man. They were in coffee sacks and billed to Canton O.

—Another prize fighter killer in the ring this week. Let the good work go on, even though it is not quite as fatal as decent people would like to have it.

—"Boys will be boys," but you can't afford to lose any of them. Be ready for the green apple season by having DeWitt's Colic & Cholera Cure in the house. Davenport the Druggist.

—Prof. O. E. Robinson, of Chicago, instructor in voice culture and piano came in on the Lake Shore last evening and returned on this afternoon train after a day's visit in the family of County Superintendent Merica.

—The Dispatch should get the terms "demopops" and "popodems" in logotypes, and a hundred or so of them. They could then get along with one less typesetter.

—The whole system is drained and undermined by indolent ulcers and open sores DeWitt's Witch Hazel Salve speedily heals them. It is the best pile cure known. Davenport the Druggist.

—There will be spent this year, time enough discussing the money question, which if employed at work at the rate of ten cents an hour, would pay off the national debt—nearly. It is hoped that good will result, however.

—Miss Mattie Hoffman and little Marian, daughter of Luther Hoffman, were callers to-day. They were accompanied by Miss Kiler. who has been visiting here for several weeks. Miss Kiler returns in a few days to her home at Indianapolis.

—Many a day's work is lost by the sick headache, caused by indigestion and stomach troubles. DeWitt's Little Early Risers are the most effectual pill for overcoming such difficulties. Dav en port the Druggist.

—Dove Hosler, a young lady who works at G. H. Yesbera's had quite an experience this morning. While at work, she some how came into contact with a door knob which struck her so violently on the head, as to knock her down. For a short time she was unable to rise, but was not seriously hurt.

—A letter from Harry Lewis at Red Cloud, Neb. states that he is rapidly improving. He does not cough any more, and feels one hundred per cent better. Mrs. Lewis is entirely releaved of the hay fever and pronounces the climate there as healthful as that of northern Michigan only considerable warmer. Harry and his uncle start to-day on a trip to Denver.

—A number of Auburn's moneyed men last night concluded to send to New York for 1000 Mexican dollars to be used here to show the people how free silver would work should we be given a chance to try it. They can be bought for 53 cents and will be passed here for $1, providing they can find people who are not posted and will accept them.

—There are various reasons why our people should become subscribers for a telephone. The latest come from Akron. O. A. Specsal says:—Justice A. W. Hall to-day held court by telephone. Five young men arrested at Massillon for disorderly conduct in this county were arrested there. They were willing to plead guilty, but did not wish to come here. They called the justice by telephone, each pleaded guilty and was fined $1 and costs.

—Invitations are out for the marriage of our townman, Geo. M. Henderson to Miss Minnie Kepler. The happy event is to take place at the residence of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Alfred Kepler, in Smithfield township August 12, They will be "at home" after that date, at their elegant new residence on South Main St. Auburn. Mr. Henderson is one of DeKalb's leading young men, and his bride a popular society leader in the north part of the county. Both will be welcome additions to Auburn social circles.

Admirers at Chicago, have presented McKinley with a bust of himself. This is rather late in the day to remind him of the financial "bust" he experienced while yet his darling law was in full blast and bringing him "prosperity." Now his admirers call him the forerunner of prosperity. He did break up in time to get some such title.

—Detroit or Indianapolis may get the national convention of the gold democrats, if one is held, Indianapolis is raising the necessary expense funds. They want it in Tomlinson's Hall, which has plenty of floor room for delegates, and the galleries will hold over 2000 spectatorrs.

What stops Neuralgia? Dr. Miles' Pain Pills.

Friday's Daily.

—T. J. Saxton returned to-day from his eastern trip.

—Pompeii will be seen in Ft. Wayne again on the nights of August 17, 18, 19 and 20.

—Mrs. Ves Zimmerman is at Chicago being called there by the illness of Mrs. Frank Davenport.

—It is now claimed we will soon be making roads with a wagon track of flat iron for common use. In DeKalb county we will be glad to get good gravel roads.

—Perry Blodgett is now in the fish market south of Bates & Son's and will keep a full line of nice fresh fish.

—There was a social gathering of a few of Maude Link's friends assembled at her home last night, and spent the evening, to the satisfaction of all, very pleasantly. Miss Maude should be complimented on her pleasing way of entertaining friends.

—C. M. Merica left on the 3:10 Lake Shore via Fort Wayne this afternoon for Winona, Park, Warsaw, where he will listen to a lecture to night by a noted gentleman from Galveston, Tex. Mr. Merica is talking of having the gentleman lecture here before the county institute.

—Daniel Morr and Christian Smith report from Concord that oats may be partly saved yet. Mr. smith cut his oats with a cradle as he could not take a binder into the field. Ragweed in the sheaves has made the matter worse.

—Indiana has had to sue the two express companies doing business in the state, to collec the taxes they owe. The Adams owes $6,447 and the American $6,602. It is likely both will have to pay, as the tax laws of the state have been pronounced sound.

—Mrs. Mary McEntaffer and Mrs. Pommert have returned from Branch Co. Mich. where they spent a week pleasantly with relatives including Geo. McEntaffer and G. W. St. Clair. They say crops suffered greatly by rain up there.

A cyclone passed over Auburn Wednesday evening, and the attention of many, was called to the terrific roaring overhead. Fortunately it went so high it did not hit us, but gradually neared the ground going east. At Lima and others points in Ohio it did serious damage.

—L. Bowers and wife returned today from a ten days visit with relatives at Bucyrus, Ohio. He has a brother residing there. It rained nearly every day while they were there, interfering some with their visit but otherwise they had a pleasant time. Crops are at least as badly damaged there as here and were not as good any way.

Last evening while Mrs. McCurly was up town listening to the band concert some unknown person entered her residence. The door to the sitting room was broken open, the lock being completely broken to pieces. Mrs. McCurley informs the COURIER that her jewelry box sit on the dresser but so far as she knew nothing had been taken. As she disposed of her property in Cincinnati she supposes some Auburnite was desireous of getting a part of her cost.

Monday's Daily.

—Mrs. Henry Ernest of Fairfield was in town Saturday.

—C. H. Brown, now of Leo, was shaking the hands of his old friends Saturday.

—Geo. Swander is suffering from a bad abscess in his side, which is feared will be serious.

—The opening of Henry's opera house, August 13, 14 and 15, three great plays and a Saturday Matimee.

—Robt. McDougall this morning put up his sign and can now be found with Capt. Otto over the post-office ready at any time between the hours of 5 a. m. and 10 p. m. to sharpen your razor, knife, shears, etc. Also makes keys and in fact can do any thing. Give him your repairing.

—Miss Olive Kiler returned to her home in Indianapolis, this morning where she will resume her musical studies with Prof. Beisenherz and Ehriche. She will undoubtedly make a great success with her violin. It was her grandmother, and not her brother that died last week as was reported in Saturday's DAILY. While here she visited in the family of Miss Hoffman north of town also with Miss Estella Merica.

—Sheriff Stroh's hotel was visited by hundred of people yesterday. Everyone was anxious to see young Webster who had been placed there on charge of attempt to murder his parents. He, Webster, become very indignant in the forenoon because people crowded in the jail and shut off the light which prevented him from reading the daily papers. At one time Henry West was standing in front of his cell, Henry was dressed up in his best which included a white yest. Webster did not like the remarks made about him and picked up a pan full of soap suds, he threw it through the bars and completely ruined Henry's white vest. Henry shoved his arm through the bars and had not the prisoner got out of his reach he would have been punished for his smartness. Sheriff Stroh was somewhat indignant also when he returned home and learned how Webster had been acting. It probably was a good thing for Webster that Mr. Stroh was out of the city, and that West could not get to him.

Henry's Opera House

Will be opened on August 13th by Mr. Gibney in his great play "Falstaff, Up-to-Date." Mr. Gibney and his excellent company have been playing in all the principal cities both east and west, they have been engaged at the Haymarket and Haverly Theaters in Chicago for twelve weeks and at the Metropolitan Theater at Minneapolis for ten weeks and at the Grand in Louisville for twelve weeks. Mr. Henry has secured them by giving a large guarrntee. They are under the management of the Holden Bros. that closed the house here last spring,

Mr. Gibney will give three plays here August 13, 14 and 15, with a matinee on Saturday afternoon. We hope to see the house full at each entertainment.

BADLY CUT.

Friday's Daily.

M. E. Olds came up from St. Joe today, and reports a bad accident near Concord. John Fetters who lives near that place, was out in the woods chopping, when the ax glanced, and struck him about the middle of the leg below the knee, making a gash about four inches long and an inch and a half deep, going badly into the bone. Dr. Bowman was called, and Mr. Olds went up with him. The Doctor says the wound is a bad one, and looks to see difficulty in healing. Fetter's two children were with him, and ran home and got help to carry the father home.

Bar Association.

The meeting of the DeKalb county Bar Association was held in the court room this afternoon, and called to order by the president, J. E. Rose. There being no other business, the election of officers, was in order, and resulted in a unanimous choice of the following:

D. A. Garwood, president; J. E. Pomeroy, sec.; Howard Mounts, treas.; J. E. Rose was made a member of executive committee, and the meeting adjourned.

The members of the Association will hold the annual joint meeting with the Steuben county bar at Angola, August 19.

WAY OFF.

The St. Joe News, puts out the following:

A member of the Auburn Rifles was in town last Saturday. He was uniformed, and was going over to join the company at Auburn, who went into camp at Fairview Park this week. He hunted the town over for some whisky, and was out of sorts because he failed to get it. They use a good deal of that kind of amunition at these annual state encampments, and the state frequently has to foot the bill.

Now, we are sorry to say, that in this company of half a hundred, there are two or three who disgrace their uniforms by parading thus publicly a taste for whisky. But they are the exceptions. Nearly all the members of

American Volunteers

The American Volunteers are in the city and will, commence their services tonight at the M. E. church. Their parade this afternoon was fine. They have a brass band of fourteen pieces, and all present a very fine appearance. Services after to-night will be held in the big tent which is located on the street near the big elm tree between Main and Jackson streets. No admittance charged to any services.

Duane Webster

His father Henry Webster was here yesterday attending the annual meeting of trustees. He was present also at the examination before 'Squire Walter, of his son on charge of burglary and attempt to kill Mr. and Mrs. Webster. The son was bound over for trial at next term, and will stay in jail.

Scotland, whose interests in afflicted Armenia is very keen, has sent $50,000, and France has sent as much as Scotland. Germany, Switzerland and the British colonies have sent contributions, too, though Germany with its $15,000 is some distance behind France; while the Armenians themselves scattered throughout Europe have collected $80,000.

CONCEDED.

Gerard Won His Case by a Most Amazing Audacity.

A jury may know an overwhelming amount of facts in regard to a case, and yet if the counsel has failed to convince the jurymen of the paramount importance of these facts, the case is lost. Mr. H. L. Clinton says that Charles O'Conor and James W. Gerard were once opposed to each other in an important trial where the plaintiff claimed heavy damages of the defendant on the ground of fraud in a business transaction between them.

When Mr. O'Conor produced his first witness and began to examine him, Mr. Gerard rose and said, in his peculiarly quick and nervous manner, "Mr. O'Conor, what do you propose to show by this witness?"

Mr. O'Conor told what he wished to prove.

"It is useless to waste the time of the court and jury in proving that," said the other. "I admit it."

Mr. O'Conor then called his next witness, and the same question and answer were repeated.

"I admit it," said Mr. Gerard. "Don't let us waste time."

Another witness began, and Mr. Gerard interrupted:

"I admit all you say you are going to prove. Let us hurry along."

With a rapidity which almost took O'Conor's breath away he admitted the entire case; all the facts which he had accumulated by determined perseverance and professional skill were accepted wholesale. There he rested his case, and Gerard for the defense called no witnesses, but at once began his address to the jury.

"Gentlemen of the jury," said he, "some of you know me personally. I have no doubt those of you who are not personally acquainted with me know me by reputation. Now, gentlemen, you know that if my client had been guilty of any fraud, I should be the last man on earth to admit it. I should hide it from you, I should cover it up, I should fight, fight—and I know how to fight—against the proof of its getting in evidence. If my client had been guilty of fraud, do you think I would admit it? No! no! Never! never! never!"

Here he looked at his watch.

"Gentlemen, excuse my brevity. I have an engagement to dine to-day and my time is almost up; I will detain you no longer."

He won his case.

Not His Fault.

ALASKA GOLD FIELDS

MANY PROSPECTORS RUSH TO THE NEW PLACE.

Men Are Making Fortunes in the Far-Away Alaskan Country—Untold Wealth Is Said to Exist in the Almost Inaccessible Mountains.

Etc. from $40 to $50 Per Day.

The gold fever is again prevalent and many persons are making their way toward the Alaskan gold fields in search of the precious metal. The rush to the new gold center is the greatest since the early days. Fortune hunters are located all through Alaska, and considerable gold is being found.

Gold was first discovered in Alaska near Sitka in 1873; in 1881 the first gold was found on the Yukon River, and in 1887 the initial excitement was experienced. Since then prospectors have enlarged the mining territory, and every season has added steadily to the population of the diggings. It is now known that the gold-bearing area is several hundred miles in extent, and every tributary of the Upper Yukon shows traces of the coveted metal. The auriferous deposits are found in every stream and canyon, and, as a rule, while gold is not found in large quantities, it is so abundant that persistent labor is generally amply rewarded.

It is believed that the great mineral belt of Western United States continues, more or less broken, to the Yukon district, and discoveries show that the gold-bearing area of Alaska comprises a district of more than 20,000 square miles.

The principal localities where auriferous deposits are worked are Indian Creek, Clondike River, Forty Mile Creek, Glacier Creek, and Birch Creek. Gold nuggets weighing from $3 to $10 are found, and some of the prospectors are making $40 and $50 a day.

While considerable gold has been taken from Forty Mile Creek, that stream has been abandoned for other creeks, where the gold is coarser and more plentiful. Miller Creek thus far has proved the richest of any of the creeks in the vicinity. In this particular creek one claim alone yielded $35,000, and the place worked was only 30 by 100 feet. Miller Creek is six miles long and 54 claims have been opened. A claim consists of 500 feet of the creek and may reach up both sides of the gulch an indefinite distance.

Considering the area of the gold-producing region, it may be said that mining on the Yukon has only begun, and that only a few of the most accessible streams have ever been examined. It is said that all the larger rivers of the upper country furnish flour gold, which increases in coarseness as the rivers are ascended. From this it is argued that the surrounding gulches must furnish exceedingly rich diggings. One hundred thousand men could prospect in the Yukon district and be lost to one another. Mining operations can only be worked from the middle of June to September 15, during which time the sun shines 22 out of 24 hours. When a big find is made it is worked continuously until relieved of all the precious metal. It is the belief of the Yukon miners that far back in the almost inaccessible mountains fabulous gold-bearing ledges exist. As every stream shows traces of gold, and pieces of gold-bearing quartz are found in the placers, it follows that hidden somewhere in icy fastnesses are the mother ledges. Doubtless when these quartz ledges are discovered a new El Dorado will be opened to the world.

Many miners have gone to Cook's Inlet, 500 miles from Sitka. This inlet extends inland from the ocean about 150 miles, the extreme eastern portion being known as Turnigan Arm. The shores of this inlet were esteemed by the Russians as the most pleasant portion of Alaska in summer; the skies are bright, the shores well wooded, the climate moderate and the locality is out of the regions of dense fogs. The latitude is 61 degrees north, the day being over 20 hours long in summer and even at midnight a newspaper can be read without artificial light. The inlet can be reached by steamer from Sitka, but the most comfortable method of reaching the district is to embark on a vessel going directly to the diggings at Turnigan Arm, as passengers and freight can be landed within six miles of the mines.

A miner who is now at Cook's Inlet, after prospecting some of the newly discovered creeks, writes as follows of the placers of that region:

"I have spent a number of years of my life in placer mining districts, my last scene of operations being in the Yukon country on Forty Mile and Sixty Mile Creeks, but left that section before Birch Creek was discovered. I am candid to say that in all my wanderings I have never run across a country that has a better outlook in store for the future than this. Then the great advantage the westward has over the interior is its accessibility and the cheap rate at which supplies can be laid down. We have no fear of the scurvy attacking us here for want of proper food, and no winter starvation will stare us in the face. Our washing season is at the least calculation a month longer than on the Yunkon, and, too, we have not the frozen ground to contend with, although we have a greater depth of snow and the same spring rises, probably somewhat greater than in the interior. We, too, have the same myriads of gnats and mosquitoes, and the yellow bellied flies, whose thirst for blood reduces the avoirdupois of the fat and makes a porous plaster out of the lean. We have plenty of game, moose, bear, fowls and fish."

The Yunkon gold fields are 2,000 miles from San Francisco, and a journey around the globe could be made with much less trouble and expense than is involved in a trip to the Upper Yunkon. The first section of the journey ends at Juneau, which is reached by steamer from San Francisco or Sound ports. From this point the traveler must be provided with suitable provisions to last two months. The next hundred miles is by water to Dyea (or Taiya); here follows a portage of 24 miles over icy mountains. Next the voyager constructs a raft or boat and floats 650 miles down the headwaters of the Yukon until Forty-mile Creek is reached. The traveler is then in the heart of the gold-producing district.

AN ARSENAL IN THE CLOUDS.

A War Airship Which Is Being Constructed for Cuban Service.

Cuba is going to fight the Spaniards from the clouds. In a secluded grove in Florida a French engineer now has under construction an airship which is to be placed in the Cuban service. It will carry 125 men, 1,000 rifles, a half million rounds of rifle ammunition and dynamite shells. The airship is one of the most remarkable things of its kind ever conceived by an aeronaut. Its chief feature, which excites the greatest wonder, is its extreme lightness considering its tremendous strength. The airship consists of a boat-shaped car that does not swing, but is held solidly, though pendant, from a cluster of five balloons.

These balloons are held steadily in place by five aluminum belts, which go around the girths of the balloons and are connected at the points of contact by easy working ball-bearing joints, so that there can be no strain, and each belt can give gently one way or the other, as the balloon it holds might sway, without getting away from its mate. In this way the balloons are always manageable.

Besides the system of network which surrounds the balloons and which holds them attached to the car there are aluminum braces securing the belts or girths to the car below. These braces are also the stays for the sails forward and at the sides for steering purposes. The principle upon which this wonderful airship is steered is the same which governs the sailing of a yacht. A series of uprights over the car and just under the lower valves of the balloons sustains a shaft, which is revolved by electricity, and turns an immense fan, or screw at the rear of the ship, which acts as an air rudder as well as a propeller. Every piece of metal in the entire construction of this greyhound of the air is of aluminum.

There are nine windows on each side, something more than ten feet apart. A series of long, narrow openings, closed with aluminum bars, run around the upper guard which incloses the upper deck of the boat.

This marvelous air coach is provided with comfortable accommodations for 125 men. There is an electrical engine room, an electrical kitchen, and bedrooms, smoking-room and an observatory. The vessel is lighted, heated and worked by electricity. Water is taken from the clouds, and not a spark of fire is used in working this monstrous air ship. The balloon valves are operated by a system of electric buttons, and there is no confusion of ropes or lines. The observatory is provided with powerful glasses, and while the operator can ride far above the earth, out of reach of the longest range guns known to military science, he can bring the enemy's camp close to his range of vision and can throw dynamite bombs down upon his adversaries with remarkable precision.

Feminine Fancies in Gloves.

For walking, traveling and general outing wear, four hook or button gloves are correct in glace or pique kid, the latter being heavier than the usual dressed kid. These are in tan, brown and gray shades. Chamois gloves in white are very stylish for wear with cotton or pique costumes, and as they wash and clean easily are not expensive. Black gloves are well favored in Paris with light tollettes trimmed in black, but here they are chiefly noticed with mourning gowns, or with evening gowns of black and some brilliant contrast. White and ficelle, very pale straw, suede are the fashionable evening colors for full dress, with pearl-gray, lavender and pale tan following. White glace and suede gloves in four hooks or buttons, plain or stitched on the back with black, are worn for visiting, concerts, driving, etc. There is much favor shown to such gloves in white glace or dressed kid with hook fastenings. After white the tan and brown shades are favored.—Ladies' Home Journal.

A Fragrant Bath.

We have always known that Parisian ladies know a trick or two not generally known by the world at large for preservation of their youth and brightness. We have it on the authority of a contemporary that these ladies put starch into their bath water to soften it, as it is cheaper than borax or toilet vinegar and more trustworthy than ammonia, which is said to induce a growth of down on the skin. The Parisian ladies' maids are adepts at preparing delicate toilet waters, and always have material ready for use, meal baths, starch baths, flower baths, sea baths and medicated baths. One bath which is considered somewhat of a luxury must have a curious pudding effect. The bathtub is lined with a linen sheet, gored properly to fit it. Then a bag, containing almond meal or oatmeal, with orris root and dozens of other ingredients, is put in, giving it a delicious fragrance. The bath being filled to the brim with water, the intending bather gets in and remains until she is saturated with the perfume. Would that such baths were common in England.—Invention.

Corner in Huckleberries.

The huckleberry industry about Audenried has come to a sudden stop through the appearance of two bears on the mountains. A week ago a traveler exhibited two performing bears on the street and while doing so the animals engaged in a bout not on the bills. In the scrimmage the trainer was used up badly and one of the muzzles torn from a bear. Finding themselves at liberty, the bears trotted off and reached the mountains safely. The blackberry season having just opened, hundreds of boys and girls who pick the berries have since been kept out of the woods through fear. The mines being idle, the villagers one day turned out to scour the woods for berries and bears. A party of women came upon them unexpectedly, and their screams soon alarmed scores of others, resulting in a stampede. The bears are now boss of the situation and berry-picking in the vicinity is at a standstill.—Pittsburg Dispatch.

A FREAK OF NATURE.

A Missouri Hog Has Three Well Formed Heads.

Mr. J. M. Jones, of Columbia, Mo., has a hog that has three fully developed heads. The hog eats with all three mouths and grunts and squeals in concert. This might appear to be a disadvantage at first thought, but it is not. With three mouths and throats to furnish sustenance to one body, the hog takes on flesh surprisingly, and the gain in avoirdupois will pay for the extra corn consumed when hog killing time comes.

And then with three heads to one

"A Fearful Refuge Left."

A short time ago, M. Henry, being curious to see the effect of benzine on a wasp, put some of it under a glass in which one was imprisoned. The wasp immediately showed signs of great annoyance and anger, says the Popular Science News, darting at a piece of paper which had introduced the benzine into his cell. By and by he seems to have given up his unequal contest in despair, for he lay down on his back, and, bending up his abdomen planted his sting thrice into his body, and then died. M. Henry allowed his scientific interest to overcome his humanity so far as to repeat the experiment with three wasps, only to find that the other two did likewise. He is therefore of opinion that wasps, under desperate circumstances, commit suicide.

WOMAN'S INFLUENCE.

The influence of women upon the civilization of the world, could never be measured.

Because of her, thrones have been established and destroyed. The flash of her eye, the touch of her hand, and we have the marvellous power of women, glorious in the possession of perfect physical health.

Lydia E. Pinkham, by her wonderful discovery of the "Vegetable Compound," has done much to place this great power in the hands of women.

She has lifted thousands and thousands out of the misery brought by displacement of the womb, and all the evils that follow diseases of the uterus.

The "Vegetable Compound" restores natural cheerfulness, destroys despondency, cures backache, strengthens the muscles, restores the womb to its normal condition, and you are changed from a physical wreck to the joy of your home and friends.

By the way—the leading druggists tell us that the demand for Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is simply beyond their power of understanding, and what is best of all, it does the work and cures where the best physicians utterly fail.

Gladness Comes

With a better understanding of the transient nature of the many physical ills, which vanish before proper efforts—gentle efforts—pleasant efforts—rightly directed. There is comfort in the knowledge, that so many forms of sickness are not due to any actual disease, but simply to a constipated condition of the system, which the pleasant family laxative, Syrup of Figs, promptly removes. That is why it is the only remedy with millions of families, and is everywhere esteemed so highly by all who value good health. Its beneficial effects are due to the fact, that it is the one remedy which promotes internal cleanliness without debilitating the organs on which it acts. It is therefore all important, in order to get its beneficial effects, to note when you purchase, that you have the genuine article, which is manufactured by the California Fig Syrup Co. only and sold by all reputable druggists.

If in the enjoyment of good health, and the system is regular, laxatives or other remedies are then not needed. If afflicted with any actual disease, one may be commended to the most skillful physicians, but if in need of a laxative, one should have the best, and with the well-informed everywhere, Syrup of Figs stands highest and is most largely used and gives most general satisfaction.

HOW JOHNNIE KEEPS COOL.

Folks 'r talkin' now days 'bout the weather's bein' hot,
'N a-huntin' round 'n tryin' for to find the coolest spot;
But they wear their shoes an' stockin's an' a lot o' swelterin' clothes,
Till the wonder is they're livin' an' not melted, goodness knows!

Just a-look at me a minit, I ain't a-sweatin' none,
An' I think the weather's bully; summer's just chock full o' fun.
I just wear a shirt an' trousers, thet are thin as thin can be,
An' you don't git shoes an' stockin's, in the summer time on me.

Only wear just one suspender, an' I wouldn't wear a coat
If you'd give me all the silver, gold an' greenbacks that's afloat;
This straw hat, it ain't a beauty with this big hole in the crown,
But it lets the breeze blow on me, an' that helps cool me down.

Then if things git most too boilin' I just skin down to the crick
An', in just about two minits I am cooled off nice an' slick;
Oh! I tell you if you hanker after comfort you'll do well
If you take me for a pattern an' do just like me a spell.

THE MISER.

All Ardley was aware that Fred Barton would be a well-off man only for his brother Max. Max was an invalid bachelor, reputed one of the wealthiest men in that Midland town of 4,000 people.

Eighteen years back the father had died, leaving Fred the fine saddlery business in High street, and Max had all his savings, a couple of thousand pounds, for Max had never been robust. Max was then 32 and Fred 27 and unmarried. Now Max was an unenviable invalid of 50; Fred was 45, and one of the finest men in Ardley, with a blooming, handsome wife, the finest woman of her years in the town, and nine comely children.

The business had not been equal to so large a family, and a wife with a lovely woman's liking for lovely things.

The younger man had borrowed money of the elder, and Max had been exacting and exorbitant from motives of revenge—revenge not indeed on Fred himself so much as on his wife and her young children—Nellie's children, who were Fred's children also, who filled his kind-hearted brother's sleep with dreams of ruin and bankruptcy.

All Ardley knew that a few months after old Barton's death sickly Max had proposed to beautiful Nellie Collet; within twelve months she had married his handsome brother. The beautiful Nellie was not held quite blameless in this affair. She had first flirted a little with Fred, and then a good deal with his unhandsome and ailing brother. She had taken presents, a gold bracelet and a diamond cross, from Max. Some went the length of saying he had given her an engagement ring, but is was never seen in public. Anyway, though gloomy, taciturn Max did not open his mouth to a soul about his disappointment, the townspeople knew he almost died of it. For eight years the brothers never spoke. Then some sort of reconciliation took place. But Max never met Nellie from the day of her marriage, and never exchanged a word with one of his nephews or nieces.

As became a usurer, Max was a miser, and lived in a style poor enough to keep Fred covered with perpetual shame. He rented one room in a mean side street. Out of the house he had not gone for years. His landlady, Mrs. Fraser, a carpenter's widow, said he did not spend five shillings a week on food, and always resented a suggestion that he should allow himself any little indulgence in food or drink, or that he should buy the most homely and necessary articles of clothing.

How he had amassed his wealth was well known. Since his disappointment in love he had lived on less than £50 a year. He had speculated and everything he touched turned to gold. It was hard enough to think that a misanthropic curmudgeon like him should make thousands and thousands a year by writing a few letters and sending a check from his wretched room, while fine hearty men in the town were hard set to make a living out of incessant toil from dawn to dark. But that Max should squeeze money out of his heavily handicapped, simple, genial brother was shameful, monstrous, inhuman and merited a visible curse on him on earth, to say nothing of what it deserved hereafter!

When misfortune did strike one of the brothers it was not on the bachelor, usurer and miser it fell, but on Fred, whose affairs were in a desperate condition, and on whom depended a wife and nine little ones.

One morning in June Fred was talking to a customer in a dogcart at his open door. The horse became restive, and Fred caught hold of the animal's head. The brute plunged, reared, broke away from Fred and bolted, knocking down the unfortunate saddler with the shaft and fracturing his skull with the wheel.

At first the doctors said he must die, but he lived on in spite of what they said, in spite of what they did, and in spite of what they made him swallow. Yet, if he defeated them by living, the result was almost worse than if their prophecy had been fulfilled. Fred Barton's intellect was desperately injured. He could do nothing at all. He was perfectly quiet, but beyond eating and drinking he was like one dead. When spoken to he made no answer, took no notice. It was only in his sleep he uttered a sound, and then never more than one word, a name, and not the name of wife or child. Two or three times in the night Mrs. Barton would hear her husband groan "Max! Max! Max!" as though imploring mercy or indulgence from his hard, extortionate, rich brother.

For months no change took place in the stricken man. Day to day his affairs drifted from bad to worse, until creditors were pressing on all sides, and the unhappy wife saw nothing for it but bankruptcy, a lunatic asylum for her husband and the poorhouse for herself and her children. Night after night as she lay awake trying to think what shape ruin would take she heard her husband call upon his brother in these tones of entreaty for mercy.

Max had not yet taken steps to turn them all into the street; but this inactivity was only the hush before the storm. Acceptances or something were not due yet; Max was waiting until everything for their destruction was in legal form. So great was the pressure on her that she told herself a thousand times she herself was going mad.

One day in September the doctors declared they could do nothing further for their patient. If he were taken to London and placed in the hands of specialists an operation might bring light and strength back to his poor mind again.

It was the first word of hope, and Nellie nearly went crazy for joy. She wept, and laughed, and hugged her children to her heart, and wept and laughed again. Then she fainted, and lay insensible for an hour. She recovered consciousness and felt calmer than for years. She would take her Fred to London, the operation would be successful, and she would return to Ardley with her Fred as well as ever; and in some way or other business would come right—everything in the world would come right if Fred would only be well again.

THE BRUTE PLUNGED AND KNOCKED DOWN THE SADDLER.

She lay awake all that night. It was not until she got to bed that she realized the need of a little ready money for this journey to town. It would be expensive and she had not a sovereign in the world, and their credit was all gone now.

Twice in that wakeful night she heard her sleeping husband call for mercy to "Max! Max! Max!"

The first time the cry filled her with chilling fears. Perhaps Max would take action before she could leave with the patient or before Fred's recovery after the operation, and they should all be homeless after all. The second time she heard her husband's voice a new thought took possession of her. She had not met her old lover since her marriage. Suppose she went to him and began by representing that he would make more money out of Fred sound in mind than by Fred out of reason. If that did not work upon Max she would throw herself at his feet and beg of him for the sake of the love he once bore her to succor her in her worst need; beg of him to have mercy upon her blameless children, if he would not show it to herself. Ask him to lend her money which would restore afflicted Fred to reason and his family. When Max saw her humble, in tears at his feet, perhaps pity would strike his heart.

Next morning, after breakfast, Nellie dressed herself with more care than for months. She told no one where she was going, and went by a roundabout, unlikely route. When the door of the mean, two-story house was opened, Mrs. Fraser took up a message that Mrs. Barton wished to see the invalid, and brought word that Mr. Barton was not yet up (he had been very poorly, indeed), but would be glad if Mrs. Barton would step up-stairs.

In the full splendor of her matronly beauty, shedding light and warmth round her, she entered the mean, starved room. She saw a poor, wasted, waxen-faced wreck of a man on the bed, and all feeling but of pity for him fled from her, and with a woman's inextinguishable impulse toward suffering, she held out both her hands, crying: "Oh, Max! I did not think to find you like this."

He held out two transparent, white, trembling hands to her, and smiled—a smile that broke her heart to see—a smile of sweet resignation.

"Thank you for coming, Nellie. Sit down, dear."

This was altogether too much for her. She covered her face with her hands, and sank sobbing on a chair.

He waited until her sobbing ceased, and then said:

"Whatever happened long ago, dear, may have been, and for a great while, I have no doubt, was for the best. I have had no angry thought for many years. I, of course, heard all that has happened—heard it with the greatest grief, as I was in every way powerless. The landlady told me what the doctor said yesterday. My only sorrow is that I am still powerless. If I could do anything to help poor Fred or you I would, but since the dreadful accident I could not be of any use to him of you, dear."

It was inexpressibly painful to hear him call her "dear," and yet that one word from his lips now had some exquisite beauty and pathos, which she would not miss for all the world.

"I knew from Fred he never told you how business matters were between him and me. It was my wish he should not. I have heard of the foolish notion people have that I am very rich, and that I lent money at usury to poor Fred. As to being rich, I never had more than 80 pounds a year from the money my father left me. I never spent more than half that. When Fred came to me first I had saved a few hundred pounds. I gave him them. Since then I gave him all I had saved, and fifteen hundred of the capital, dear. I wish it was thousands. There are only five hundred left, but I could not get that under six months' notice. I gave notice when the accident happened, but there is yet a long time to wait—a longer time, most likely, than my time here. But I have made my will, and, dear Nellie, Fred shall have that five hundred, of course!"

"OH, MAX! I DID NOT THINK TO FIND YOU LIKE THIS."

She took down her hands and looked at him out of round, scared eyes. Her face was pale and wan. "And it is this makes him cry out, 'Max! Max! Max!' so pitiful in his sleep!" she said, in a choking voice.

"He is not in his right mind, dear, and you should not heed what he says. Poor fellow, he often told me it killed him to take the money. But why should he not? What good is money to me, so long as I have enough to go on with to the end?"

"And I," she said, in a voice hoarse with remorse, "thinking you had cheated him with usury, had come to reproach you."

He smiled the sweet, pallid smile again. "If there was any money here I would have sent it to you. But there was none. You are going to London with him. Things must have been very tight with you since the poor fellow was laid up. I can't put my hand on any money, but if you will open that drawer I can give you something for which you will get money. Hand me the little metal box."

She took the key of the drawer from his thin hand, and gave him the metal box. He opened it and shook out the contents on the counterpane.

"Take them, dear," he said. "They are really yours."

She saw shining in the morning light on the bed a gold bracelet, a diamond cross and a ruby ring, which had been hers years ago.

"I have nothing else worth five shillings. They are yours really, you know, and you ought to get 50 pounds for them. Take them and cure Fred with the money, and in three months he will have the 500 whether I live or die."

Ten weeks later, when Fred was back from London cured, but not quite his old self yet, Max had passed away. The whole story had been told, and all the shops along the route closed their doors as the funeral passed, and half the townsfolk followed Max to the grave.—Utica Globe.

"By Association."

A Boston paper tells a story of two ladies who move much in society, but who are troubled by an inability to remember names. One day they received a call from a Mrs. Wheeler, whom they like very much. On her departure the mother said:

"Now do let us try to remember her name, because we shall meet her at Mrs. Blank's tea, and we shall want to speak to her."

"Oh, I have an idea!" said the daughter. "Her name is Wheeler, and there are the Wheeler and Wilson sewing-machines, you know. All we have to do is to remember sewing-machines, and the name will come by association."

"So it will," said the mother. "What a head you have, my dear!"

The two ladies went to Mrs. Blank's tea. Mrs. Wheeler was there, too. The mother was the first to meet her. She stepped up to her with a bland smile, and said, cordially:

"Why, how do you do, Mrs. Wilcox?"

Soon after the daughter met her, and with equal affability saluted her:

"Oh, my dear Mrs. Gibbs! So pleased to meet you again!"

As a companion story to this, the incident may be related of another Boston lady who was introduced one day to a gentleman whose name was Haddock. Meeting him a few days afterward, she saluted him thus:

"How do you do, Mr. Fish?"

American Kingdom for Louis XVIII.

Fouche's pet scheme of an American kingdom for Louis XVIII. was further amplified by the suggestion of an Anglo-French expedition to establish it. Labouchere having returned to Holland, much of the negotiation had been carried on by letter, and Napoleon, getting wind during his Belgian visit of Ouvrard's presence, suspected trickery, and called for the correspondence. Its very existence enraged him; that such matters should have been put in writing was compromising to his entire policy. Ouvrard afterward declared that he personally informed the Emperor of what was going on, but he could never prove it; the only basis which can be found for his statement consists in the seizure of some hundred and thirty American vessels lying in continental harbors; but base as that deed was, it proves nothing.—Century.

Bicycles and Tobacco.

We do not exaggerate in the least. The bike craze has infatuated, enslaved, at the least calculation 500,000 males who were formerly addicted to the smoking habit. If these 500,000 male slaves to the bike craze have weaned themselves to smoking only two cigars less a day—this must be considered a most moderate calculation, as the bikist hardly ever worships less than from four to six hours of the shrine of his wheel—then the consumption of cigars is decreasing at the rate of 1,000,000 per day, and the decrease in our cigar production since the bike craze has set in has actually been 700,000,000 per year.—United States Tobacco Journal.

Modest Request.

A strong case of "building better than he knew" is thus narrated by Tit-Bits:

It had been the custom in a certain establishment to pay the workers fortnightly. This the workmen found inconvenient, and it was decided to send a delegate to the head of the firm to state their grievance. An Irishman, named Dan D., famed for his sagacity and persuasive powers, was selected for the task. He duly waited on the master, who addressed him thus:

"Well, Daniel, what can we do for you this morning?"

"If ye please, sir, I've been sint as a diligate by the workers to ask a favor of ye regardin' the paymint of our wages."

"Yes, and what do they desire?" queried the master.

"Well, sir, it is the desire of meself, and it is also the desire of ivery man in the establishment, that we receive our fortnight's pay every week."

A girl should never ask a man if he loves her. If a man likes pie, he wastes no time saying so: he eats it.

Most people do not want to know the truth, if it is disagreeable.

Rose for Information.

Congressman George G. Symes was first nominated for Congress in 1884. The retiring Congressman was Belford, "the Red-Headed Rooster." Symes, like Belford, had fiery red hair. Belford was present at the convention, occupying a seat on the platform with the Chairman. After Symes had been placed in nomination (says the Chicago Times-Herald) a red-headed delegate from Lake County placed in nomination Hosea Townsend. While he was preparing for his coup d'etat, as it were, J. L. Hodges, the man who was accused of having stolen the roof off the Arkansas penitentiary and sold it for old iron, himself a delegate, arose and interrupted: "Mr. Chairman, I rise for information." "State your question." The urbane Hodges looked smilingly at Belford's red top-knot, rested his eyes for a moment on Symes' fiery caput—then, with a grin, gazed at the flaming mane of the man from Lake, and slowly drawled his question: "Is this a convention or a holocaust?"

A Test of Honesty.

The highly respected French simpleton, Monsieur Calino, discovered the other day that he had left his umbrella somewhere. As he had visited three stores, he knew it must be in one of them. So he started back and visited all three in turn.

"It has not been found here," he was told in the first store, and Monsieur Calino shrugged his shoulders a little and went out.

At the next store the same response was made. Monsieur Calino shrugged his shoulders still higher, and went to the third store.

There the umbrella was waiting, and was promptly turned over to him.

"Well," he exclaimed with satisfaction, "I must say that you are more honest than they are at those other stores.

Long Shots.

The longest distance that a shot has been fired is a few yards over fifteen miles, which was the range of Krupp's 130-ton steel gun, firing a shot weighing 2,600 pounds. The gun cost $195,000, and each projectile $4,750. The 111-ton Armstrong gun has an extreme range of fourteen miles, firing a shot weighing 1,800 pounds and requiring 960 pounds of powder. These guns, however, proved too expensive, being unable to stand firing 100 times, and their manufacture has practically been abandoned. The 22-ton Armstrong gun hurls a solid shot for a distance of twelve miles, and the discharge of the gun cannot be heard at the place where the ball strikes. From twelve to thirteen miles is the computed range of the most powerful guns now made, and to obtain that range an elevation of nearly 45 degrees is required.

Low Wages Made Up by Tips.

A question-asking traveler has found out some interesting things about the earning capacity of waiters in dining cars. Their regular wages are $30 a month, but they make on an average $5 a trip between New York and Chicago in "tips." Sometimes they make as much as $8 and $10 a trip. Now the company pays the head cook on a car $75 a month, the under cooks $60 each, and the dishwasher $40. Isn't it plain enough that it expects the public to make up the small wages of the waiters? It is precisely the same plan that is pursued on the ocean steamers, where the stewards receive a merely nominal sum in the way of wages, with the expectation that each passenger will give a liberal fee.—New York Tribune.

That Terrible Scourge.

Malarial disease is invariably supplemented by disturbance of the liver, the bowels, the stomach and the nerves. To the removal of both the cause and its effects. Hostetter's Stomach Bitters is fully adequate. It "fills the bill" as no other remedy does, performing its work thoroughly. Its ingredients are pure and wholesome, and it admirably serves to build up a system broken by ill-health and shorn of strength. Constipation, liver and kidney complaint and nervousness are conquered by it.

Survival of the Fittest.

Bobbie—On my way to school this morning I met the new boy who has moved in next door.

Mrs. Bingo—Yes, and here's a note from the teacher saying you were late.

Bobbie—That's nothing. The new boy didn't get there at all.—Truth.

ANOTHER GOOD MOVE.

The Illinois Central Adds a New Fast Day Train to Its Chicago-St. Louis Service, the Diamond Special Continuing as Before.

Beginning Aug. 1 the Illinois Central will add a new solid fast vestibule day train to its Chicago-St. Louis service, which will make the run between the two cities in eight and a half hours. It will be known as the "Daylight Special," and will leave Chicago at 10:35 a. m., arriving at St. Louis at 7:04 p. m.; returning, leaving St. Louis at 8:32 a. m. and arriving at Chicago at 5 p. m. It will carry a free reclining chair car and an elegant Pullman combination parlor and buffet car. This in addition to the regular night train, the Diamond Special, with its free reclining chair car, its elegant Pullman full compartment sleeping car and Pullman combination sleeping car containing buffet, state rooms and open sections, which will continue to leave Chicago at 9 p. m., arriving at St. Louis 7:24 a. m.; returning, leaving St. Louis at 9:10 p. m., and arriving at Chicago at 7:35 a. m.

These trains will, in every sense, be solid through trains of the Illinois Central Railroad for the entire distance between Chicago and St. Louis, but they will both run via a new route from Pana to St. Louis, i. e., over the tracks of the Big Four Route, the line between Chicago and Pana being over the Illinois Central via Clinton—regular route of the Diamond Special. Trains make regular stops in both directions in Chicago at 22d street, 39th street, Hyde Park and 63d street stations, for the accommodation of patrons to or from the Kenwood, Hyde Park, Pullman or South Chicago districts of the city.

WAY OFF.

The St. Joe News, puts out the following:

A member of the Auburn Rifles was in town last Saturday. He was uniformed, and was going over to join the company at Auburn, who went into camp at Fairview Park this week. He hunted the town over for some whisky, and was out of sorts because he failed to get it. They use a good deal of that kind of amunition at these annual state encampments, and the state frequently has to foot the bill.

Now, we are sorry to say, that in this company of half a hundred, there are two or three who disgrace their uniforms by parading thus publicly a taste for whisky. But they are the exceptions. Nearly all the members of Co. K are model young men, and would not do anything to disgrace their state or company. And Co. K. has an excellent record for conduct when in camp. But what we wish most to set Bro. Olds right on, is in the last sentence. They do not "use a good deal" of whisky in camp. They can't get it if they want it, except by smuggling it in through some friend, and they are liable to punishment for this. And the state does not "foot the bill" for any whisky or any sort of luxury or "extra." The state pays only for the transportation and the rations. And the rations are of the plainest sort. Few civilians would care to live on it a great while. If the taxpayers did not have any more whisky bills to pay directly and indirectly, than it does on even the worst of its militia, it would be fortunate.

And a Picnic In Which All May Participate

There are reunions but Rev. W. L. Meese proposes the latest novelty in this line, which is a reunion of all those now living whom he has united in marriage since he was licensed to perform such ceremonies. The reunion will take place in the beautiful grove on the fair ground east of Auburn, on Thursday, August 20, 1896. The reunion is to partake of the nature of a picnic, and all are requested to bring well filled baskets. There will be singing, speech-making and other entertainments to make all feel that with Rev. Meese's subjects "marriage has not been a failure." While everybody is most cordially invited to attend and to participate in this novel reunion, the friends of all the couples married and of Rev. Meese are urgently requested to do so. It is to be hoped that the press and the clergy of the county will give their hearty support. The grove is one of the most beautiful. A well of good water is within a hundred feet of where the largest picnic ever assembled in the county will meet. More than three hundred stalls on the fair ground can be used for horses.

Any further information can be obtained by addressing Rev. W. L. Meese Auburn, Indiana.

With a Knife

George Porter Cut His Throat and Eleven Gashes In His Abdomen.

While Walking Down Main Street Several People Saw Him Using the Knife.

Monday's Daily.

A sad attempt at suidcide was made about four o'clock yesterday afternoon by G. A. Porter one of the best known of the older Auburn people. About four in the afternoon he was observed walking south from his residence on North Main and his odd actions attracted attention. As he passed Mike Kline's and Hennings, the latter, and Geo. Clark saw him stabbing himself with a jack-knife. They saw he was evidently crazy and watched him till he turned the corner going east at Mrs. Little's and went into the water closet on the lot where Mr. Beidler lives. The two men saw he must be badly hurt by blood along the walk. They were joined by Mr. Small and took Mr. Porter from the closet and taking Small's team got him home, and Mr. Clark went for Dr. Swarts. It was found he had attempted to cut his throat making a bad gash, and then went to jabbing the knife into his abdomen, where eleven wounds were found. The doctor dressed them, but there is little hope of his recovery, for though the wounds are not serious, he has been for a long time in feeble health and the added shock will likely carry him off sooner or later. He has had plain indications of softening of the brain for some time and this affected his mind.

The Coming Event.

St. Joe News.

The DeKalb County Battalion will hold its annual reunion on the lawn at the residence of O. H. Widney in St. Joe on Saturday, Aug. 8th, 1896. There will be a good program carried out and a grand time is expected. The following persons will be present and address the gathering. Gen. L. J. Blair of Waterloo; Capt. E. D. Hartman of Auburn; Lieut. T. M. Eells of Albion; Revs. Bartlett, Keller, Erick, Reeve and others, the Auburn Cornet Band will be in attendance, and a male quartette will furnish vocal music. The occasion promises to be a gala day for St. Joe and our citizens should give the old soldier boys of DeKalb County, a right royal welcome. Every business house and residence should be appropriately decorated, and everything possible done to make the day one of pleasure and enjoyment.

State Elections.

Six States will hold elections for state officers prior to the presidential election, which occurs November 3. These six states are Alabama, which elects Aug. 3; Vermont, Sept. 1; Arkansas, Sept. 3; Maine, Sept. 14; and Florida and Georgia, Oct. 7. The result of these elections will have an important bearing on the November election. It will indicate, to some extent at least, which way the political wind blows at that time and what may be expected in the final round-up in November.

This Explains

Saturday's Daily.

In addition to what we have already published in regard to that Building & Loan matter, we give below a letter from Mr. Ensley, in reply to one sent from here by M. E. Griswold:

INDIANAPOLIS, IND. July 31, 1896.

Major M. E. Griswold,

Auburn, Indiana.

MY DEAR SIR:—In reply to your favor of the 29th inst., I have to say that it is due you, as well as other stockholders of the Union National Savings & Loan Association, that I explain the present situation.

The Association is not in the hands of a receiver, nor is there any just reason for placing it in that condition. If reports have been circulated to that effect they are not true. It is true, however, that a suit has been commenced against it, and the attorneys prosecuting this suit have made grave charges concerning its management. The real animus of this suit is found in the malice of certain persons who hope thereby to destroy the Association. The only ostensible foundation for its commencement was a dispute over the construction of a by-law, the amount in controversary being only $49.90. We regarded the claim as an unjust one, and while we tendered to the party all that was due him we refused to pay the unjust excess demanded. This slender foundation was made the excuse by the attorneys for a most malicious and unfounded attack upon the Association and its officers, involving charges of fraud, maladministration, etc.

The original plaintiff finally accepted the money we had tendered him, settled his claim and withdrew from the case; but the attorneys, together with the other interested parties above referred to, at once began soliciting other persons to come in and take his place, in some cases going so far as to guarantee them that they should be subjected to no costs or expense. In one case they used the name of a lady who has since made affidavit that her name was used without her knowledge or consent. With all their efforts they have succeeded in getting only five out of twenty-four hundred stockholders to join them.

We have no fear of the result if justice and right prevail. We court a full and fair investigation, and have asked the Auditor of State to at once make a thorough official investigation of the Association from the beginning. He has already commenced this investigation. I earnestly ask our stockholders to continue their confidence and await the result. If this is done I have no fear, but believe that a full investigation will fully vindicate us; that it will show the Association to be solvent and its management careful, economical and honest.

Very truly yours,

NICHOLAS ENSLEY, Secretary,
Union National Savings & Loan Association.

Building & Loan.

THE MATTER NOT AS BAD AS FIRST FEARED.

Thursday's Daily.

Considerable interest and some degree of feeling are manifested among our people yesterday and to-day, over the news that the Union National Building & Loan company at Indianapolis had gone into the hands of a receiver. A great deal of stock is held by Auburn parties, some of which is in course of being paid up by the usual monthly installments and some is of paid up stock. Some parties have quite large blocks of it, and there are many who have taken out loans and built on their property. So, it is plain that anything that will affect the standing of the Association will have a lively interest for our people. But it is well not to get excited but to reserve our judgment, till we are more fully informed. The appointment of a receiver is in general, for the purpose of securing better management, and often results in doing so. Whether there has been missmanagement in this case or not, remains to be seen. It has been from almost the first, under the management of Nicholas Ensley and his son Oliver, both well known here, their original home, and it is not easy for our people to believe they would purposely do wrong. But charges of missmanagement were brought against the Association two or three weeks ago, by Henry L. Gaines, a shareholder, who asked that a receiver be appointed to take charge of the affairs. In the same complaint appeared also the names of his father and brother. But all three, later, withdrew from the suit, the matter having been arranged to their satisfaction. Then other names were procured to take the place of Gaines, the new complainants being Mrs. Frances Campbell and Mrs. Jacobs. A temporary receiver was appointed, and today, is set to see if a permanent receiver shall be put in charge of the office. Charles F. Griffin, president of the Association, insists that the matter will come out all right. He explains it by saying that the trouble is the result of spite work. Wm. T. Noble formerly in charge of the loan department of this company, was several months ago dismissed the case alleged, being unwise management. Since then he has organized and become president of a rival loan company the "Marion Trust Co." and the officers of the "Union" claim that he is actuated in fighting the latter company, by ill feeling caused by being discharged from it. So the matter stands, and to-day, will likely see some definite steps taken. We are not prepared to believe their shareholders will be swindled, and we think it wise to keep cool, and reserve judgment.

Later: This afternoon we got the Indianapolis papers. The Journal says it was proved at the examination yesterday that the Union National had lost nothing by bad loans and was not likely to. The charges made against the association were disproved by the sworn testimony of the officers. The charge of paying too high salaries falls down also, as it is shown that no salary has been paid, except to the secretary, since July 1, '95, when the Association abolished the expense fund Albert Robbins went down yesterday, and to-day sent the following, TELEGRAM.

INDIANAPOLIS, July 30, '96

A. C. Robbins

Auburn Indiana:

Court refuses to appoint receiver. No cause for alarm.

ALBERT ROBBINS.

So we hope the trouble is over. It was also shown by the books, that Mr. Ensley has stock, $10,000; A. B. Gates, $7,000; C. F. Griffin, $7,000; and each says he has no idea of withdrawing any of it.

Keep Out.

Gov. Matthews is still after the Chicago gamblers and race track gamblers, that overflow from Chicago into the adjoining corner of this state. These thugs get themselves into trouble in Illinois, and then try to come over here and run their games, thinking they are far enough away from Indianapolis to be safe. But our supreme court has once more knocked them out, and now if they don't leave, Gov. Matthews is ready to give them another such a push as he did before.

Heart Disease Cured

By Dr. Miles' Heart Cure.

Fainting, Weak or Hungry Spells, Irregular or Intermittent Pulse, Fluttering or Palpitation, Choking Sensation, Shortness of Breath, Swelling of Feet and Ankles, are symptoms of a diseased or Weak Heart.

MRS. N. C. MILLER.

Of Fort Wayne, Ind., writes on Nov. 29, 1894:

"I was afflicted for forty years with heart trouble and suffered untold agony. I had weak, hungry spells, and my heart would palpitate so hard, the pain would be so acute and torturing, that I became so weak and nervous I could not sleep. I was treated by several physicians without relief and gave up ever being well again. About two years ago I commenced using Dr. Miles' Remedies. One bottle of the Heart Cure stopped all heart troubles and the Restorative Nervine did the rest, and now I sleep soundly and attend to my household and social duties without any trouble.

None Equal to Dr Hand's. So says Mother

Nelsonville; O., Dec. 20, '95. Dr. Hand —Dear Sir:—"I have been using your remedies for my children for over four years, I have used many other medicines but have found none equal to yours, Have recommended Dr. Hand's Colic Cure to many other mothers and persuaded them to try it; they all say it proves satisfactory. Cures Flux.

My little boy when two years of age, was taken very ill with bloody flux. I was advised to use Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhœa Remedy, and luckily procured part of a bottle. I carefully read the directions and gave it accordingly. He was very low, but slowly and surely he began to improve, gradually recovered, and is now as stout and strong as ever. I feel sure it saved his life. I never can praise the Remedy half its worth. I am sorry every one in the world does not know how good it is, as I do.—Mrs. Lina S. Nine Epidemics

Since 1878 there have been nine epidemics of dysentery in different parts of the country in which Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhœa Remedy was used with perfect success. Dysentery, when epidemic, is almost as severe and dangerous as Asiatic cholera. Heretofore the best efforts of the most skilled physicians have failed to check its ravages, this remedy, however, has cured the most malignant cases, both of children and adults, and under the most trying conditions, which proves it to be the best medicine in the world for bowel complaints. Gold and Silver.

Cleveland Plain Dealer

"How many grains of pure gold and how many of standard gold are in gold a dollar; how many of pure silver and how many of standard silver in a silver dollar; are there any charges for coinage now; would there be any charges in a free coinage system?"

These are questions that in one form or another have been asked by more than a score of correspondents within two days. We answer them all at once.

Gold dollars are no longer coined. By the act of Sept. 26, 1890, the coinage of the one dollar gold piece, the three-dollar gold piece and the 3-cent nickel piece was prohibited and as fast as they are received into the treasury they are withdrawn from circulation and recoined into other denominations of coins. The weights of the authorized gold coins are multiplications of the standard weight of the gold dollars which contains 23.22 grains of pure gold, and with the alloy, mainly of copper, 25.8 grains of standard gold. The gold coin is, therefore, nine parts gold and one part copper, or copper and silver, but the silver—since 1873—is in no case to exceed one-tenth of the whole alloy. The weight of pure gold in the dollar has been changed twice since the first coinage act of 1792.

The weight of pure silver in the standard silver dollar remains the same as fixed by the first coinage act of 1792. It then contained 371 1-4 grains of pure silver; its copper alloy brought the weight to 416 grains. In 1837 the quantity of copper alloy was reduced and the weight of standard silver in the dollar made 412 1-2 grains. The silver dollar contains nine parts pure silver and one part copper.

The owner of gold bullion can deposit it at the mint, to be formed into coin or bars for his benefit, but deposits of less value than $100 may be refused. At his option he may have it coined of standard fineness, or cast into bars of pure gold, or of standard fineness, or without change of quality, the bars in each case being stamped with the weight and fineness, but no bar to be less than five ounces in weight. For converting standard gold bullion into coin there is no mint charge. For melting and refining when bullion is below standard, for toughening when metals are contained in it which render it unfit for coinage, for copper used for alloy when the bullion is above standard, for separating the gold and silver when these metals exist together in the bullion and for the preparation of the bars the director of the mint, with the concurrence of the secretary of the treasury, is authorized to fix from time to time a charge equal to but not exceeding the actual average cost of the material, labor, wastage and use of machinery employed in the operation.

Until the passage of the act of 1873 holders of silver bullion and of gold bullion were on an equality at the mint. With a resumption of free coinage the same would be the case. The holder of standard silver bullion would be entitled to receive a silver dollar for every 412 1-2 grains of "standard" silver in his bullion, the "standard" metal containing 371 1-4 grains of "fine" silver and the other 41 1-4 grains of the legal quality of alloy. If the silver deposited should be above or below standard he would have to pay the actual cost of bringing it to standard fineness, and if he preferred his silver in bars of any degree of fineness he would be charged the actual cost of the operation.

Condensed Testimony.

Chas. B. Hood, Brooker and Manufacturer's Agents, Columbus, Ohio, certifies that Dr. King's New Discovery has no equal as a Cough remedy. J. D. Brown, Prop. St. James Hotel, Fort Wayne, Ind., testifies that he was cured of a Cough of two years standing, caused by LaGrippe, by Dr. King's New Discovery. B. F. Merrill, Baldwinville, Mass., says that he has used and recommended it and never knew it to fail and would rather have it than any doctor, because it cures. POPULISTS

Hold their County Convention, and Nominate a Ticket.

Saturday's Daily.

This forenoon the leading populists of the county kept gathering in, and made up small groups all over the northwest part of the public square. But there was no regular work done, though several names were announced for various offices. But those named generally declined.

Cal. Husselman chairman, called the meeting to order and Geo. Jaap, of Ft. Wayne, was to speak and while waiting, H. C. Shull made a speech favoring an adjournment till 1898. He was willing for one, to sit on the fence and wait, as they could not elect anyone this year. After some discussion in which he was sustained by John H. Topper and opposed by Isaac Gunsenhouser who finally offered a motion that we proceed to nominate a ticket. Free Kelley spoke for the motion in his usually wild style. Will Francis suggested that as the executive committee had already decided that we nominate a ticket, so that this motion is out of order. He offered as an amendment that we proceed with the announcement of names for candidates.

This carried, and the chair asked for further announcements. This brought out the name of C. M. Brown for representative, announced by Topper.

Geo. Jaap, then spoke, being limited to 30 minutes at the suggestion of Will Francis.

The ticket is as follows:

Daniel Lockamier	Treasurer
A. J. Price	Sheriff
Lyman Lockwood	Commissioner S W
Isaac Gunsenhouser	Commissioner S E
C. E. VanAuken	Surveyor
Sol. Harding	Representative
A. J. Shutt	Coroner
Tom. Kelley	Assessor

Convention Notes

George Jaap is rather a forcible speaker and has evidently studied the financial questions closely. He was, however, greatly interested in the sale of a little book of which he is the author.

Cal Husselman made a good presiding officer and tried to make them hurry. But he had a set of delegates who proposed to take their own time.

Tom Kelley made the best speech. He said they had nominated him for office unanimously, and now he would suggest that they would elect him unanimously.

Sol Harding, for representative, looks like a joke, and he evidently thought they were joking and tried to withdraw. But the Concord delegation would not let him. Sol got 125 votes and C. M. Brown 27.

Fairfield and Newville each gave only two votes. The former generally divided its vote between two favorites, although we believe only one delegate was present. Newville always went solid for some one.

We were sorry to see our old friend, Cal VanAuken, go on the ticket. It can do him no good, as no one on the ticket expects to be elected. We believe, however, that the populists will stick to him to a man, for if they were not in earnest to have him for the place, they would not have nominated him after he had declared his "old-time democratic gold and silver money" sentiments in the little speech he made them.

A committee was agreed on for conference with the democrats, one man for each township. We suppose this is in reference to a joint ticket of some sort.

Free Kelley in his speech said, the democrats had now come over to them, and Dave Smith chipped in "That's all right and true, and we'll take them all in yet."

Jaap said that silver sells for 84 cents an ounce in the United States and at $1.38 in Asia. This was news, and he did not explain it except that it was "caused by a difference in the ratio."

When nominating commissioner in the S. E., some one asked if Cal Grube was a populist, and another wanted to know if Lyman Lockwood was a populist. The chairman said they could not prove it by him.

A. J. Price, for sheriff, will not suit that gentleman very well. He went on the ticket in that place two years ago at a sacrifice he will not care to repeat. He is a good man however.

We made an error in Saturday's DAILY in reporting the commissioners. Lyman Lockwood was nominated in the southwest, and Isaac Gunsenhouser in the southeast.

When it came to assessor "Frederick Creager" was named. It turned out to be a mistake. They had intended the honor for his father, but got the name wrong. Both, however, refused to run, and later on Mr. Kelley was given the place.

The vote on commissioner southwest, was, Lockwood 76, J. L. Smith 66, Grube 6.

On surveyor the vote stood, VanAuken 86, J. B. Scott 74.

Of course, the populists do not expect to elect a man, but some of them may pull ahead of others enough to defeat the democrat who is running for that same office. But there will be many who are really in earnest in their advocacy of free silver who will vote with the democrats. They know this is their only hope to get a showing for the white metal. And this is about the only thing in their platform they will ever get. Such things as government ownership of railroads will never prevail in this country.

The Tramps

The tramp caught near Coburntown yesterday by Frank Boyle, is in jail at Ft. Wayne as he could not give the bond required $5,000. He was recognized by both the Halls, father and son, as the man who did the shooting. But he refuses to give his right name and calls himself Charles Lewis. He says he was on the way from Chicago to Indianapolis, to look for his bicycle which had been stolen. He does not seem to be an ordinary tramy, but appears to have a good education and good breeding. He is evedently an athletic young fellow, at least those who saw him here, think so.

The tramp who was with him, when he did the shooting gives his own name as Frank Faith, and says that Lewis emptied two revolvers in the battle with Thomas Hall and his son Howard. He fired six shots from one revolver, and then took the other and fired three shots. This agrees with the theory that his last shots were from the revolver he stole from Hall's house, which had only three loads in it and belonged to one of the bridge men. We are of the opinion that this is not his first crime.

New Enterprise at St. Joe

St. Joe, Ind., Aug. 5. (Special)—J. K. Stafford, together with the "Big Four" are putting in an extensive sawed hoop plant. She new machinery arrived last Saturday, and is being placed in position to-day. This new industry will give employment to a number of people that otherwise, owing to the scarcity of work, would be idle. The only thing that St. Joe has lacked has been enterprise that would employ her idle men and boys, and we are glad to note this is being brought about by the starting of this factory. This new company is to be known as the J. K. Stafford Co., and as all the company are enterprising business men of St. Joe, there is no doubt but what it will be a success from the beginning. The factory will be ready for operation in about ten days, and by the 1st of September expect to be running their full capacity, which is 18,000 to 21,000 hoops a days.

Bogardus.

People who thought Bogardus could do nothing but shoot a rifle, got left. He is well studied up on his subjects and it takes an expert to get away with him. It was lively last night when they got to firing questions at him and getting his answers. He is a queer character and is making a strange campaign. but he is also an able man. He insists however that he is not paid by any committee, but is supporting his own canvass. He creates a good deal of enthusiasm wherever he goes. His next stop is at Ft. Wayne.

He Did.

The Dispatch is getting excited. This week it asks in "black type."

"Did the Bogardus fakir pay any license for selling his books? If not, why not?"

The town clerk answers promptly, thusly.

"Bogardus did pay the license: $3 a day, or $6 in all."

All of which the Dispatch could have found out, had it not been too busy to ask the town clerk instead of getting a slur at him in the paper.

Natural Products.

People wisely try to produce what pays best, The farmers in the peninsula of lower California are digging up their orange groves and planting cotton, sugar cane, and coffee trees. That is the trul way to prosper. One section produces one thing, another produces something else. Each section should raise what grows there the best as it can therefore be grown cheaper. Then they should sell these things to localities that cannot raise them but can raise some other product which is needed or desired. This makes trade, and trade that is usually profitable. For there are many things that we can buy cheaper than we can raise them. There is no profit in trying to raise things that do not grow well in a given country. Nor is it profitable for us to confine the quantity we do raise, to the wants of our own country. We need wider markets, into which we may sell our surplus products. And we can raise even more than we are now doing, if we were certain of a market for it. We need freer trade with the world.

Keep Changing

S. P. Kaler, formerly county clerk of Whitley county and always a democrat, has a letter from his cousin at Mansfield, Ohio, which tells him the latter is now a strong silver man and will vote the democratic ticket this year. He says he can count 27 republicans in a radius of two miles, who will do the same. Lagrange county reports nearly an entire neighborhood as having declared they will be democrats at this election. On the other hand word comes from Elkhart county that a prominent populist is out in a statement that he will vote for McKinley. There are indidations that we shall see some wild voting this fall. There will be some surprises in this county. From many sections, word comes from democrats who expect to vote for McKinley. And it goes.

What is CASTORIA

Castoria is Dr. Samuel Pitcher's prescription for Infants and Children. It contains neither Opium, Morphine nor other Narcotic substance. It is a harmless substitute for Paregoric, Drops, Soothing Syrups, and Castor Oil. It is Pleasant. Its guarantee is thirty years' use by Millions of Mothers. Castoria destroys Worms and allays feverishness. Castoria prevents vomiting Sour Curd, cures Diarrhœa and Wind Colic. Castoria relieves teething troubles, cures constipation and flatulency. Castoria assimilates the food, regulates the stomach and bowels, giving healthy and natural sleep. Castoria is the Children's Panacea—the Mother's Friend.

Castoria.

"Castoria is an excellent medicine for children. Mothers have repeatedly told me of its good effect upon their children."

DR. G. C. OSGOOD, Lowell, Mass.

"Castoria is the best remedy for children of which I am acquainted. I hope the day is not far distant when mothers will consider the real interest of their children, and use Castoria instead of the various quack nostrums which are destroying their loved ones, by forcing opium, morphine, soothing syrup and other hurtful agents down their throats, thereby sending them to premature graves."

DR. J. F. KINCHELOE, Conway, Ark.

Castoria.

"Castoria is so well adapted to children that I recommend it as superior to any prescription known to me."

H. A. ARCHER, M. D., 111 So. Oxford St., Brooklyn, N. Y.

"Our physicians in the children's department have spoken highly of their experience in their outside practice with Castoria, and although we only have among our medical supplies what is known as regular products, yet we are free to confess that the merits of Castoria has won us to look with favor upon it."

CIRCLING THE GLOBE.

CONCISE HISTORY OF SEVEN DAYS' DOINGS.

Intelligence by Electric Wire from Every Quarter of the Civilized World, Embracing Foreign Affairs and Home Happenings of an Important Nature.

A CONVENTION CALLED.

The Gold Democrats Will Have a Ticket.

Indianapolis special: The conference of the sound money Democrats fully met the expectation of its promoters. There were thirty-three States represented and about 200 Democrats from all over the country were in attendance. Though the most famous politicians of the party were absent, this fact did not dampen the ardor or determination of those present to go ahead and put in the field a ticket and platform that would represent what they believed to be the real tenets of the Democratic party of the country.

The name of the new party is the National Democratic party. The National Convention of the National Democratic party will be held at Indianapolis the first week in September.

EIGHT DEAD.

Terrible Heat Beats Upon the City of St. Louis.

St. Louis special: An epidemic of malignant small-pox could hardly be worse than the present hot weather. Thursday night all records were passed. At midnight, with thermometers registering 81 degrees, the streets and parks were full of people seeking fresh air. Not a breath of breeze was stirring. At midnight Friday night the death roll had reached eight, and prostrations reported were thirty-one.

The dead are: Hugo Ludwig, laborer; John Musser, paper hanger; Lewis Fink, maister; Lewis Smith, collector; Charles Franke, tailor; Charles Reiss, carpenter. Two unknown men are in the city morgue.

IN HER NATIVE LAND

Will the Remains of Kate Field Be Buried.

San Francisco special: A movement is on foot in this city to raise funds with which to remove the remains of Miss Kate Field from Honolulu, where she died a few months ago, to the family plot at Mount Auburn. Miss Field's last request was that her remains should be interred in her native land, but thus far none of her friends interested themselves in the case. As Miss Field left no estate, the Examiner has offered to receive subscriptions from press clubs as well as from associations and individuals interested in the movement, the funds secured to be used to bring the remains to the United States.

SHOCKING SUICIDE.

A Drummer's Method of Ending a Spree.

Kansas City special: E. Argyle Campbell of Springfield, Mo., employed as traveling salesman by a Cincinnati cigar house, committed suicide here in a room in the Wisconsin building, cutting his throat in two places, severing the arteries of both wrists, and gashed himself all over both legs and his body with a penknife. The suicide also fired two bullets at his head, but owing to his enfeebled condition from loss of blood, his aim was so poor that the bullets inflicted only flesh wounds. The suicide had been in Kansas City for over a week, has been drinking heavily, and was out of money.

Michigan Republicans.

The Republicans of Michigan held their convention at Grand Rapids and nominated the following ticket: Governor, Hazen S. Pingree; Lieutenant Governor, Thomas R. Dunstan; Secretary of State, Washington Gardner, present incumbent; State Treasurer, George A. Steele; Auditor General, Fred A Maynard; Commissioner State Land Office, William A. French, present incumbent; Superintendent of Public Instruction, Jason E. Hammond; member State Board of Education, John W. Simmons.

A Duel with Knives.

Two farmers, Tom Hall and Terry James, near Greenville, Ky., became involved in a difficulty over a discussion about a protracted meeting held in the neighborhood. They came to blows and pulled their knives. Terry James was stabbed five times and died. Hall is cut in seven different places and cannot live. The men fought in the broiling sun and were alone when the fight occurred.

Four Children Murdered.

A man named Huckabee of Opelika, Ala., who is partially demented, went to the house of a negro, against whom he had a grudge, and taking an ax from the woodpile struck four negro children who were there, laying their heads open, instantly killing all four.

A New Record.

At Columbus, Ohio, John P. Gentry, the pacing stallion, went a mile to beat his own record, 2:02¼ and succeeded in clipping off a quarter of a second, establishing a new record.

Millionaire Robbed.

San Francisco special: James A. Campbell, a Honolulu millionaire, who disappeared the other day, returned with a bullet hole through his hat and an exciting tale about an adventure with robbers. Campbell says that while he was drinking in a private room in a saloon he was confronted by two masked men who demanded money. The millionaire refused the demand and in the fight that followed a bullet went through his hat and Campbell says he was robbed and kept a prisoner for two days. When released he was given a nickel for car fare.

Two Negroes Lynched.

A special to the St. Louis Republic from Selma, Ala., says: Two negroes who attempted to assassinate Col. C. D. Hunter two weeks ago, were lynched near the scene of their crime. The bodies were found swinging to a bridge, pierced with many bullets. The crime for which they suffered death was a dastardly one.

Mysterious Affair.

A farm hand by the name of Harvey Platt, the assistant of James Johnson, just west of Mt. Gilead, O., was found dead. He was on his knees in the road with his head on the ground, blood oozing from his mouth. The officials are investigating.

Chamberlain's Venezuelan Designs Checked in Guiana.

Word reaching Washington from British Guiana indicates that the Legislature of the colony is inclined to resist the London authorities on matters connected with the Venezuelan boundary trouble. Colonial Minister Chamberlain's policy has been to strengthen the colonial military force and buy Maxim guns. He found difficulty in securing the guns, and now the high court has passed a resolution respectfully urging the home government to reduce military expenses. Mr. Hunter, who introduced the resolution, said in supporting it that the Venezuela boundary trouble had resulted in swelling the cost of the police from $105,000 to $300,000. They were, he said, simply sent up to the Venezuela boundary to be made "dummies" of. He understood a number were sent there fully armed to protect the boundary, and if the enemy approached they were to say "boo" and retire. (Laughter.) Mr. Hunter's further strictures on the military and police caused something of a sensation. He was supported by a number of members, and the resolution calling for retrenchment passed.

CLEVELAND STRIKE RENEWED.

Probability that Others Will Now Go Out in Sympathy.

The reported settlement of the Cleveland strike was erroneous. At the Brown hoisting works the men are out in as great force as ever, claiming that the company violated its agreement. In addition, nearly 100 employes of the Van Wagoner & Williams Company quit work. The probability is that it is solely a sympathetic strike. Workmen in Kilby foundries Nos. 1 and 2 also express an intention of quitting. In that case half a dozen big shops will have to close because of inability to get castings. A meeting of the Brown strikers was held Monday afternoon, at which Master Workman James O'Connell made a speech, in which he declared that the agreement between the Brown company and the strikers had been misunderstood; that it was interpreted one way by the company and a different way by the men. He is reported to have said that the battle now on would be watched by the labor world with interest. "The Mayor, police and tin soldiers," he declared, "have armed to crush us. We have a duty to perform—that of self-preservation."

DOWNFALL OF MOORES.

Failure of Diamond Match Magnates a Surprise.

Like a thunderbolt out of a clear sky came the announcement from Chicago that the Moore brothers, the giants behind the great Diamond Match and New York Biscuit deals, had failed. The sensation produced in "the street"—that indefinite term used to describe the banks, brokers' offices and the business places of the big men in finance without regard to their location—was most profound. The Moores have lost their all and they have always been counted by the public as being among Chicago's millionaires. While the effects of the failure will be far-reaching and widespread, there will be no panic. The real business situation of the Diamond Match Company is not affected by the failure of the Moores; the foreign negotiations are still pending and it is said there is no reason why the shares of the company should not sell yet at the 300 mark which has been predicted for them upon the closing of some of the foreign contracts.

CHARGED TO STRIKERS.

House of a Grocer at Berea, Ohio, Wrecked by Dynamite.

At 1 o'clock Monday morning the people of Berea, O., were awakened by a terrific explosion. Upon investigation it was found that the residence of Charles A. Seibert, a grocer, had been partially wrecked by dynamite, a charge of which had been placed under the house by some unknown person. Fortunately none of the inmates of the house was injured. Seibert did not sympathize with the quarrymen in their late strike and refused many of them credit. It is generally believed that the dynamite was placed under the house by strikers.

Barbering Extraordinary.

Patrolman John Harvey, of Sioux City, Iowa, had a thrilling experience with a somnambulist a few nights ago, as a result of which he lost a lock of hair and barely missed losing his life. Harvey's wife, the heroine of the tale, has been rendered extremely nervous by the tramps, and, in anticipation of a visit from them, recently provided herself with a huge army revolver. Harvey had just returned from his beat, and was undressing in the room adjoining his wife's bedroom. Suddenly the crack of a revolver sounded from the inner apartment, a bullet sped through the officer's hair so close to his head that he involuntarily crouched close to the floor, and the click of the lock was heard as the hammer of the weapon rose for a second shot. Before it came Harvey had reached his wife and taken the revolver from her hand. She was still sleeping, and no little difficulty was experienced in rousing her. The bullet penetrated a thick partition, and, after trimming Harvey's hair, burled itself in a heavy oaken door.

Killed a Brutal Husband.

At Baltimore, James M. Deets went home drunk Sunday night and abused his wife Annie, who, becoming frightened, ran into the street and called for assistance. J. Hanson Andrews, an engineer, aged 29, volunteered protection and went with Mrs. Deets to the door of her house. Deets opened the door, and seeing Andrews began striking him. Andrews whipped out a knife and stabbed Deets to the heart, killing him instantly. Andrews was arrested.

Tramp Stabs a Brakeman.

A crowd of tramps boarded a freight train going to Watertown, S. D., and at Junction the trainmen put them all off. While doing so one of the tramps stabbed Brakeman Charles Gatell in the neck, inflicting a dangerous wound and narrowly missing the jugular vein. Sheriff Lindskog arrested the tramp.

Shot Her Traducer.

William Hawkins fell at Clark and Van Buren streets, Chicago, Friday afternoon, with four bullets in his body. Nellie English, a girl of 20 years, whom he had traduced, fired two shots at him. Joseph F. English, her brother, four years older, stood by to encourage her work and to fire two shots on his own account.

White Man Sold on the Block.

A novel auction sale was held at the Westdork, Ky., court house. Lawrence Polk, a white man, was sold for six months under the vagrancy laws. Deputy Sheriff M. H. Williams cried the sale in the presence of a large crowd. John Creil was the purchaser. The price paid was $12.75.

Wool Firm Goes Under.

The wool commission firm of W. D. Eaton & Co., of Boston, made an assignment. Joseph W. Spaulding is the assignee, and the liabilities are placed at $240,000. No statement of the assets has been given out. The failure is attributed to the poor condition of the wool market.

Gold for Cuba's Cause.

It is reported that the Cuban junta in the United States this week raised a fund amounting to $375,000. Part of the money has been changed into gold and is now on shipboard, bound for Cuba, where it will be placed in the hands of the officers commanding the insurgent army. The balance has been retained by the heads of the junta in Philadelphia and New York, who will use it in a way that will best serve the Cuban cause. The contributions were as follows: Jacksonville and other sections of Florida, $100,000; New York and Brooklyn, $50,000; Philadelphia, $25,000; Baltimore, $10,000; Washington, $10,000; Richmond, $5,000; Savannah, $5,000; New Orleans, $10,000; through Chicago and the West, $100,000, and from several Southern points, $60,000.

THEY WILL REPAY IN GOLD.

San Francisco Savings' Union Addresses Depositors.

San Francisco dispatch: The San Francisco Savings Union has issued a circular to depositors and others designed to meet any floating ideas which may prevail as to the possible effect of a depreciation of legal tender which some people are expecting in view of the passage of a free coinage of silver law. The Savings Union makes an explicit declaration that depositors of gold coin will be paid in like coin at its full value, irrespective of the market conditions of legal tender, and they will expect that contracts made with them for the repayment of loans will be paid under the specific contract law in the kind of coin specified, which is in nearly every instance gold. This has always been the policy of the banks in California and it will so continue, according to the statement of those best qualified to announce the future course of local financial institutions.

IRON TRADE WILL BENEFIT.

Opening of the Soo's New Lock Is Expected to Stimulate Shipments.

A Sault Ste. Marie, Mich., correspondent says that the iron ore industries will be greatly benefited by the increased shipping which will surely follow the opening of the big lock at the "Soo." An estimate of the amount of money invested in the iron ore industry is given as follows:

Character of investment.	Amount.
Mines	$96,500,000
Shipping docks	14,000,000
Railroads for mines to shipping ports	32,500,000
Fleet of ore vessels	46,000,000
Receiving docks	15,500,000
Ore railroads to furnaces	29,000,000
Total	$233,500,000

PHYSICIANS MOBBED.

Fatal Surgical Operation in Pittsburg Arouses the Italians.

J. P. Orr, A. W. Wallace and Thomas E. Eldridge went to the home of Mrs. Gisari Masucci in Pittsburg to perform an operation. It resulted in her death. A crowd jumped at the three physicians swearing vengeance. One Sicilian, a relative of the woman, pulled a long knife. The doctors fled from the house, pursued by the infuriated Italians. Up Washington street they ran with the shouting and gesticulating crowd behind them. By the time Wylie avenue was reached the handful of Italians had increased to a mob of over 200. They threw stones at the fleeing physicians, who took refuge in a drug store, from which they were rescued by the police.

HORSES IN A TRAIN WRECK.

Four Men and J. E. Bush's Racing String Injured at Indianapolis.

A wreck Monday morning at North Indianapolis, on the Big Four road, caused a parlor car for horses, containing the string belonging to J. E. Bush of Louisville, to upset and every horse was so much injured that it is thought none will ever race again. The value of the stable of horses is said to have been $60,000. Four men were hurt. The wreck was caused by a hot journal. The racing paraphernalia was all badly damaged. The railroad company's loss will not be heavy.

Schooner Yacht Sunk.

The schooner yacht Hawthorne, owned by McConnell Bros., was sunk off the Government breakwater at the entrance to the Chicago harbor Wednesday night by the single screw propeller Iowa, of the Goodrich Transportation Line. Capt. Martin Henderson, of the yacht, and a crew of four were taken off the wreck by the tug Gardner. The big steamer, in charge of Capt. John Raleigh, was on her maiden trip, and proceeded on her way to Grand Haven.

SCENE OF THE NEW JERSEY RAILROAD DISASTER.

FORTY-FOUR WERE KILLED.

Terrible Results of the Railroad Disaster at Atlantic City, N. J.

Now that the excitement has more or less subsided, the actual fatalities and injured in the Atlantic City, N. J., railroad accident, are definitely known. The dead number forty-four, and forty-three were seriously enough hurt to be taken to the hospital. Of those in the hospital, twenty-eight were so far recovered two days later as to be able to go to their homes. Of the fifteen persons remaining in the hospital several are suffering from terrible injuries, the nature of which makes their recovery doubtful. There are still people who contend that the Reading train was racing with a train on the parallel track of the Camden and Atlantic, and that the Reading train was going at such a terrific rate of speed that it could not be stopped when the danger signal was suddenly shown. The story that the Reading train was racing when the accident occurred continues to be repeated, but it cannot be substantiated. If two trains were racing the engineers were violating one of the strictest rules of their roads, and were liable to instant dismissal, if discovered. On the other hand, a man whose name is withheld, and who witnessed the accident, says the trains were not racing.

No verification of the racing between the two trains can be obtained from the railroad people, as they either refuse to talk or flatly deny that the engineers could have been racing. Nevertheless, people who daily use the two roads, assert that races occur frequently on the level stretches, where the tracks are parallel, and bets among the passengers would be made over the result. Two of the wounded at the sanitarium are in a very serious state. These are Mrs. Fralinger, of Bridgeton, whose leg was amputated, and the unknown woman with the fractured skull. The latter recovered consciousness Saturday morning, but could only talk incoherently, giving no explanation of herself. It is probable her skull will be trephined in the effort to save her life. The terrible event has cast a gloom over the city and sobered the gay throngs of summer pleasure seekers. Besides the death and suffering entailed by the collision, it is likely to seriously affect the business of the city for the rest of the summer. The fear is expressed among hotel men that the accident will make people timid about traveling on the lightning expresses, and as this has been a poor season so far, the outlook is viewed with anything but cheerful minds by business people.

A little incident that is not without pathos is connected with the sufferers in the sanitarium. Directly across the street from the hospital is the Protestant Episcopal Church of the Ascension. Every Sunday morning the chimes in the belfry are rung. Saturday Rev. J. H. Townsend, rector of the church, came to the hospital and inquired if the ringing of the chimes would affect the patients. Each of the wounded was asked if he would rather that the church chimes would not ring, and each replied in the negative. Strangely enough, several asked that "Nearer, My God, to Thee," be rung, and this hymn was played into the dying ears of the men and women.

ALLISON ON SILVER.

Iowa Senator Favors Bimetallism by Agreement.

Senator William B. Allison, in reply to a request for his views touching bimetallism by international agreement, has written a letter, which has been printed by the Upper Des Moines of Algona, Ia. Mr. Allison was chairman of the United States delegation to the Brussels monetary conference in 1892, and studied the question exhaustively. He says in part:

"As respects the prospect for an international agreement to fix a ratio between gold and silver, with a view to open mints with unlimited coinage by the agreeing nations, I am still of the belief that such an agreement within a reasonable time is probable. The silver countries cannot abandon silver because of their situation, nor can they procure gold to take the place of silver, even if they were inclined to do so. Hence the necessity of a common ratio between the metals, embracing the leading commercial nations. France, Belgium, Holland, Germany and Spain have large amounts of silver in circulation full legal tender, coined at the old ratio of 15½ of silver to 1 of gold. To melt these coins, or sell them at their bullion value, would involve great loss, which they cannot afford to bear. Other countries in Europe have, in the aggregate, a large amount of silver in circulation and are in like situation.

"In England there is a growing sentiment for international bimetallism, embracing her political economists, her professors of universities, as also her manufacturers, agriculturists, ship owners engaged in foreign trade, and many of her leading bankers, and those especially trading with her dependencies, chiefly with India, embracing all classes. These are united into a formidable organization to promote bimetallism. On the continent the States of the Latin union, except Switzerland, are practically united. There is a strong sentiment in Germany in the same direction. The international bimetallists are thoroughly organized in France, Germany, Belgium and Holland.

SENATOR ALLISON.

"The Brussels conference met at an inopportune time, and without sufficient preparation and consultation with governments invited to participate. Such a conference, when held, should be preceded by a carefully digested plan for discussion prepared in advance by the leading governments. Thus it was at Brussels that Germany and Austria and some of the smaller States were not permitted to act and vote in the conference, and therefore it was a failure as respects immediate results, but it accomplished one thing of great value, namely, a general recognition of a serious evil that required a practical remedy.

WED IN SPITE OF ALL.

Miss Grace Wilson Becomes Mrs. Cornelius Vanderbilt Jr.

Cornelius Vanderbilt Jr., and Miss Grace Wilson were married in New York at noon Monday at the Wilson residence, by the Rev. William H. Pott, assistant rector of St. Thomas's Church. The wedding was private. Only the members of the bride's family were present. The bridegroom was the only one of the Vanderbilt family at the marriage.

MISS G. WILSON.

Probably no other wedding in years has so aroused the interest and sympathy of New Yorkers. From the time the engagement was announced, a few months ago, up to the present the Vanderbilt family has made known its uncompromising disapproval of the match. The fact that the bride is a few years older than the bridegroom has been the main obstacle to their union, and even this has been as nothing in the face of their devotion to each other. By marrying the girl of his choice young Vanderbilt may forfeit a patrimony which is estimated at $400,000,000. A single carriage stood in front of the Wilson residence during the ceremony, in which the bridal couple were conveyed to the railway station.

C. VANDERBILT JR.

Cornelius Vanderbilt, Jr., is the oldest living son of Cornelius Vanderbilt, and a great-grandson of the celebrated Commodore Vanderbilt, who laid the foundation of the family's great fortune. The young man is 22 years of age and was graduated last year at Yale. He was the first member of his family to attain a university degree. Miss Grace Wilson is not a member of an old New York family. Both her father and mother are Southerners, who settled in New York after the close of the civil war. Richard T. Wilson is a self-made man and is supposed to be the possessor of $10,000,000.

RESULT IN ALABAMA.

Democrats Claim the Governor by 40,000 Majority.

According to an Associated Press dispatch sent out on the night following the Alabama election, Johnston, the Democratic candidate, won with a majority of about 40,000. Elections in the State of Alabama are conducted on the Australian plan, and no definite figures as to the result can be given until the official count is completed.

The Populists kept a close watch on the proceedings, one of the "spotters" placed to count the number of voters who went into the polls used peas, transferring them from one pocket to another. At another polling place the Populist "spotter" marked Democrats entering to vote by white peas and Populists by black beans. He contends that several hundred more votes are returned from the box than there were voters who went inside the ropes, and he says he had in his pockets many more beans than Goodwyn received votes.

The vote was heavy in almost every part of the State. Difficulties occurred in several sections, but none so far reported serious. At Sylacauga and Ironaton there was no election on account of quarrels. From reports received indications are that Johnston and his full ticket will be elected by 12,000 more of a majority than William C. Oates received over Reuben F. Kolb. Counties which two years ago gave Kolb good majorities show signs of having gone Democratic by small majorities. Colored voters who were considered solid for Goodwyn on account of his vote in Congress for Murray, the negro contestant from South Carolina, seem to have divided in many places.

Timothy J. Dacy, one of the oldest and most widely known residents of northern Illinois, whose life for the past thirty years has been devoted to the sale of agricultural implements in Woodstock, was struck by a limited train and died a few minutes later.

DIVISION OF THE ELECTORS.

Chairman Jones Says He Has Not Yet Decided Upon an Arrangement.

Senator Jones of Arkansas, chairman of the Democratic national committee, says he has not yet considered any plan looking to a division of electors between the Democrats and Populists. He is not yet ready to announce all or a part of those who will be members of the executive committee, which will have the immediate management of the campaign. The question as to whether an advisory committee will be appointed has not been decided.

Beware of a man that does not talk.

CONDITION OF CROPS.

EXCESSIVE HEAT AND LACK OF RAIN IN THE SOUTH.

Wheat and Oats in Illinois Injured by Wet Weather—Hot Winds in Oklahoma—Cotton Suffers Much—General Reports by States.

Hurt by Heat.

Reports received by the Department of Agriculture show that owing to excessive heat and lack of rainfall over the greater part of the Southern States the week just ended was less favorable than the preceding week. The general condition of cotton is not as good as was reported in the bulletin of the previous week, the intense heat having caused much shedding and premature opening of bolls. The general condition of corn in the principal corn States continues excellent. In southern Missouri, however, corn is suffering for rain, and the droughty conditions of the previous week in Arkansas, Louisiana and Mississippi have become more serious. Hot winds, with temperatures over 100 degrees, prevailed in Oklahoma, causing serious injury to late corn. The reports indicate that grain in shock and stack has been much injured by excessive rains of previous weeks. Spring wheat harvest is well advanced in southern portions of spring wheat regions, and the early sown is being cut in the northern portion. North Dakota reports fair yields of early wheat, but much of the late sown will not be cut. In Minnesota, spring wheat has been injured by insects. Tobacco continues in good condition, except in the Carolinas. Some cutting has been done as far north as Pennsylvania. State reports follow:

Illinois—Last week was one of great heat, the average temperature exceeding the normal from 2 to 8 degrees daily, while the maximums exceeded 90 degrees throughout the week in some counties of the State. Showers were very light. It was a favorable week for farm work, and thrashing was generally resumed. Considerable grain in central and southern counties is reported to be in an unmarketable condition. Plowing for fall seeding is well under way.

Missouri—The week has been the warmest of the season. In most counties corn continues to make good progress. Gardens have suffered more or less and pastures are getting short. Fall plowing is in progress in nearly all sections. Grapes and late peaches are ripening.

Wisconsin—The heavy rains in southern and middle sections were of great benefit to corn, buckwheat, pastures and new seeding, but slightly injurious to grain in the shock, which is reported sprouting in some localities. Harvesting is about completed and some thrashing is being done. The army worm is disappearing. Fall plowing has commenced.

Minnesota—Week favorable, being warm and showery. Corn is making excellent progress. Small grain harvest is well advanced. Late crops generally need more rain.

South Dakota—Copious, well distributed rains greatly benefited corn and other late crops, but retarded small grain harvest, which is nearly completed in southern, far advanced in central and progressing in northern counties. Considerable crops ruined by hail in several counties.

Nebraska—The showery week has hindered thrashing and stacking of small grain and caused some damage to grain in shock and stack. Corn continues in unusually fine condition, except in a few southwestern counties, where it is below average in condition.

Kansas—Hot, dry week, except fine rains in central northern counties. Conditions generally favorable.

Iowa—Continued wet and cloudy weather retarded stacking and thrashing. Many reports of oats rotting and sprouting, with considerable damage to spring wheat in shock. Corn generally very promising. Potatoes, pastures and second-crop clover making luxuriant growth.

Kentucky—All crops improved. Corn doing finely. Tobacco good, though much complaint of worms.

Indiana—Corn on uplands throughout the State continues in magnificent condition, but on low lands is still submerged. The potato crop is large, though much rotting, because of wet weather. Melons are ripening, peaches are abundant and the apple crop in northern part of State is very large. Thrashing of wheat and oats proceeds but slowly, much in shock being ruined by the wet weather, sprouting and rotting. Fall plowing is going nicely, with soil in excellent condition, and the pasturage exceedingly good.

Ohio—Unusually warm, with numerous heavy storms. Crops on well drained lands made good progress, but those on river bottoms suffered badly, and farm work greatly interfered with. Grapes are ripening and peaches are plenty.

Michigan—Still droughty over northern Michigan, while excessive rains over southern counties have damaged oats and wheat in shock and stack and delayed farm work. Weather has been favorable for good growth of corn, beans and potatoes. Pastures in southern counties are good, but in northern part of State they are brown and poor.

FALL OF THE MOORES.

Diamond Match and Biscuit Deals Come to a Sudden End.

Like a thunderbolt out of a clear sky came the announcement from Chicago Tuesday that the Moore brothers, the giants behind the great Diamond Match and New York Biscuit deals, had failed. The sensation produced in "the street"—that indefinite term used to describe the banks, brokers' offices and the business places of the big men in finance without regard to their location—was most profound.

While the effects of the failure will be far-reaching and widespread, a Chicago paper asserts that there will be no panic. The Chicago Stock Exchange did not open Tuesday, and it will remain closed until arrangements shall have been completed to settle the trades outstanding. This action was decided upon at a meeting of the governing committee. The action of closing the exchange was commended on all sides. It was admitted that if an attempt had been made to carry on trading under present circumstances serious trouble would surely have followed in which all stocks would have suffered materially. Operators cite the fact that during the panic of 1873, when banks were failing all over the country, the New York exchange closed its doors and remained closed from Saturday, Sept. 21, for ten days, resuming on Tuesday, the 30th. For some time thereafter there was very little business transacted. The exchange was also closed in 1869, when Gould cornered the gold, and Black Friday made it absolutely necessary to stop the wheels of business.

The speculative deal, of which the failure of the Moore brothers is the beginning of the end, began early in this year. The head and front of the speculative movement were the Moore brothers, but they were ably seconded by the most prominent local and eastern speculators.

BENTLEY AND SOUTHGATE.

Formal Letters Written by the National Party's Nominees.

Charles E. Bentley, of Lincoln, Neb., and James H. Southgate, of Durham, N. C., have filed their letters of acceptance of the national prohibition party's nominations for President and Vice-President respectively. Mr. Bentley strongly urges the cause of prohibition and holds that suffrage, without distinction of sex, is a cardinal principle of the party. He then declares the party's policy is opposed to the national banking system, and favors Government ownership of natural monopolies, the public school system, and a juster and more equable distribution of wealth. He denounces the Wilson and McKinley tariffs as shields of the trusts, and makes a demand for general reform of the Government. Mr. Southgate's letter is not so long as that of Mr. Bentley, and does not go into an analysis of the situation. He highly commends the national party's principles and calls attention to its broad platform and the radical reforms suggested therein.

THE SILENT SHORE.

By John Blundell Burton

CHAPTER XVI—(Continued.)

Then the Senor asked for some directions as to the manner of reaching Occleve Chase, and Lord Penlyn told him the way to travel there.

"And I will give you a letter to my friend, Philip Smerdon, who is down there just now," he said, "and he will make your stay comfortable. He, of course, has also a great interest in the affair we all have so much at heart, and you will be able to talk it over with him; though, I must tell you, that he has very little hopes of your ultimate success."

"Ah! he has no hopes. Well, we shall see! I myself have the greatest of hopes. And this Mr. Smerdon, this friend of yours, I have never yet seen him. I shall be glad to know him."

So when the letter of introduction was written, the Senor departed, and on the next day he started for Occleve Chase.

He traveled down from London comfortably ensconsed in a first-class smoking compartment, from which he had not moved until the train deposited him at the nearest station to Occleve Chase.

The few fellow-passengers who got in and out on the way, looked curiously at the dark, sunburnt man, who sat back in the corner, twisting up strange-looking little cigarettes, and gazing up at the roof or at the country they were passing through; but of none of them did the Senor take any notice, beyond giving one glance at each as they entered.

It had become a habit of this man's life now to give such a glance at every one with whom he came in contact.

Perhaps he thought that if he missed one face, he might miss that of the man for whom he was seeking.

At the station nearest to the "Chase" he alighted, and taking his small bag in his hand, walked over to the public house opposite, and asked if a cab could be provided to take him the remainder of his journey, which he knew to be about four miles.

"I beg your pardon, sir," a neat-looking groom said, rising from a table at which he had been sitting drinking some beer, and touching his hat respectfully, "but might I ask if you're going over there on business?"

"Who are you?" Senor Guffanta asked, looking at him.

"Beg pardon, sir, but I'm one of Lord Penlyn's grooms, and I thought if you were going over on any business you might like me to drive you over. I have the dog-cart here."

"I am a friend of Lord Penlyn's," the Senor answered, "and I am going to stay at Occleve Chase for a day or so. I have brought a letter of introduction to Mr. Smerdon."

"That's a pity, sir," the man said, "because Mr. Smerdon has gone up to London by the fast train. I have just driven him over from the Chase."

"He is gone to London?" the Senor said quietly. "And when will he be back, do you think?"

"He did not say, sir."

"Very well. If you will drive me there now, I shall be obliged to you."

The groom put the horse to and fetched the dog-cart round from the stable, wondering as he did so who the quiet, dark gentleman was who was going to stay all alone at the "Chase" for a day or so; and then having put the Senor's bag in, he asked him to get up, and they started for Occleve Chase.

CHAPTER XVII.

On the road Senor Guffanta made scarcely any remark, speaking only once of the prettiness of the country they were passing through, and once of the action of the horse, which seemed to excite his admiration; and then he was silent till they reached the house, a fine old Queen Anne mansion in excellent preservation.

He introduced himself to the housekeeper, who came forward in the hall, and said:

"I have a letter of introduction to Mr. Smerdon; I had hoped to find him here. Perhaps it would be as well if I gave it to you instead."

"As you please, sir, but it is not necessary. Lord Penlyn's friends often come here, when they are in this part of the country, to see the house. It is considered worth going over. If you please, sir, I will send a servant up with your bag."

"I thank you," the Senor said with his usual grave courtesy, "but I shall not trouble you much. I dare say by to-morrow I shall have seen all I want to."

"As you please, sir."

He followed the neat-looking housemaid to the room he was to occupy, after having told the housekeeper that the simplest meal in the evening would be sufficient for him, and then, when he had made some slight toilette, he descended to the lower rooms of the house.

The old servant again came forward and volunteered her services to show him the curiosities and antiquities of the place; but Senor Guffanta politely told her that he would not trouble her.

"I am fond of looking at pictures," he said, "I will inspect those if you please. But I am acquainted with the styles of different masters, so I do not require a guide. If you will tell me where the pictures are in this house, I shall be obliged to you."

"They are everywhere, sir," she answered. "In the picture gallery, the dining room, hall and library."

"I will go through the library first, if you please. Which is that?"

The servant led the way to a large, lofty room, with windows looking out upon a well-kept lawn, and told him that this was the room.

"These pictures will not take you long, sir," she said, "it's mostly books that are here. And Mr. Smerdon generally spends most of his time here at his accounts; sometimes he passes whole days at that desk."

She seemed inclined to be garrulous, and Senor Guffanta, who wished to be alone, took, at random, a book from one of the shelves, and throwing himself into a chair, began to read it.

Then, saying that she would leave him—perhaps taking what he intended as a hint—she withdrew.

When he was left alone he took no notice of the pictures on the walls (they were all paintings of long-past days), but, rising, went over to the desk where she had said that Mr. Smerdon spent hours.

There were a few papers lying about on it which he turned over, and he pulled at the drawers to see if they would open, but they were all locked fast.

"This room is no good to me," he said to himself. "I must try others."

Gradually, as the day wore on, the Senor went from apartment to apartment in the house, inspecting each one carefully. In the drawing room he spent a great deal of time, for here he had found what, both at Occleve House and at Mr. Sundall's house in Grosvenor place, had interested him more than anything else—some photograph albums.

These he turned over very carefully, as he had done with the others in London, and then he closed them and went to another.

"Did he ever know," he muttered once, "that the day would come when I should be looking eagerly for his portrait—did he know that, and did some instinct prompt him never to have a record made of his craven face? And yet, he shall not escape me! Yet, I will find him!"

Later in the evening, when he had eaten sparingly of the dinner that had been prepared for him, and had drunk still more sparingly of the choice wine set before him, confining himself almost entirely to water, he sent for the housekeeper and said:

"I think I have seen everything of importance here in the way of art, and Lord Penlyn is to be congratulated on his treasures. Some of the pictures are very valuable."

"They are thought to be so, sir," the woman answered. In her own mind, and after a conversation with another of the head servants, she had put Senor Guffanta down as some foreign picture dealer, or connoisseur, who had received permission from her master to inspect the collection at the "Chase," and, consequently, she considered him entitled to give an opinion, especially as that opinion was a favorable one. "They are thought to be so, sir."

"Yes; no doubt. But I have seen them all now, and I will leave to-morrow."

"Very well, sir."

"So, if you please, I will have that young man to drive me to the station. I will go by the train that he told me Mr. Smerdon traveled by."

That night, as Senor Guffanta paced up and down the avenue leading to the house and smoked cigarettes, or as he tossed upon his bed, he confessed that he was no nearer to his task.

"Everything fails me," he said, "and yet a week ago I would have sworn by San Pedro that I should have caught him now. There is only one chance—one hope left. If that fails me too, then I must lose all courage. Will it fail me?—will it fail me?"

"It is strange, too," he said once to himself in the night, when, having been unable to sleep, he had risen and thrown his window open and was gazing from it, "that I cannot meet this man Smerdon, this man who believes that I shall fail—as, por Dios! I almost now myself believe! Strange, also, that he should have left on the very day I came here. I should like to see him. It may be that I shall do so in London to-morrow."

He left Occleve Chase at the time fixed, and by his liberality to the housekeeper and the other servants who had waited on him he entirely dispelled from their minds the idea that he was a picture dealer.

"I suppose he is one of those foreign swells, after all," the footman who had served him said to the housekeeper, as he pocketed the douceur the Senor had given him; "there is plenty of 'em in London society now."

He reached the London terminus late in the afternoon, and bade the cabman he hired drive him to the Hotel Lepanto; but, before half the journey to that house was accomplished, the driver found himself suddenly called on by his fare to stop, and to turn round and follow another cab going in the opposite direction.

A hansom cab which had passed swiftly the one Senor Guffanta was in, a cab in which was seated a young man with a brown mustache, and on the roof of which was a portmanteau and a bundle of rugs.

"Quick!" the Senor said, speaking for the first time almost incoherent English; "follow that cab with the valise on the top. Quick, I say! I will pay you anything!"

"How can I be quick!" the man said, "when I can hardly turn my cab around? Which is the one you mean?"

"The one with the valise, I say, that passed just now. I will give you everything I have in my pocket if you catch it."

But it was no use. Before the cab could be turned and put in pursuit, the other one had disappeared round a corner into a short street, from which, ere Senor Guffanta's cab had reached it, it had again disappeared.

"Am I never to seize him?" said the Senor to himself. Then he once more altered his directions to the cabman, and made him drive to Occleve House.

He walked into the room in which he heard that Lord Penlyn and Mr. Stuart were seated, and the excitement visible upon his face told them that something had happened.

"I have seen him," he said, going through no formality of greeting; he was far too disturbed for that. "I have seen him once again, and once again I have lost him."

"Where have you seen him?" Stuart asked.

"Not at Occleve House, surely!" Penlyn exclaimed.

"No—here, in London! Not half an hour ago, in a cab. And I have missed him! He went too swiftly, and I lost sight of him."

"What will you do?" they both exclaimed.

"At present I do not know. I feel as though I shall go mad!" Then a moment after he said: "Give me the keys of the garden; at once, give them to me."

Penlyn took them from a drawer and gave them to Senor Guffanta, and he, bidding the others remain where they were, opened the door leading into the garden from the back of the house, and went out into it.

It was but a few minutes before he returned, but when he did so the bronze had left his face and he was deathly pale.

"Lord Penlyn," he said, biting his lips as he spoke, and clenching his hands until the nails penetrated the palms, "to whom have you given those keys during my absence?"

"To no one," Penlyn answered. "I promised you I would not let any one have them."

"You have given them to no one?" Guffanta said, while his eyes shone fiercely as he looked at the door. "To no one! To no one! Then will you tell me how the murderer of Walter Cundall has been in that garden within the last few hours?"

CHAPTER XVIII.

That night Guffanta stood in the library of what had once been Walter Cundall's house in Grosvenor place, in the room in which the murdered man had spent hours of agony after he had learned that Ida Raughton's love was given to another; and to Mr. Stuart he told all that he knew.

To Lord Penlyn's request, nay, to his command, that he should tell him all, he paid no attention; indeed, he vouchsafed no words to him beyond those of suspicion and accusation.

"I know so much," he said, speaking in the calm, cold voice which had only once failed him—the time when he had discovered that the assassin had in some way obtained entrance to the deserted garden during his absence, "as to be able to say that you are not your brother's murderer. But, unless there is something very strange that as yet I do not know, that murderer is known to you, and you are shielding him from me."

"It is false!" Lord Penlyn said, advancing to him and standing boldly and defiantly before him. "As God hears me, I swear that it is false. And you shall tell me what you know, you shall justify your vile suspicions of me."

"Yes," the Senor replied, "I shall justify them, but not to you. Meanwhile, have a care that I do not prove you to be an accomplice in the murder. Have a care, I say!"

"I defy you and your accusations. And the law shall make you speak out plainly."

"I am about to speak out plainly, this very night. But I am not going to speak plainly to the man whose house affords a refuge to his brother's murderer."

Lord Penlyn sprang at him, as he heard these words fall from his lips, as he had once sprang at his own brother in the park when that brother told him he was bearing a name not rightly his; and once more he felt himself in a grasp of iron, and powerless.

"Be careful," Senor Guffanta said, as he hurled him back, "be careful, or I shall do you an injury."

Stuart had endeavored to come between them, but before he could do so the short struggle was over, and then the Spaniard turned to him and said, "I must speak to you alone. Come with me," and, turning, left the room.

Before Stuart followed him he spoke to Penlyn, and said:

"Do not take this too seriously to heart. This man is evidently under some delusion, if not as to the actual murderer, at least as to your connection with the crime. Perhaps, when he has told me what he knows, we shall find out where the error lies; and then he will ask your pardon for his suspicions."

"It is too awful!" Penlyn said, "too awful to be borne. And I can do nothing. I wish I could have killed him as he stood there falsely accusing me, but he is a giant in strength."

"Let me go to him now," Stuart said; "and do not think of his words. Remember, he, too, is excited at having seen the man again and missed him. And if he does not absolutely bind me to silence I will tell you all."

Then he, also, went away.

(To be continued.)

ARE PIRATES BY NATURE.

Malays Are as Lawless as Ever, but More Careful of Detection.

In the Malay Peninsula piracy has declined considerably since the expedition of twenty years ago, but Perak, Sangalore and Romhow still distinguish themselves now and again by a little undisguised business of this kind. In China the two great hotbeds of buccaneers are the places which have been celebrated in this direction for centuries—Amoy and Canton. The Amoy people proper, who speak the Amoy dialect and live in the walled city, are very quiet, peaceable and orderly, and have a pronounced antipathy for fighting, whether on sea or shore. But back of Amoy is the mountainous district of Tongan. It is connected with the ocean by many arms of the sea. Its soil is sterile and its resources are very few; its people, like the mountaineers, are thin, muscular, brave and resolute. Even to-day they preserve a semi-independence of a military nature. These make their living by piracy. They and the men of Canton have learned wisdom by experience. They no longer cruise the wide seas, attacking any craft that may come along. There are too many gunboats patrolling the coast—too many rifled guns and too many yardarms. Law and order, in the past half century, have shot, hanged, drowned, blown up or burned at least 100,000 followers of the "black flag." To-day the work is done on a smaller scale, but on a far shrewder and safer basis.

They keep spies at various places in their neighborhood, who report to headquarters whenever some junk is about to leave that has a rich cargo or carries a large amount of money. Along with this goes the information of who commands the boat, how large a crew it carries and how it is armed. The pirates then plan to intercept the craft in some river or arm of the sea, or else in some shoal water near the coast, where there is no chance of meeting a gunboat and where, after the robbery, they will have a safe means of escape.

Their calculations are carefully made, but come out right only once in four or five times. It may be that a foreign or Chinese gunboat suddenly appears upon the scene. It may be that the junk they are after goes past their rendezvous with a European steamer or river launch, or, mayhap, the winds and tides delay the prospective victim, and so it does not appear at the time and place figured upon. When they do make a capture they are not so brutal and cruel as in the old years. For the rest, anyone who knows China and the Chinese will not need to be told that the booty is easily disposed of without risks or questions asked.

Ingenious Fisherman.

John Wilson, known to fame as Christopher North, was a fisherman of ingenious ways and wondrous prowess. One day, after arriving at a fine stream, where he perceived at once that the trout were abundant and rising freely, he captured from the surface of the water a specimen of the insect upon which they seemed to be feasting; but on searching his fishing hook, he found nothing with which he could make up a cast after that particular pattern—an odd kind of red spider—and for a moment it seemed as if he were fated to disappointment. Suddenly he darted away at speed, and entering a little village near by, went boldly up to the first native he met and inquired if anybody lived there who had "a carrotty pow." The man was naturally astonished, but after a brief reflection informed him that a certain Mysie, the minister's hired lass, owned "the best crop of red hair in the whole parish." Mysie was immediately sought and found, and, either for love or money, she was induced to part with a tress. Back, then, went the enterprising fisherman to the burn, supplied his hook with a wisp of fiery hair twisted into an excellent imitation of a sprawling spider, and with this unique bait succeeded in filling his basket to the brim.

The climax of slave importation into New York must have been reached between the years 1730 and 1735. According to a report made by Gov. Hunter (June 23, 1712), the population of the colony in the year 1703 consisted of "Christians, 7,767, Slaves, 1,301;" and in 1712 of "Christians, 10,511, Slaves, 1,775." Collector Kennedy's figures (1726) show importation only, and not until we come to the census of 1731 do we find a total of the slave population then amounting to 7,202.

DRIFTING.

How nice it is to drift along,
While resting on your oars;
To hear your sweetheart's dreamy song
Re-echoed from the shores.

Each ripple forms a melody,
Each splash a gladsome note,
Which seems to intermingle
With the music from her throat.

But when you drift upon the sand,
Farewell to songs of love;
You hear your sweetheart's stern command:
"Now, dear, get out and shove."

SCIENCE AND INVENTION

Cattle Plague in Africa.

A terrible pestilence is raging in Africa, not only among domestic cattle, but among certain species of wild cattle; and it attacks also the buffalo, giraffe, wart-hog, eland and several other species of antelope. Captain Lugard, writing from Gaberones, in Bechuanaland, says that near villages, hundreds, even thousands of carcasses lie about. Between Gaberones and Buluwayo there are reported to be four thousand wagons stranded because their oxen are dead.

Wind and Walking.

The Falkland Islands, and other regions in the South Temperate Zone, are remarkable for the high and violent winds that blow across them. A recent visitor to the Falklands has noted the fact that the inhabitants of those islands, in consequence of being habitually compelled to brace themselves against the wind in walking, have acquired a peculiar gait, so remarkable that a native Falklander can be readily distinguished by his manner of walking. On account of their gait they are called "kelpers."

Edison's New Light.

One of the results of Mr. Edison's experiments with the invisible X-rays discovered by Professor Roentgen is the production of a new kind of lamp. Like the ordinary incandescent electric lamp it consists of a glass bulb exhausted of air. This bulb is coated on the inside with a substance which fluoresces brilliantly at the touch of the X-rays. By means of wires sealed in the ends of the bulb, and furnished with proper terminals inside, an electric current is sent through, and X-rays are thus produced within a fluorescent shell. When the current flows the lamp shines with a mild, pleasing light, and without perceptible heat.

Horseless Carriages.

The recent horseless carriage race from New York City to the Ardsley Country Club on the Hudson is regarded by those interested as having proved that such self-driven vehicles are well adapted for use in cities. There was a French carriage entered in the contest, but the prize was carried off by an American carriage. The Scientific American says that the manner in which the horseless carriages dodged back and forth in front of and around cable-cars and wagons "demonstrated beyond argument that the horseless carriage is much more capable of control than the ordinary horse and carriage."

Camphor Becoming Scarcer.

Most of the world's supply of camphor comes from Japan and Formosa. Of late years the demand has begun to exceed the supply, and the question has arisen how the latter can be maintained. One of the reasons why camphor is becoming scarcer and dearer is said to be that it is extensively used in the manufacture of celluloid. At present camphor is mainly produced from the so-called camphor-tree, which attains a gigantic size in Japan, one specimen recently measured being 115 feet tall, and having a trunk over 14½ feet in diameter. The tree is common in China, but as yet the production of camphor in that country is very limited. The camphor-tree is a member of the laurel family, and is related in genus to the cinnamon-tree. It is said that camphor can be produced from other species of trees. In Borneo a very aromatic camphor is obtained from the natural deposits of gum on the trunks of a species of tree indigenous to that island and Sumatra. Borneo camphor is rare and very costly.

A Terrific Sea-Fight.

The Prince of Monaco has recently announced his intention to send his yacht on an expedition of discovery among the haunts of the sperm-whale. This leads Mr. Frank T. Bullen to relate in Nature some of his experiences with whales, and he tells a story of a fight of sea-monsters in the Strait of Malacca which reads like a romance. The fight occurred in a smooth sea on a moonlight night, and Mr. Bullen watched it from the deck of a ship with the aid of a night-glass. His attention was first attracted by a commotion in the water, which he supposed might be caused by a volcanic disturbance of the sea-bed. Examination with the glass showed a very large sperm-whale engaged in deadly conflict with a monster squid, or devil-fish, whose tentacles encircled the whale's body. "The livid whiteness of those writhing arms which enlaced the cachalot (whale) like a nest of mighty serpents stood out in bold relief against the black, boulder-like head of the agressor." The aggressor was the whale, squids being a favorite prey of sperm-whales. "Presently the whale raised itself half out of water and we plainly saw the awful-looking head of the gigantic mollusk. At our distance, something under a mile, it appeared about the size of one of our largest oil-casks, which held 336 gallons. Like the rest of the squid visible it was of a peculiar dead white, and in it gleamed two eyes of inky blackness about a foot in diameter. To describe, the wonderful contortions of those two monsters is far beyond my powers. All around the combatants were either smaller whales or immense sharks who were evidently assisting in the destruction of the squid, and getting a full share of the feast. Mr. Bullen says the encircling tentacles gradually slipped off the whale's body, and the fight ended in an evident triumph for the whale.

The Army Rifle in Hunting.

Something for sportsmen to consider seriously, if they intend to get one of the new 30-caliber army rifles, is the great penetration of the bullets. One of the bullets would kill a man through a 4-inch spruce tree, or a cow a mile and more away. No ordinary tree can be depended on to stop one of these bullets, and it might easily travel half a mile through dense woods and hit a man far out of sight with deadly effect. "Field and Stream" says that the next Legislature of our great game States should pass a law prohibiting the use of a jacketed bullet, because of the danger to human beings. Another argument it offers in favor of such a law will have great influence on the men who do not wish to wound without killing the game. "This class of bullets is useless for large game unless soft-pointed," it says, "as it rarely kills instantly, but allows the game to die from internal hemorrhage, and in terrible agony out of reach." When such a rifle is used for big game a bullet that mushrooms should be employed. The mushrooming bullet will kill anything, as it goes clear through an elk, moose or deer, and the force of the impact would knock a running grizzly down.—New York Sun.

THE FATAL SHEARS.

What They Did in a Way of "Getting Even."

There was a hard look in John Warwick's eyes, but it was also a look of triumph. He bent over his desk and worked steadily for an hour without saying a word to any of his associates.

Finally, one of the boys asked him what had happened.

"Oh, it's only a little domestic flare-up," he said, "but I guess it will turn out all right."

Upon being pressed to relate the nature of the trouble, Warwick said:

"My wife got a pair of bloomers last week, intending to go out to-day for a 50-mile ride. Now, I have always declared that I would not permit my wife to be seen in public with a rig of that kind upon her person, and I proceeded early this morning to show that I was a man of my word. I got hold of those bloomers and locked them in my trunk. Here," he concluded, defiantly slapping his hip pocket, "is the key."

Every man in the office congratulated Warwick upon the stand he had taken. His employer, a crusty old fellow who seldom spoke to the young men in the service, came around and told him, in an undertone, that his salary would be raised at once, as it was evident that he was a person of sterling worth.

When the day's work was ended John Warwick went home with a light heart. The announcement of his prosperity, he reckoned, would patch up friendly relations with his wife, and visions of future happiness flitted before him.

But, alas, the door was locked, and the place seemed to be deserted. He sat down upon the porch and waited for an hour, but the woman he loved did not return. Then he thought he would put on his old overalls and dig around in his little garden. He felt that he needed exercise.

The key to the kitchen door was under the mat, and he was soon rummaging the clothes closet in search of his overalls. They could not be found. At last he entered his wife's sewing room, and there, upon the floor, lay the southern extremities of the suit that had in days gone by served him so well and faithfully. They had been cut off at the knees.

John Warwick buried his face in his hands and wept in wild despair.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Identified in Advance.

Notwithstanding she was not a dame of high degree, she was a woman of character, and there was a peculiar aggressiveness in the freckle on her nose, which made the police officers on duty at the station house step around lively when she called on a matter of business.

"I understand," she said to the sergeant, "that there's the body of a man waiting to be identified here."

"It is at the morgue, ma'am," responded the sergeant, but with more suavity than is common.

"Well, my husband hasn't been at home for three days, and I thought it might be him. Can you tell me what he looks like?"

"Yes; but you could get a good deal more satisfaction by going to the morgue yourself, ma'am."

"I suppose I could," she sighed as if she felt sure she would not identify the remains as those of her husband. "Was he killed?"

"Oh, no, ma'am," exclaimed the sergeant. "He died suddenly. The patrolman saw him fall on the street."

"Died sudden, did he?" she asked with interest.

"Yes, ma'am."

Her tone indicated that she thought the police were to blame in some way.

"Well," she said, "there's no use in my going to the morgue if that's the case. It ain't my husband. He never done anything sudden in his life. He's the slowest man on earth. Good-bye," and she walked out of the station house as if she were sorry about something.

Perpetual Motion?

Perpetual motion has been the dream of the inventor almost ever since the first invention of any kind was perfected. Pliny says that in his time there were machines which the inventors claimed would work, without stopping, for an indefinite length of time, and in the patent office of every government of the world there are hundreds of devices for securing this end. One authority states that in the patent office at Washington there are over 1,000 such appliances, for each of which the inventor hoped success. The perpetual motion machines, however, have never succeeded, and never will until men succeed in overcoming friction, the inertia of matter and gravitation and also in finding material that will never wear out.

Culture of Beauty.

Just a blossom or two, with some green leaves, will lighten the table wonderfully. Teach the children to bring in clover blooms and blue grass, with the graceful seed heads, if you have not finer flowers. It will teach them to see beauty in small things, and to make the most of their surroundings.—Washington Star.

"After all," said the thoughtful girl, "the presentation of the engagement ring is a relic of barbarism, a reminiscence of obsolete conditions." "That's so," was the enthusiastic rejoinder. "I just wish it were the condition to give bicycles."—Washington Star.

Nothing tires a man more than to be grateful all the time.

The Dispatch.

We have been waiting to see the Dispatch get its head clear on several different points, so it could either see its mistakes or make its positions clearer. But it keeps right on apparently trusting to luck to get out of the tangle into which its want of knowledge is leading it. If this is not the case, then it is purposely trying to mislead its readers.

It says last week:

"The average price of American wool in 1891, under protection, was 17 cents a pound. In 1895, under free trade, it was only 9 cents, a loss of 8 cents a pound."

Without caring to inquire whether these figures are right, we think the Dispatch would have been fairer, as well as nearer the truth if it had said.

"In 1888 under protection, American wool was worth 29 cents per pound. But in 1891, also under protection, American wool was only 17 cents per pound, a loss of 12 cents a pound."

Can the Dispatch give one good reason for not making its statement in this form?

Again it says:

"Wipe out free trade and the gold reserve will stand above its normal limit unaided."

We suppose by "free trade" the Dispatch means the present tariff law. If so, it should know what others know, that the present tariff law is better constructed for raising a revenue, than was the McKinley law. It was under the McKinley law that our revenues began to run down. That law was made on purpose to "reduce revenue" for it says so in the title (Read the title.). And in order to make it "reduce the revenue," it cut off 58 millions of revenue previously derived from sugar, and then turned around and gave 12 millions a year in bounties to a score or so of wealthy sugar planters in the south, making so much more reduction, for it had to come out of the revenues derived from the tariff on other articles. This made a total reduction on the one article of sugar alone, of 70 millions a year. Then it took off in other places in such a way as to reduce tariff receipts about 90 millions a year. Then it took a big sum off of beer and other liquors in the internal revenue list, and reduced the tax on tobacco in its various forms. The receipts began to run down at once under this grand law, and by the time Harrison went out of office, the immense surplus left by Cleveland, was substantially used up to pay running expenses growing out of increased appropriations, as well as paying off some portions of public debt. And thus during the winter, when Harrison went out in the spring, plates were got ready to print bonds on, so as to supply the deficiency caused by failing revenue and the raid of greenbacks, etc., on the treasury. The very object of a protective tariff is not "revenue," but "protection," and "protection" always favors those who do not need favor, and is aimed to prevent importations, and without importations, no duties would be paid. And leaving out any othe reasoning, the Wilson law is so framed as to produce more revenue than was the McKinley law.

Again it says:

"All the banks in the country could not maintain the gold reserve unless we have a tariff law that will yield enough revenue to pay the expenses of running the government."

But the banks are at this moment maintaining the gold reserve. Therefore either the above proposition is untrue or else the present tariff law is "yielding enough revenue to pay expenses of government." Take your choice of the two horses.

We have not time to take up and expose all their weak points on the tariff. The Dispatch is equally weak on its defense of the single gold standard. It says:

"Silver has fallen in price chiefly by its increased production, 27 million ounces in 1873 and 66 million ounces in 1892."

But why not give some other years than those two. Perhaps the increase would show bigger. And if the increase of production cheapened silver, why did it not cheapen gold? Besides speakers and papers have been telling us that silver production has been kept low for several years. Which is right?

Again it says:

"Silver dollars are now equal to gold dollars because the government has pledged itself to keep all its money at a par, and exchangeable for gold dollars."

Please point out that portion of any U. S. law that says the government will pay a gold dollar for a silver dollar.

Again it says:

"Under free coinage each silver dollar would contain only 53 cents' worth of silver and would be stamped with a lie on their face."

Pardon us, if right here we say the very dollars we are using every day, and which the Dispatch says the government is pledged to make as good as every other dollar, are of this very kind, "have only 53 cents' worth of metal in them and are stamped with a lie on their face." Is this not so? There are nearly 500 millions of these coins in circulation, with that "lie on their face," and every one of them passing at the value of any gold dollar. If it is the increase in quantity that decreases value, why did they not decrease, when from the extremely small number we had of them in 1879, we soon had our present enormous silver circulation?

The last issue of the Dispatch is particularly out of joint, and we shall have more to say about it.

Bryan Rally

St. Joe to Have a Rousing Big Meeting Next Saturday Night.

St. Joe, Aug. 11, (Special)—Great preparations are being made for a rousing free silver meeting at St. Joe Saturday evening Aug. 15, to which all who are interested in the free coinage of silver, 16 to 1 are cordially invited. J. M. Robinson nominee for congress, Dr. Nusbaum nominee for senator and C. M. Brown nominee for representative have peomised to be present. Also Rev. Bartlett of Newville a life long republican has consented to deliver an address. Come and hear and be convinced.

The Ontlook

The chairmen of the several counties of the Twelfth congressional district, met at Ft. Wayne Monday and discussed the outlook. They believe that J. M. Robinson will have a large majority in this district, as large perhaps as the big vote given Judge McClellan at his second election.

Saw Bryan.

Phil Gibson and Harry Trentman were in Ft. Wayne this morning when Bryan went through a little after five o'clock. There was an immense crowd out even at that early hour, to see the most famous man of the present time. And everybody wanted to shake hands with him of course, and as usual, Auburn was at the front. Both young men got a good old fashioned grasp of the hand of the next president of the greatest nation on earth.

Will Fuse.

In Elkhart county the democrats and populists will unite on a fusion ticket. The two parties will have a convention at the same place and on the same day. The democrats will nominate a man for a certain office, and then the populists will also nominate him. Then the populists will nominate the next officer on the list and the democrats will nominate him and so on. This is something like the plan by which it is hoped to unite the democrats and populists in this state. There has been an effort made to have the populists name all the even numbered electors and the democrats the odd numbers. This at first sight looks fair. But on examining the vote at the last general election it will be shown that the populists did not poll a quarter as many votes as did the democrats and therefore they are not entitled to 6 out of 13. Besides, the democrats have their candidates already chosen, and are not inclined to make them get off the ticket. Such a plan would force Frank VanAuken off as an elector for this, 12th district.

G. A. Porter Dead.

G. A. Porter, one of the old residents of Auburn, died last evening. For some time he has been suffering from softening of the brain, and the attempt one week ago Sunday to commit suicide has hastened his death. His funeral will be held from the residence Wednesday at 2 p.m. under the auspices of the G. A. R. post, of which he was a loyal member. Rev. J. D. Brosy will officiate. The interment will take place in Evergreen.

Lightning's Work!

Angola, Ind., Aug. 11, '96 (Special)—During the great electrical storm of yesterday afternoon, lightning struck the large farm house of Chas. McClue, north of town, and burned it to the ground with most of its contents. The large barn of Albert Ewing in the same neighborhood was struck and burned with nearly all the contents. Here in Angola, Hon. D. R. Best's house was struck and slightly damaged. Frank Jackson's house was shaken up by an electric bolt. Gavitt's foundry received a stroke. Dr. Wood's house, occupied by a man named McBride, was struck twice within five minutes time, the last stroke killing a dog that lay behind the stove. The baby had just been playing there with the dog, but the mother had picked it up and carried it down into the cellar. The barn of Billy Moore was struck and two horses knocked down, but not killed. Several shade trees and telephone poles were struck. All concede the big storm of yesterday to be the heaviest ever passing over this section. The rain fell in torrents for one hour and twenty minutes, making rivers of the streets and lakes of the low lands. Many cellars were flooded and considerable damage done. The storm was void of heavy wind, but the electric element was simply wonderful.

The Truth of It.

(San Diego, Cal. Union)

From time to time indignation is aroused by reports of ill-treatment of American citizens in foreign lands. Stories of this sort come most frequently from Cuba, and they are so common that many people are firmly convinced that the government at Washington is culpably lax about according protection. There is, however another side of the question. It will be noted that in very many of the instances reported the name of the alleged victim has a foreign sound, and not uncommonly it is Spanish. This affords an important clue to the real situation. The simple truth is that one of the greatest annoyances to which the government is subjected is the custom of foreign subjects to acquire American citzenship and use it as a cloak or a convenience, as the case may be, while residing in the country of their birth. Technically they are American citizens and entitled to claim all privileges, but practically they have never exercised their citizenship or have abandoned it. A sample case is that of Manuel Palaez, about whom considerable was heard recently. Palaez is a Cuban. He came to the United States when a boy and was naturalized in 1874, and, two years later, returned to Cuba, where he married and has lived ever since. But he still poses as an American, and recently applied for an American registry for his wife and five children—obviously for the purpose of securing protection for them in the disturbed condition of the island. Secretary Olney, however, holds that neither he nor his family is entitled to protection while they remain in Cuba. If he will return to the United States he can, of course, exercise his American citizenship, but if he elects to be a Cuban, and live in Cuba, he must not expect to use his American naturalization as a shield. There would seem to be sound common sense in this ruling, and if it were applied in many like cases the government would be relieved of much unnecessary vexation.

Hudson and Ashley.

The twin cities on our nothern county line, though sometimes disagreeing on minor matters, are united where it comes to the question of free silver. Monday evening they had a joint meeting to organize a Bryan club, and our friend Frank Seiler writes that they enrolled 150 that evening and expect to double the number inside of two weeks. He adds: "It is simply astonishing how the masses of the people in this part of the county are flocking to the standard that means prosperity to the toiling millions. They fully realize that for the past twenty-five years the legislation has been for the classes against the masses.

J. P. Court.

'Squire Walter's court has been busy to-day.

Wm. Elson has brought suit against Charles Gerber for possession of property and $5 damages. The case came up this morning and Elson gained his point, throwing Gerber into costs, making a total of $9.25.

Also, there has been going on yesterday and to-day a very dirty case preferred against Albert Harding, of Corunna, for indecent exposure of his person in the presence of two small girls, aged about seven. One was little Lunette Daily, daughter of Wm. Daily, who lived here several years, and the other was a daughter of Geo. Knauer. The girls made the matter pretty clear to their mothers, but Harding denies it. Both sides have many witnesses. The state is represented by F. L. Weisheimer and Judge McClellan, while J. W. Baxter is Harding's attorney.

Jury disagreed.

—L. D. Hughes a prominent hardware dealer, of Lagrange has left the republican party and will vote for Bryan although he served in McKinley's regiment during the war.

—John Provines was in town yesterday having finished his work as receiver in the Erick Brothers matter, and turned over the matter for good. It has been quite a vexatious affair, but we think all are satisfied with the settlement.

—FOR SALE:—A fairly good second-hand bicycle for sale cheap at F. J. Yesbera's jewelry store.

—The old settlers of Whitley, Allen and Noble counties will hold their annual meeting this year in the Gandy Park at Blue Lake, Indiana, on Wednesday, August 19, 1896.

Tuesday's Daily.

During the severe electrical storm yesterday afternoon the large farm barn of Billy Means in Jackson township, was struck by lightning and burned to the ground with all the contents, except the horses which were got out. Among the most valuable of the contents were hay, grain, mower and binder. He carried $500 insurance in one of B. M. Hastings' companies. Mr. Hastings was down there this forenoon and adjusted the loss.

Married Hundreds.

NOVEL REUNION IN INDIANA.

Pastor Meese Has Called Together the 1,500 Couples He Has United and They Will Celebrate at Auburn on August 20.

Special to the Chicago Record.

Huntington, Ind., Aug. 2.—One of the queerest reunions in the history of Indiana will take place at Auburn, DeKalb county, Ind., on Aug. 20. It is to be composed of the men and women who have been united in marriage by the Rev. W. L. Meese during his ministry there. They form a fair proportion of the population of DeKalb county besides being represented in every other state in the union. This novel idea has taken immensely with them and the prospects are that there will be a gathering that will be memorable.

For years the Rev. William L. Meese or "Uncle Billy," as he is called, has officiated at a large share of the matrimonial ceremonies held in that county. Finally it developed into a popular impression that the thing was not properly done unless it had his pious sanction. This has been especially the case among the rustics, until now the peace-loving man cannot put his finger on the county map without covering broad acres tilled by men who were made benedicts by him. How many there are of them the parson does not know and the records do not disclose, but he has officiated in that capacity more times than has any other minister now living in this section, and it is safe to say that the number will reach 1,500. Of these many have since attained distinction in different walks of life, and it is a fact of which the Rev. Meese is proud that very few of his marriages have been undone by divorce courts.

PROGRAMME OF THE REUNION.

The novel programme proposed for Aug. 20, was brought about by the desire of Mr. Meese to round out his active ministry by a grand gathering of all those whom he has started out in life. He announced the idea several weeks ago, and it met with instantaneous approval. Letters of congratulation and offers of assistance came pouring in and at this early date it is an assured success. Speakers of local prominence have been secured to address the gathering. It will be an all day affair. A brass band has been engaged to enliven the occasion with music and a grand chorus of voices will assist it.

The reunion will be held in a beautiful grove at the edge of town. There will be hammocks and swings and enough good things to eat to make the hearts of visitors glad. Intermingled with the music will be oratory and recitations and the finale will be a grand march led by the first couple married by the Rev. Mr. Meese. They are George Swineford and wife (nee Belle Hornberger). The newest married couple will have the honor of the left of the line and no one will venture to guess who they will be, as Mr. Meese has announced that he will marry any one free on that day who will make application.

When the procession has reached the proper position it will about face and will be "taken" by a local photographer who has been fortunate enough to secure the exclusive right to the job.

That is the programme as now made out for the first matrimonial reunion ever held in this country so for as known.

SKETCH OF THE MINISTER.

The man who is thus honored was born in Canal Fulton, O., on Dec. 14, 1828. He was confirmed in the catholic church at Massillon in 1844. He was a towboy on the Wabash and Erie canal from 1846 to 1853 and moved to Indiana in 1855. He joined the methodist church in 1856 and in the same year was licensed as an exhorter. In 1877 he was licensed to preach. He was elected sheriff of DeKalb county in 1872 and again in 1874.

During the forty years of his work as an exhorter and minister he has made the acquaintance of nearly every man, woman and child in the country. His popularity with the country people is boundless. He officiates at their marriages and funerals and is consulted in naming the new-born children. It has been said that some of these people would refuse to die unless they were assured that "Uncle Billy" would officiate at their funerals.

Notwithstading his life of activity and success as a minister he is poor. He is charitably inclined and is a splendid type of the old time preacher. He was never a politican in the popular sense of the word, yet when he ran for sheriff he overturned an adverse majority. It has been estimated that if only persons whom he had married with their descendants, were to vote for him he could be elected to any office in the county.

CORRESPONDENCE.

CORUNNA.

Mr. and Mrs. Mort Hilkey and sons, of Auburn, were the guests of Mrs. Clarissa Buchanan last week.

George Cox and wife visited in Orland last week with Rev. and Mrs. Sumwalt.

Henry Quince was in Hudson several days the past week buying and shipping stock.

Valentine Steffe, of Hudson, was in Corunna last Saturday shaking hands with old friends.

Mr. and Mrs. H. E. Chilcote, of Butler, spent Sunday with Mrs. C. Buchanan. Mrs. Buchanan returned home with them and will visit about a week.

There is intense excitement in our town over a report that one of our citizens has been guilty of a most heinous crime. We all hope that he is not guilty.

Hesse Castle and Auburn, and Corunna crossed bats on the latter's ground August 8. The score stood 18 to 20 in favor of Hesse Castle and Auburn Batteries, Corunna, Mercer and McDonald; Hesse Castle and Auburn, Bateman and Treesh and Gibford. One feature of the game was the number of men struck out by Mercer.

BUTLER.

The extremely warm weather is prostrating quite a number of our old people.

Eli Bryan, an old and well known citizen of this township died last Saturday. He lived for many years about three miles west of Butler, but about five years ago he sold his farm, bought property in town and has been living here since. He has been poorly for a long time. He leaves his aged wife, but no children. His funeral took place from the Lutheran church last Monday, Rev. Dustman officiating.

A daughter of Cyrus Kennedy, of Garnet, Kansas, is visiting A. G. Jones

Salem Center was visited by a destructive fire on the morning of Aug. 3, supposed to be of questionable origin. Two business houses and two dwellings were destroyed. Partially insured.

The good weather the past week has enabled the farmers to gather in most of their nearly ruined wheat and damaged oats. The oats upon threshing prove much better than was anticipated, many pieces yielding thirty to forty bushels per acre.

Frank Brunkhart and little daughter, Edith, took a trip on their wheels last Saturday to Newville, Hicksville, Spencerville, Maysville and St. Joe. Mr. B. attached a strong cord to his daughter's wheel and towed her along. They traveled upwards of 50 miles.

Foundry and Machine Shop for Sale or to Rent.

On October 1, 1896, the lessees of the Eagle Mfg. Co. plant at Auburn Junction, Indiana, will give the owner possession of the entire plant, consisting of a foundry and machine shop, and the same will be leased or sold at a price much less than its real value. The plant is in one of the best locations in that part of the state, being situated at Auburn Junction, Indiana, in an angle formed by the junction of the L. S. & M. S., the Wabash and B. & O railroads. The factory land consists of about 11 acres, bounded on two sides by the railroads mentioned. In Sept., 1893, this property was appraised by competent men at $3,500. It can be bought for less than half that amount now. If you are interested in this line write me at once. In case of purchase, a clear title to the property can be given. The plant can be leased at $17 per month for a period of 2 to 10 years. If you have a little capital this is a rare chance to go into this line of business with a small investment. The plant can be bought for $200 down and balance in installments to suit purchaser. Possession can be given before Oct. 1, '96, if desired, but the factory must be rented or sold by that date Call on or address

SPINAL weakness easily cured by Dr. Miles' Nerve Plasters

—Mrs. W. H. Kiblinger and Mrs. McEntarfer were at Rome City to-day attending the Assembly.

—Chas. Kinsey and wife were called to Milford by telegram yesterday announcing the serious illness of Mrs. Kinsey's sister.

—If you are suffering fram Catarrh or any disease of the nose, throat or lungs, Dr. Nusbaum's specific treatment will cure you. W. H. Nusbaum, M. D. tf.

—P. J. Lockwood is in town. We understand that Mrs. Lockwood will join him here soon, and they will then spend some time at some summer resort.

—Alvin Goodwin rode down this afternoon from Pleasant Lake on his wheel. We should judge that it was a hot trip.

—Phil Gibson is temporarily employed at the Kiblinger factory, taking the place of Mr. Gates, who is visiting his people at Angola.

—Mrs. J. W. Reed and son returned to-day from a few day's visit with relatives at Sheldon, Ind.

—Milo Thomas, of Corunna, was here Monday. He is a pretty busy man, for besides his extensive hardware business, he does a good deal of legal work as notary public.

—Mrs. A. B. Olds and baby left yesterday for Rome City where she will remain a week with her grandmother and other relatives and attend the Assembly.

—A Bryan club was organized at Butler last night. About 120 persons signed the roll as members. The meeting was addressed by Dr. W. H. Nusbaum and Hon. C. M. Brown, of Auburn.

—YOU ought to know that when suffering from any kidney trouble that a safe, sure remedy is the Clinic Kidney Cure. Guaranteed or money refunded. Robbins & McCord. 35

—Mrs. A. B. Richards and Mrs. Mary Boyer went up into Fairfield Sunday, to see Mrs. R's. father, Mr. Buss, who is still seriously ill.

—Mrs. Kate Smith leaves in the morning on the early train for Detroit, Michigan, to visit for a week with Mr. Smith's sister. She will also take a trip to Canada before returning.

—It doesn't matter much whether sick headache, biliousness, indigestion and constipation are caused by neglect or by unavoidable circumstances; DeWitt's Little Early Risers will speedily cure them all. Davenport the Druggist.

—Miss Gertie Wilson starts for Ohio early to-morrow morning, and after making a visit there will return to her home at Little Rock. Her many friends here regret to have her go.

—Theories of cure may be discussed at length by physicians, but the sufferers want quick relief; and One Minute Cough Cure will give it to him. A safe cure for children. It is "the only harmless remedy that produces immediate results." Davenport the Druggist.

—Mike Long moved over from Butler yesterday, and is "at home" in Mrs. Harter's residence, corner of Jackson and 5th streets. Our people will welcome him and his family once more to Auburn.

—Bucklen's Arnica Salve.—The best salve in the world for cuts, bruises, sores, ulcers, salt rheum. fever sores tetter, chapped hands, chilblains, corns and all skin eruptions, and positively cures piles or no pay repuired. It is guaranteed to give perfect satisfaction, or money refunded. Price 25 cents per box. For sale by Robbins & McCord. tf

—If you have ever seen a little child in the agony of summer complaint, you can realize the danger of the trouble and appreciate the value of instantaneous relief always afforded by DeWitt'e Colic & Cholera Cure. For dysentery and diarrhoea it is a reliable remedy. We could not afford to recommend this as a cure unless it were a cure. Davenport the Druggist.

Mr, C. D. Yonker, a well known druggist of Bowling Green, Ohio, in speaking of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy says: "I take pleasure in recommending it to my customers, for I am certain that it will always please them. I sell more of it than all other kinds put together,, For sale by Davenport, the druggist. 35

—The shooting by C. A. Bogardus in Madden's field yesterday afternoon was the best we have ever seen. He claims to be the champion rifle shot of the world, and well deserves that honor. His shooting with the rifle at small marbles thrown in the air and breaking them won hearty applause. He fooled the audience by stating that he was not a professional with the shot gun, but, however, he never missed a shot. He is truly a great marksman, yet he did not shoot from as many different positions as did Miss Anna Oakiey, with Buffalo Bill.

Thursday's Daily.

No morphine or opium in Dr. Miles' PAIN PILLS. CURE All Pain. "One cent a dose."

—Chas. Gulick and wife are parents of a new girl born yesterday.

—Prof. Harrison and family will return to-morrow from their summer vacation with his people at the old home in Ohio.

—Poison Ivy, insect bites, bruises, scalds, burns, are quickly cures by De, Witt's Witch Hazes Salve, the great pile cure. Davenport the Druggist.

—Notices to be inserted in the Weekly, must be brought in early as it goes to press Wednesday forenoon. Please remember.

—Harry Henry is down from Ashley on a visit. His mother came home yesterday from Mt. Clemens, where she has received great benefit from the treatment.

—Dr. Baxter is paying special attention to Diseases of Children also Diseases of the Liver, Stomach and Nervous system. tf

—The poles for the Western Telephone toll line from Fort Wayne to Auburn are nearly all set. It will be less than two weeks when we can talk to that place.

—"Boys will be boys," but you can't afford to lose any of them. Be ready for the green apple season by having DeWitt's Colic & Cholera Cure in the house. Davenport the Druggist.

—There came near being another fire at the Wabash coal shed this morning. But with the use of water from the tank and removing the coal the flame were checked.

—The whole system is drained and undermined by indolent ulcers and open sores. DeWitt's Witch Hazel Salve speedily heals them. It is the best pile cure known. Davenport the Druggist.

—The B. & O. gives a rate of 2 cents a mile each way to Mr. Meese's Marriage Reunion, from Hicksville to Albion. Tickets good Aug 20 and return 21. Other roads will likely do as well at least.

—Many a day's work is lost by the sick headache, caused by indigestion and stomach troubles. DeWitt's Little Early Risers are the most effectual pill for overcoming such difficulties. Daven port the Druggist.

—Henry C. Rohm of Waterloo is one of the thoughtful farmers, who realize what close times it is for printers during the summer, and so he helped our. cash box this week. He is also one of the careful farmers who managed to get his crops saved with but little loss.

A man with a sweet singing red bird has been here a day or two. He claimed to have a new kind of bird lime to catch birds with. His plan is to have a red bird that will whistle and in that way call other birds near, when it lights on branches that are covered with the bird lime when it will stick fast, and is caught. It is a plan that came to us from the older times, and is now being revived. But his bird is a talented singer and never seems to get tired.

Friday's Daily.

—Miss Gertrude Metsker, of Churubusco, and Rev. H. S. Lawrence of VanWest, O., were here yesterday the guests of Mrs. Sam Nickey.

—Nate Alvord and wife have joined the long procession of happy parents. Dr. Baxter reports an 8 pound girl, at their home last evening.

—Rev. W. L. Meese has arranged to furnish all persons he has married with an attractive and neat badge to be worn on the day of the reunion, and to be kept as a souvenir.

Trustee Brown, of Franklin published his annual report as required by law. It was in the Butler Record of Aug. 7. But up to this date, Aug. 7, he are the only one.

—Speaking of Mr. Meese's reunion of those who were married by him, Dr. Ford thinks he might get up a little reunion himself by calling together the children he has "assisted" into the world during a long experience as a physician. He says the number would reach over 4,000.

—Rochester, Ind., and many other towns are talking of imposing a tax of $150 on each "quart shop." A quart shop is one that sells liquor under a U. S. license, and is generally run by a man who has failed to get a license under the state law. They are in general worse than regularly licensed salsoon.

—Drs. F. M. and L. A. Hines, who operated on little Johnny Pfefferl a week ago, say his flesh is healing up nicely. The bone of the leg had been injured by a nail forced into it by the "kick" of a toy cannon, Since then it has caused lameness and suffering to the little fellow. The doctors found a hole in the bone to the interior, and scraped it out clean, getting all the pus and decayed bone removed. They now hope for a full recovery.

—A question finds its way into our item box, which should have had attached the name of the writer, not for publication of course, but as an evidence of proper motives. We hope in future, names will be given under these circumstances. However, we will deviate from our rule this once. The question is, "If government coins in unlimited quantities, silver worth fifty-three cents into 100-cent dollars, how will the government make up the deficiency?" The plan we have heard, is to let the silver bullion rise in value, under the effects of the new law, till it reaches 100 cents.

What stops Neuralgia? Dr. Miles' Pain Pills.

Saturday's Daily.

—FOR SALE:—A number of fine brood sows, mostly young. Call on A. Bartels, at the County Home. 3233

—The sad news comes from Butler of the death of Miss Margaret Bolan, a most amiable and accomplished young lady. Her home was at Hillsdale.

—HOGS FOR SALE:—Two good brood sows with pig, and a good boar. Reasonable price. Call on Geo. Swander at southeast part of town. 33

—Mrs. B. B, Harrison and little girls returned home yesterday. Prof. Harrison and son Blaine are making the trip on their wheels and will probably reach here to-day.

—If you want a good lot in Woodlawn Cemetery at a price below their market value and on easy terms, call on W. C. Hartmen. A limited number $30 to $45.00.

—An insane man at Chicago the other day, armed himself with a revolver and dived into the lake. He said he was hunting for the sea serpent. The insane asylum is now his home.

—Alba Heywood, the actor, well-known in this place, is soon to do a little "impersonating" in a different line than has usually been his custom. He will take the stump for free silver. This will be quite a paying engagement until the weather gets cool enough for the reproduction of the "Dollar of Our Dads," "Diamond Robbery" or a "Barrel of Money."

—Mr. Meese is fast becoming noted through the notices he gets in regard his coming matrimonial reunion. He got a letter this week from the editor of the "Press" at Columbus. Ohio, asking for Mr. Meese's photograph and also for any data convenient concerning himself or the reunion. He also got a letter ftom Harry B. Darling, manager of the No. Ind. Press Bureau at Laporte, asking for six photos to send to different dailies.

—The Western Telephone Co. one of those in operation in Auburn, has secured the right to run their line of poles along the streets of Garrett to make a line to Avilla. They will also put their system into the town of Garrett. In the bargain for establishing a system there, the Herald says they will pay the town $25 and give them the free use of two phones.

—If the following joke really did come from the Christian Guardian, to which it is credited, that paper deserves a large and sudden boom in its circulation. The story is about an Irishman and a Frenchman, who were disputing over the nationallty of a friend of theirs. "I say," said the Frenchman, "that if he was born in France he is a Frenchman." "Begorr" said Pat, "if a cat should have kittens in the oven would you call them biscuits?"

Monday's Daily.

—The oldest inhabitant can not recall a hotter wave than we have been suffering from for a few days.

—Insure your proyerty in one of the nine old line companies represented by W. C. Hartman. The best is the cheapest.

All the plays given by Morgan Gibney are of the highest class, and the finest of costumes. Do not fail to see them.

—Miss Libbie Hosler, of the COURIER office, is up in Fairfield this week, visiting relatives and taking a rest.

—S. S. Potter and E. J. Beaty drove to Ari yesterday, where they were the guests of Mr. Potter's father.

—Our old friend John H. Topper was up to see us Saturday. As might be expected he is an enthuisastic Bryan man.

—George Quince was awarded the contract of painting the woodwork and tin of the county jail. There were several bids in, but his it seems, was the lowest.

—J. E. Pomeroy and wife returned this morning from Butler where they were over Sundy the guests of friends.

—Master Lodie Potter went down to LaOtto this morning to remain a few days with his aunt, Mrs. Anna Zinn.

—Prof. Horace Hoffman, wife and baby, returned this morning to Bloomington, where he is professor in Greek in the State University.

—Charles Snell, the grocer, began this morning selling groceries for cash only. Mr. Snell is enjoying a thriving business and we are glad to note he is meeting with such good success.

—Miss Blanche Lochner, of Jackson township, came up last week to visit friends here. She was taken with the quinsy and has been compelled to remain here under the care of Dr. Matheny.

—Mr. Meese informs the DAILY that the Wabash road will sell tickets the 20th at reduced rates between Columbia City and Montpelier. It will be a third off if only one or two go. But if fifty are sold they will be at half fare.

—J. H. Miller was here over Sunday. He is now engaged in short hand and type writing and similar work for mechanical department of the Cincinnati, Jackson & Macinac road and is located at VanWert, Ohio. Since leaving here he has been part of the time at Marshall, Mich.

—Laurin Watson, who resided in Allen county near Erick Chapel, died Friday. His funeral was held yesterday. The son, who is in jail at Fort Wayne, was not allowed to come home during the sickness of his father without being handcuffed. And the parents preferred that he remain in the jail, if he could not come without being handcuffed.

Dr. Miles' Pain Pills are guaranteed to stop headache in 20 minutes. "One cent a dose."

Monday's Daily.

Cash for scrap Iron, Auburn Foundry & Machine Works. 3cf

—Mrs. F. E. Myers came down from Toledo this morning for a visit with her people here.

—The Auburn Junction Sunday School will give an ice cream festival on Saturday evening, Aug. 15. All are cordially invited.

—J. R. Duncan was in town between trains this forenoon, having come down from Elkhart to Waterloo Sunday. He says the people up that way are well as far as he has heard, his own people included.

—Mrs. I. M. Zent returned from Indianapolis, Friday where she had gone to make a visit with the family of her brother, Nicholas Ensley. Mr. Ensley's youngest daughter, Amber, returned with her and will remain here a few weeks.

—Wm. McIntyre was 67 yesterday, and as is usual, the immediate members of the family passed the day with them and enjoyed the usual birthday dinner. Mr. McIntyre is not just now feeling as well as he did.

—Ferd Winter, one of the leading attorneys of Indianapolis, and for many years the law partner of Ex-president Harrison has changed his politics and come out for free silver. He has always been a leading republican. He says he has studied the question.

—Rev. H. L. Yorger, the field secretary of the board of church extension of the Lutheran church will speak in the Lutheran church next Friday evening, Aug. 14, at 8 o'clock. We extend an invitation to all, and especially urge the members of the church to come out and hear Rev. Yorger.

—Who ever heard of ripe pumpkins the first of August? Yet there are "oodles of 'em" this year. Our friend Amos Walsworth, brought a few to town the other day as a sort of curiosity, and disposed of them one way and another. We got one in the "usual way" of his for which he has thanks.

Tuesday's Daily.

—Mrs. Allice Cool was among Auburn ladies who visited at Fort Wayne to-day.

—Mrs A. B. Olds returned last night from Rome City, where she has been for a week with friends at that resort.

—Those who expect to take in the excursions to Niagara Falls should read the articles on that subject we are now giving.

—LOST—Somewhere on the streets of Auburn a K. of P. watch charm. Finder will confer a great favor by leaving it at Chas. Pommert's.

—Joseph Goodwin, of Pleasant Lake, was here yesterday afternoon to get some work done at the foundry, some repairs on his engine.

—Frank Bolender brought in some huge stalks of pie plant this week. They are nearly as big as corn, but under the influence of a wet season, are tender and juicy.

—Misses Emma and Mary Snell accompanied by Frank Draggoo left this money for Fort Wayne where they will spend a few days visiting friends.

—The first load of lumber for the erection of a stage at the fair ground for the Matrimonial Reunion was taken to the ground yesterday. Rev. Meese, with a few other men, will commence work at once and erect a stage and seats and clean up the grounds.

—Readers of the DAILY noticed the the fall of the mercury yesterday in one hour, between 3 and 4 o'clock, of 17 degrees. This was caused by a change of the wind after a heavy shower. Although it continued showery after that, it gradually grew warmer. At 5 the mercury had got back up to 78. At 6 it was 80.

—Mr. Cory Baxter had a narrow escape one night last week. In coming in from seeing his best girl he attempted reaching his room without any one hearing him, but on reaching the head of the stairs one foot slipped, and consequently the bottom of the steps was his first stopping place. We hope his injuries are light and that more care will be taken next time in reaching his room.

—Mr. and Mrs. James Griswold entertained the American Volunteers at dinner to-day. The table was lovely with flowers, fine table ware and dainty food. It must have been a bright day in the memory of the "Volunteers," who seldom fare like this in the work they have undertaken in the saving of souls. But they also did their share of the entertaining for they had their musical instruments such as mandolins and the like, when marching down West Seventh street.

—The Holden Bros. Comedy Co. gave their play "Falstaff Up-to-Date," at Hicksville last night. The performance was a grand success and pronounced by all the best ever given in Hicksville. Mr. Henry informs us that the play is the best ever given in Auburn. He says it is just about such a play as "Niobe" which was given here last winter. Seats are now on sale at Davenport's Drug Store for the plays here this week. Remember the new ice fans in the opera house make it very cool. Don't miss the best play ever given in Auburn.

—Charley Hoff is a pretty successful "gold bug." He has succeeded in securing all but one of the various gold coins of the United States. He showed us to-day some 25 cent pieces, 50 cent pieces, gold dollar, $2.50 piece, $3 piece, $5, and he has a $10 and $20. He lacks only the $50 piece and he says he has got track of one of those, which he opes to get some day.

Waterloo Fair.

—Waterloo fair is held this year much earlier than usual in the hope of avoiding the cold rains that come so often in early October. The date is September 1, 2, 3 and 4. Send to the secretary, M. Kiplinger, at Waterloo, for a premium list.

NOTICE.

Notice is hereby given that there will be an election held at Butler Chapel Butler township DeKalb county Indiana on the 7th of September 1896, by the members thereof for the purpose of electing five trustees for said class.

Dated this 4th day of August 1896.

PHILLIP NOEL,
32-34 Sec'y Board of Trustees.

Our Thermometer.

Monday's Daily.

To give our readers some idea of how the thermometers travel these days, we give the temeratute as shown each hour by the COURIER thermometer which hangs on the north wall of the building and in a place where the sun does not strike. Commencing at eight o'cloch it registered as follows:

8 a. m.	88 degrees
9 a. m.	90 "
10 a. m.	91 "
11 a. m.	92 "
12 m.	92½ "
1 p. m.	93 "
2 p. m.	94 "
3 p. m.	93 "
4 p. m.	76 "

Auburn Bannas.

Auburn is progressive and we have often said she demands all the modern improvements. But we had not supposed she would attempt to raise tropical fruit except now and then a stray orange, lemon or fig, such as grow in moderately warm countries. Now, however we can record the attempt with bananas. These are among the most extreme of tropical fruit, the great bulk of them being raised in regions close to the equator. J. F. Aber, of the south end green-house, has a fine banana plant growing in the south front of his residence, standing among a group of other plants. The banana this year is in bearing and is now showing one branch of the fruit, not yet fully grown which reminds one of a big roasting ear. Of course it may not mature before the frost comes but he may be able to get it in the green-house then and save it. In the meantime it is an object of great interest to those of our people who never saw one, and everybody passing that way stops to look at it.

Two Stores Robbed

Burglars Get in Their Work at Angola and Escape.

Angola, August 8. (Special)—Burglers visited this place last night and broke into W. C. Patterson's dry good store and Elston's shoe store. They entered Patterson's store by the basement window, then up into the store room, worked the combination on the safe and took $25. in cash. Two watches were in the safe, but these were left on the floor. Mr. Patterson cannot say whether any goods were taken or not. At Elston's the thieves entered a basement door, then cut a panel out of the door leading to the store room, moved the door bolt and walked in. The money till was opened and a good watch taken that a cusomer had left in "soak" for a pair of shoes. Mr. Elston can't say as yet whether any goods were stolen as his stock is large. The burglars got their tools at Nyce's black-smith shop. It is believed to be the work of local thieves. Officers are on the look-out for the rascals.

Summer Homes.

A small booklet containing list of places for summer boarding at points along and in the vicinity of the line of the Lake Shore & Michigan Southern Ry., on the shore of Lake Erie and the inland lake resorts of southern Michigan and Northern Indiana. Sent free anywhere by A. J. Smith, G. P. & T. A., Cleveland, O. 32-34 —South Chicago refines one fourth of the silver produced in the United States. How few people ever heard of the great silver refining plant in Chicago. It was probably kept quite for the sake of safety.

G. A. R., Attention!

One cent per mile to St. Paul and return by the Lake Shore & Michigan Southern Ry., for the National Encampment. Tickets on sale August 30th, 31st and September 1st good to return to reach original starting point until October 2nd. 1896. Inquire of Lake Shore agents about conditions. 32-34

A dealer says there is more steel used in the manufacture of pens than in all the sword and gun factories in the world.

Cold boiled water tastes flat, because it has been deprived of the air. To restore air pour water quickly from one jug to another.

Some Japanese magicians are so clever that while smoking they are able to form letters and short words with the smoke that issues from their lips.

There are about 100 grains of iron in the average human body, and yet so important is this exceedingly small quantity that its diminution is attended with very serious results.

The Dowager Empress of Russia's magnificent Danish bloodhounds created considerable interest during her visit to Nice. They had round their thick bull necks broad silver curb chains.

Some Hindoos wear mustaches and beards turned up; but all wear whiskers, which are shaved off once when an adult of their connection dies. The shaving off of whiskers is thus a sign of mourning.

The Eskimo have a queer custom in regard to doctors. At each visit the doctor is paid. If the patient recovers the physician keeps the money; if the patient dies the money is refunded to the family of the deceased.

Though Italy leads the rest of Europe in suicide as well as homicide, Russia is ahead of her in the proportion of professional men, especially doctors, who take their own lives. Most of these are between 25 and 35 years.

After Jan. 1, 1897, the city of Glasgow, Scotland, will levy no taxes of any kind, but will obtain from city street railways, water and lighting systems more than enough revenue to pay the expenses of the city government.

Plans are well under way for the expending of $9,000,000 on the canals of New York State, for which the people voted at the last election by a majority of 243,505, and it is expected that the work will be done in the next two or three years.

Japanese houses in the larger cities are of one general shape, two stories high, and put together with a curious method of mortising, at which these people are adepts, not one nail being used throughout the construction of the building.

Inside a bust of Victor Hugo which is hollow the leader of the anarchists of Prague imported a large quantity of anarchist writings for circulation in the country. The bust has been seized by the authorities, and the anarchist has been arrested.

The total wealth of Great Britain with all her possessions is estimated by an American authority to be $40,000,000,000. France comes next with $37,500,000,000. The wealth of the six largest nations in the world aggregates $165,000,000,000.

The statistics of life insurance show that in the last twenty-five years the average woman's life has increased from nearly 42 to nearly 46, or more than 8 per cent., while man's life average has increased from nearly 42 to 44, which is 5 per cent.

The number of businesses in England worked upon co-operative principles—that is, where the worker is recognized as a partner in profits and responsibilities—has grown in about ten years from fifteen to nearly 200, while the failures during the same period have been very few.

One of the most eccentric church spires is that of the parish church (All Saints) of Chesterfield, England, with its curious spire, 228 feet high, and sixty-four feet off the perpendicular. Whichever way the observer looks at this curious spire it appears to bulge out in that direction.

John Habberton states that mosquitoes are extremely frightened by dragon flies, and will not come within yards of them. He says that one or two dried dragon flies suspneded from fine silk thread under the roof of an open porch infested by mosquitoes will scare all of the little pests away.

The street superintendent of Niagara Falls, N. Y., has been suspended by the mayor because he would not clean the streets of the city on Sunday, as ordered by the common council. The affair has created much excitement, and the Sunday and anti-Sunday people are preparing for a vigorous fight.

The large rate of the increase in the incorporations of social clubs with the Secretary of State of New York since the advent of the Raines law is causing much comment among State officials. The number of such clubs incorporated from May 1 to July 13 was 834, as compared with 134 during the same period last year.

Upward of $190,000,000 is spent annually on sport in Great Britain. This is the estimate of a writer who has been examining the subject. The turf is, of course, the most expensive sport and accounts, according to this authority, for nearly $55,000,000. A modest sum of $10,000,000 will, it appears, cover the cost of cricket.

Prof. W. F. Cummins, State geologist of Texas, in speaking of the recent find of gold in that State, declared that samples have been taken that gave as much as $25.21 in gold and $5 in silver to the ton. Another lot of samples, the pieces averaging three or four cubic inches, assays $16.50 in gold. A third lot, about one peck in amount, consisting freely of good-sized lumps, assayed $160.10 per ton.

Genuine egret feathers are sold as artificial in London in order to salve the conscience of women who think it wrong to wear bird feathers in their headgear. The Society for the Protection of Birds has shown that the egret or white heron would soon be exterminated, as the feathers must be obtained during the nesting season. Its agents have now proved that the only artificial thing about the feathers sold is that they are split in two, thus making two plumes instead of one.

There is a boom in new companies in England. During June the average was four companies floated every day; the capital called for during the first half of 1896 was $406,000,000. Sixty-five million dollars were for foreign government loans, $55,000,000 for cycling companies, $45,000,000 for breweries, $60,000,000 for railroads, and $47,000,000 for mining companies. Last year the capital applied for during the same period was $260,000,000, in 1894 it was $155,000,000, and in 1886 only $130,000,000.

LUNATICS AS INVENTORS.

Various Devices that Are Practical and Promise to Be Valuable.

"A lunatic asylum is about the last place anyone would search in for ingenious and valuable inventions, isn't it?" said the resident physician of one of the largest of those institutions.

"We have a patient in this asylum now who believes he is shut up in the old Fleet prison for the national debt. In the hope of raising the money to pay this trifle off and obtain his release, he has for the last two years devoted his poor brains to inventing things. Strange to say, among a host of utterly absurd ideas, he actually has produced two which are really practicable. His friends and I have supplied him with such harmless materials as he requires, and he has just finished a simple automatic contrivance for the head of a lawn tennis racquet, to pick up the balls and abolish stooping. It acts perfectly well, and I'm so convinced there's money in it that I've advised his friends to secure a patent for him in case he becomes cured. His other invention is of a different kind, being a really efficacious preventive of seasickness.

"It's very simple; two of its components are in every kitchen and the rest in every chemist's shop. I have successfully tested it myself on two occasions recently, when crossing the channel in very stormy weather.

"As an instance of the cleverness of lunatics, it may interest you to know that a very valuable improvement connected with machinery, and now in daily use everywhere, was invented by an inmate of an asylum well known to everyone by name. As he is now quite cured and is a somewhat prominent man, I won't mention any details; but his invention, designed and modeled as a diversion while absolutely insane, has since brought him in thousands of pounds."—London Letter to the St. Louis Republic.

The Country Doctor.

The beautiful picture of Dr. MacLure, in the "Bonnie Brier Bush" stories, there known as "Weelum," has been thought by some an impossibility in fact. At a recent dinner given by the Liverpool Medical Institute, the creator of Weelum was present, and asked to make a speech, and this is part of what he said:

One is to answer a question that has been often and fairly asked, Was there ever a doctor so self-forgetful and utterly Christian as William MacLure? To which I am proud to reply: On my conscience, not one man but many in Scotland and in the south country—I will dare to prophesy also across the sea. It has been one man's good fortune to know four country doctors not one of whom was without his faults—Weelum was not perfect—but who, each one of them, might have sat for my hero. Three are now resting from their labors, and the fourth, if he should see these lines, would never have identified himself. Then I desire to thank my readers, and chiefly the medical profession, for the reception given to the Doctor of Drumtochty. For many years I have desired to pay some tribute to a class whose services to any community are known to every countryman; but after the tale had gone forth my heart failed. For it might have been despised for the little grace of letters in the style, and because of the outward roughness of the man. But neither his biographer nor his circumstances have been able to obscure MacLure, who has himself won all honest hearts and received afresh the recognition of his more distinguished brethren. From all parts of the English-speaking world letters have come in commendation of William MacLure, and many were from doctors who have received new courage. It is more honor than a new writer could ever have deserved to receive the approbation of a profession whose hearty charity puts us all to shame.

Politics of the Day

GREAT PAPER FOR BRYAN.

The manner in which the opponents of the ticket nominated at Chicago have begun their campaign must rouse the profoundest resentment of every American regardful of the interests and jealous of the honor of his country. The representatives of half the American people have been denounced in delirious language as anarchists, cut-throats and swindlers. Their chosen candidate for the highest office in the republic has been pictured as a crazy Jacobin or a designing demagogue. Commerce and industry have been threatened with the very panic these alarmists profess to fear.

This crusade has been one of reckless misrepresentation from the start. The libelers of the late convention know that the Chicago platform is not anarchial. In most respects it is inspired by enlightened progressiveness. The mild implied criticism of the majority of the Supreme Court, or, rather, of the one justice who changed his mind, was thoroughly well deserved, and might have been made much stronger without impropriety. Since when have we been endowed with infallible judges, whose acts are above criticism? If the advocacy of the just and scientific principle of taxation of large incomes was anarchistic, then every statesman in England is an anarchist, and, instead of searching the cellars of the house of parliament for barrels of gunpowder, the authorities ought to search the pockets of every member for bombs.

The income tax is the backbone of the British financial system; it is about to be introduced, in a graduated form at that, into France, and it already exists in its most extreme degree in Germany.

The condemnation of the practice of substituting government by injunction for the old, orderly processes of courts and juries, so far from being revolutionary, is a vindication of the ancient rights of the English-speaking race against a novel and dangerous innovation which deserves the name of anarchy much better than anything done at Chicago.

The platform reaffirms the principle indorsed by a vast majority of the people of the United States, of a tariff for revenue only, and protests against the disturbance to business that would be caused by a return to McKinleyism. There is nothing incendiary in that. In this point it is the Chicago platform that is conservative and the one adopted at St. Louis that is revolutionary.

"We hold," adds the Democratic profession of faith, "that the most efficient way of protecting American labor is to prevent the importation of foreign pauper labor to compete with it in the home market." That is honest, straightforward principle—the only kind that does what it pretends to do.

The Chicago platform demands simplicity and economy in government, and protests against the profligate waste of money that has characterized Republican legislation. That is not the reckless spirit of a mob. It is rather the sober utterance of prudent property owners and taxpayers, of whom the Chicago convention was principally composed.

The protest against arbitrary federal interference in local affairs is one which Jefferson would have commended as the very foundation stone of his political faith.

In denouncing the attempt to swindle the government out of more than $200,000,000 by extending the Pacific railroad debts the convention was fighting anarchy, for there can be no more dangerous anarchists than those who are powerful enough to override the laws and amass wealth from the prosperity of the people.

Moreover the silver plank in the Chicago convention does not deserve the frantic vituperation leveled against it. The silver theory has too much expert authority on its side to brand its advocates as lunatics or incendiaries.

Nor is it possible with any more sincerity to call Mr. Bryan a demagogue. He is the very reverse of a demagogue. He follows the truth as he sees it, though it lead him to political destruction. Last year he could only muster ten thousand votes for his faction in Nebraska out of over 180,000, but he had no thought of compromise. He fought on, regardless of victory or defeat, thinking only of what he believes to be right. If he had not been nominated nobody would have dreamed of calling him a demagogue. His spirit is rather that of a prophet.

On the other side we have William McKinley, bound hand, foot and tongue to the most corrupt combination that ever exhibited itself openly in an American presidential campaign. His election would put the resources of the government at the disposal of the Hanna syndicate. It would mean a return to Chinese protection, and the exploitation of the people by a rapacious ring of mandarins. It would mean in the end a popular revolt before which a frightened conservatism might pray for a leader with the moderate instincts of Bryan.

In most respects the superiority of the Democratic candidate is so palpable as to make comparisons needlessly cruel to his opponent. What, then, is the duty of the American citizens who desire to secure the best possible government for the republic during the next four years? Plainly it is to vote for that presidential candidate who is manifestly best fitted to administer the government, and to settle the financial question through their representatives in Congress. Gold men may vote for gold candidates, silver men for silver candidates, and bimetallists for bimetallists. But nobody who realizes what is at stake in this campaign can vote to abandon government of the people, by the people, for the people, in favor of government of McKinley, by Hanna, for a syndicate.—New York Journal.

They Are Not Democrats.

There is one thing very sure—Democrats who are Democrats from principle and believe in all the teachings of democracy, cannot and will not vote for Wm. McKinley for President. When a Democrat announces that he will vote for McKinley before he will vote for Bryan, he has renounced his allegiance to Democracy, and has no right or standing of any kind or character in the Democratic party.—New York Mercury.

The Bryan Handshake—The Grasp of the People.

The McKinley 400 Handshake.

The Campaign of 1896.

This is a country of forty-five States, and in the present political contest the East is generally opposed by the West and the South. True, the West and South were represented at the St. Louis convention, but it can be truthfully said that the platform framed there does not represent either the views or the wishes of the great masses of the inhabitants of those sections.

The electoral college this year will be composed of 447 votes, 224 being necessary for a choice. Giving the Republicans all the States north of Mason and Dixon's line, and east of the Ohio River, they have but 120 electoral votes, and with Maryland, Ohio, Indiana, Wisconsin and Michigan added, they will have but 199. West of the Mississippi and in the Southern States, where the silver sentiment is the strongest, there will be 248 electoral votes. To have any show of success, the Republicans will have to carry the East solidly, and hold fast to Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Michigan and Wisconsin, besides capturing several States west of the Mississippi River.

These are the facts of the campaign, and the wise student of politics will perceive that while the East is the skirmish line of the gold bugs, the real battle must be fought in the West.—Philadelphia Item.

Bennie Takes the Stump.

We will now have some talk through that hat.

McKinleyism and Labor.

Some idea of the real effects of high protection on labor can be had through an examination of the methods by which all wealth is produced and distributed. Though obscured by our system of exchanges, in which money is used to avoid the necessity of barter, the entire industrial operations of the world consist in adding goods of an equal value to those made. Whether in the simplest form of primitive society, or in the highly complex organization of industry in civilized countries, the process is essentially the same.

Under free conditions for the production of wealth the amount of goods each worker, whether on a farm, in a factory or a mine, would get, would depend on the value of that which he produced. The total wages of labor would be the total amount of goods, divided according to the ability of each worker. To add to the prosperity of the whole people it would be necessary to increase the production of wealth.

Keeping these facts in view it can easily be seen that if a system of taxation is adopted by which certain men will be enabled to take each year a quantity of goods from the common stock without giving anything in return, there will be so much less for division among the workers. This is exactly what takes place under protection. That policy enables favored classes of manufacturers to get not only their fair share of goods, but a large amount over and above the value of those they produce. This it does by increasing the cost of their products, and thus compelling the producers of other kinds of goods to part with more than an equivalent in value. This is in practice the result of tariff taxes which raise prices by shutting out foreign goods.

It should be clear to the workers that when a new man got something for nothing, wages, the share of labor products which goes to labor, will be smaller. No talk of "higher wages through protection" can hide the fact that if a small class of millionaires have made great fortunes out of high tariff protection, these fortunes have come out of the earnings of labor. If workingmen who complain of low wages will grasp this truth the reign of the protected trusts and monopolies will be short.

TWO CUBAN NUISANCES.

Venomous Crawlers that Make Things Unpleasant.

With the coming of the rains in the tropics, many of the insects and smaller reptiles which live out of doors in the dry season seek shelter in the country houses and beneath stacks of cane and trash. While bites and stings from insects are rarely reported, still they are more frequent than one would believe.

Of those which do not often trouble mankind much north of the latitude of

A CUBAN CENTIPED.

Havana are the chigoe, or "jigger," which burrows beneath one's toe-nails and lays eggs which develop festering sores; the scorpion and the centiped. In Cuba the scorpion develops into a pest, especially in the country districts; and, together with the centiped, is a foe with which the Spanish soldiery are compelled to reckon. Both the centiped and scorpion hide beneath rotten wood, the "trash" of the yard and canefield and fallen leaves. The bite of neither is sufficient to cause death in an adult, but many children have been killed by them in every island of the West Indies.

These two are the worst, and it would seem as though they were endowed with almost superhuman instincts, for they appear at times and in places when and where least expected. The centiped moves with the rapidity of a streak of light, leaving behind it—if it traverses the limb or body of a human being—its venomous track punctured in the skin. Its punctures are from the front pair of legs, which have poison ducts or glands; but its bite is worse than these, and sufficient to cause violent fever in a grown person. With its flat, glistening body, its scores of legs twinkling like the mischief, and its rapid motions, it seems the embodiment of evil—as it is.

The island of Cuba is almost as free from poisonous snakes as is Ireland, and the only annoying pests are those mentioned. One might stay in the island for months and years without being bitten, the cities, as Havana and Santiago, not being infested.

Wife of New Japanese Minister Has Discarded Native Dress.

Among the recent additions to diplomatic circles in Washington are Minister Hoshi of Japan and his wife. Mme. Hoshi is about 33 years of age and of the most pleasing personal appearance. She is short, probably 4 feet 10 inches in height. Her dark hair is very abundant, her large brown eyes are soft, yet bright, and her complexion is clear and rosy. In dress, her costume is that of the American woman, yet as she has only recently laid aside her native gowns, her wardrobe of western robes is limited. She has placed herself in the hands of a tutor, in order to master the intricacies of the English language, and by next winter will no doubt be able to preside at a tea in the most approved style, as far as conversational ability is concerned.

Mme. Hoshi has been married ten years, but there is only one child in the family, a boy of 6 years of age. His name is Hoshi Kikaru, and he is a bright little fellow, wandering about the house in evident loneliness for his many playmates in the East. The wife of the minister is a fine musician and devotes much of her time to that art.

Like Begets Like.

Like begets like, and that is the foundation of merit in all breeds. The fact that a breed had fixed characteristics which can be transmitted from generation to generation, enables the farmer who uses pure breeds to improve his animals every year. Even when he has apparently reached perfection the careful selection of the best every year will further increase the productive capacity of the herd.

BEAR AND CAT BATTLE

ENCOUNTER IN THE JUNGLES OF COLORADO.

Experience of a Young Lieutenant While Grubbing for Opals—His Musings Are Suddenly Ended by an Indian in His War Bonnet.

Contest of the Beasts.

Wherever the sun could force his rays between the clefts of the mountain or through the heavy foliage of the forest which skirted the base of the hills he carried conviction to the mind of all who suffered from the heat that the dog days were at hand. Alternately cool in the delightful shade of the trees, with the murmur of the rushing mountain brook to lull one to drowsiness, and hot with the fierce heat as the sun cut his way through, the day was one of oppression mixed with just enough qualification to make the southern trend of the mountains of Colorado the ideal outing spot of the American continent. It would be pleasant under almost any condition, but for the little party encamped in the lower regions of the San Juan country there was little of pleasure. There was too much of duty and possible danger to render anyone oblivious of his business in the world and to aid him in the full enjoyment of the scene.

Away back in the years when the Ute was a troublesome quantity and old Colorow was threatening to exterminate every white man who entered the sacred confines of the reservation a small party of cavalry wearing the uniform and trappings of the regular army went into camp at the foot of the mountains and prepared to head off any outbreak from that direction. The squad—for it was little more—was the advance guard of a force sent out to check an incipient raid. It consisted of parts of two troops of bronzed warriors who had seen considerable service in the Apache country south of the grand canyon. The captain of one troop was in command and he had with him several officers of his own and the other troop. Horses and men were weary with a long ride during the heat of the day over the almost insurmountable passes of the mountains.

As the party approached the spot where the trail crossed the brook a young officer who had been sent forward to select a good place for the camp reported: "Good place here, sir. Plenty of forage and water for the cattle and shade for the men."

"All right, Hunter," was the reply, as Captain Morris swung his horse to the rear. "Halt! Dismount. Gentlemen, we will go into camp here. Hunter, establish the guard lines and see that no man leaves the camp. We are near the reservation and the fellow who strays is liable to get hurt. Pass the word, gentlemen."

Camp Quickly Pitched.

So saying, the captain dismounted, tossed his bridle rein to his orderly and, placing his back against a tree, lazily superintended the job of pitching camp from this coign of vantage. With the celerity of long years of discipline and service, the wilderness became a habitable abode for the detachment in an incredible short time. The corrals were roped off, the horses watered and placed under the charge of a couple of men to graze and the white wall tents of the officers and the walled Sibleys of the men placed in regular form. As is customary in that benighted region of fierce heat and sudden cold, the march came to an end in the early afternoon, while the sun even in the mountains was several hours high. Scouts were sent forward and everything done to prevent the unnoticed approach of white or red man. Supper was cooked and dispatched with the speed and appetite which is engendered in the Alps of America and the camp settled down to the routine of camp duty.

Among the officers was a young man recently joined, who had a taste for mineralogy and metallurgy. He smoked his pipe in quiet for a time and then, having no duty to bother him, strolled toward the guard quarters to chat with Hunter. He cast more than one approving glance at a huge precipice which overhung the gorge where the camp was pitched. Like a mighty cathedral those rocks rose from the green bushes which studded the landscape at their base. Piled up in the confusion of nature they broke into terraces, with here and there a break which let in the light of the setting sun as if some infinite architect had carved windows. Away near the summit the rocks broke and separated into a number of peaks, which seemed like innumerable spires, while at the very apex was a white, smooth peak, on the surface of which seemingly was placed a dark cross. Surrounded as it was with the other magnificent mountains, with the angry brook rushing between and over the trail, the picture was one of grandeur and beauty not to be found surpassed by any land under the heaven's canopy.

Discovers an Opal.

Young Howard walks slowly and musingly toward where Hunter was busily completing his details for the night. He nodded at times and the men respectfully watched the "dreamer," as he was called when he was not in hearing distance. Suddenly he stopped and kicked at a rock at his feet. He turned it over with his boot a couple of times and then stooped to examine it more closely. Then he picked it up and finished his walk without haste or apparent emotion.

"Well, Howard, what did you find? a moonstone?" called Hunter, chaffingly.

"Not exactly," drawled Howard. "It's better than that, unless you have the superstition of your Irish ancestry. It's a fine opal. I imagine a man could pick up some good specimens of turquoise around here if he gave his mind to it. I am half inclined to go out to that cliff and see what I can dig out of it," and he gazed thoughtfully in the direction indicated.

"Stand fast, my boy. You heard the old man say that no one was to pass the lines. It's dangerous, and you take my advice and stay inside."

"This is before the hours of challenge, isn't it?" said Howard.

"We have no such think in the enemies' country," was the blunt reply. "I think it would be well not to go. I don't lay any orders on you, but if you go I would let the old man know whither and would take a rifle."

"Of course. Join me? But then you have that beastly guard duty. Well, so long." So saying, Mr. Howard turned back and sought the commander's tent and preferred his request to go to the cliff to explore for stones. While the two officers were talking of the matter they were joined by Hunter, who made his report and was about to return to quarters, when the captain called after him.

"See any signs of Indians?"

"No, sir, I fancy they are not in our immediate vicinity, but the scouts are well to the front, and if they see anything they are ordered to report at once."

"Right. Well, Mr. Howard, I will not object, but keep this side of the scout lines and don't get out of sight of the camp. If you need anything fire your rifle and we will come to you."

"INJUN KILL," SAID THE BRAVE.

The young man turned and rapidly strode to his tent near by, took down his rifle and swung it over his back, and, then, seizing a small geologist's kit, started out to see what he could find. He was soon deep in the underbrush, which lined the trail and extended some distance on the face of the cliff. He plunged into it and made directly for the cliff, intending to ascend it if possible and take in some of the views from higher altitudes. He had to struggle to get through and changed his course more than once before he struck a spot which promised well for the ascent. He stopped for a moment and wiped the sweat from his forehead before commencing what promised to be a hard climb.

He scanned the flat surface of that cliff for some time before he discovered any foothold. But finally he saw what seemed to be a winding stair cut in the rocks and crossing the cliff from east to west. He commenced the ascent and made very satisfactory progress until he reached a shelf on the rocks nearly fifty feet from the base of the cliff. He rested a moment and looked about for some means of continuing the ascent, but without avail. He sat down on the shelf and ruminated for a time. Just as he was about to descend he observed a fine stone peeping out of its bed in the rock. He instantly got out hammer and chisel and began to dig that stone out. He worked hard and had the jewel loose when he noticed small pieces of stone and quantities of dust were descending on his head.

He was not much of a woodman, but he knew that some cause must have produced that dusty rain. He paused in his work and cast an upward glance of mingled apprehension and reproach and was astonished to see the tawny hide and glittering eyes of a huge catamount crouched above him on another shelf not more than twenty-five feet from where he sat. He was no coward, yet he had never held a private interview with a catamount and experienced no desire to come to close quarters. It was evident the cat was preparing to leap and Howard did some hard thinking. Finally he crouched close to the cliff and signaled the cat to come. The cat did so.

With a snarl and showing of its fearful teeth that cat launched itself downward like a yellow cloud. It missed the shelf because it was too narrow to afford much of a chance in such a leap, but its claws clutched the edge and the animal was in the act of making a desperate and probably successful effort to scramble up to where the young lieutenant was flattened against the cliff. Howard redeemed himself in this juncture by giving the cat a swift kick in the whiskers. This dislodged the angry beast, and, with a howl of rage, it partly twisted itself about and sprang wildly out into space. It cleared the intervening rocks and fell like a wet blanket on the roof of a huge cinnamon bear, which had been sleeping the hot hours away in a clump of bushes at the base of the cliff.

Then the fun commenced. That cinnamon let go his right and that cat was sent sprawling twenty feet. The cat was a fighter and resented the insult by declaring war on the spot. He not only declared, but he prepared to mix with the bear. He sprang at bruin's throat, but the bear ducked skillfully and clawed a handful of wool from the cat's back. The cat made another rush and succeeded this time in fastening his fangs in the bear's shoulders. The bear immediately took a chancery hold and began his famous representation of now to squeeze a fellow to death.

The cat was game, nearly as large as the bear and full of fight, and with a desperate effort he tore himself loose and also made several ragged holes in the bear's fur and hide with the claws with which his hind feet were endowed. Again they came together and Howard, who had been standing in a trance watching the fierce combat, regained his senses long enough to take aim at the battling brutes with his good rifle. He stepped near the edge of the cliff and was about to turn loose with his gun when the sharp report of a rifle above him caused him to lose his balance and he tumbled headlong to join bear and cat.

"Injun" on the Scene.

For a time he thought he had been shot, but as he felt none the worse after the tumble, having dropped into some heavily foliaged bushes, he jumped to his feet and opened fire on the fighters. As he did so the cat sprang into the air and fell with widely sprawling legs at quite a distance, and then lay still after clawing up all the bushes near it, while the bear spun around and around as if chasing its own tail. Howard knelt and sent in another shot, as there was an echo from up the cliff. This time the bear slowly straightened and with several bullets in his body yielded up the ghost. Howard started to examine the quarries when he was astounded to see an Indian in a mongrel costume of cavalry trousers, leather shirt and war bonnet of eagle feathers rapidly rush down the cliff and claim everything in sight.

"Injun kill," said the brave, with a sweep of his arm.

"Injun did nothing of the sort," was the retort as Howard pushed a lot of cartridges into the magazine of his rifle. "Soldier kill and soldier will just boss the job, if it's all the same to you, my buck."

The "injun" showed a desire to mix war medicine, and it is doubtful what the result would have been but for the timely arrival of Captain Morris and a squad of troopers on the run. The captain took in the situation at a glance and ordered the Indian arrested for shooting off of the reservation, loaded the bear and cat on the men and lead the way back to camp. He also called in the scouts and gave them a good rawhiding. As a conclusion to his monologue he remarked: "If it had not been for the recklessness of this young fellow I would not have known that there was a Ute in Colorado, excepting by consulting the war maps and geography. Get away with you and see if you can redeem yourselves. Gentlemen, hereafter orders not to leave camp apply to officers as well as men."

Great Men at Play.

The big men of England, knowing that "All work and no play makes Jack a dull boy," seek their recreation in something that takes them entirely out of official business. Says a writer in Cassell's Family Magazine:

Lord Salisbury might have become as eminent a scientist as he is a statesman. His laboratory and chemical apparatus at Hatfield are a sight worth seeing, and his knowledge of his subject a thing even more worth having. One of his fellow-ministers of the Cabinet is reported to have suggested, in a weak moment, that his Lordship's grasp of foreign policy might be due to his keen eye for foreign bodies in a test-tube.

Mr. Joseph Chamberlain, like a well-trained maid, does many little things. He grows that most alluring of all flowers, the orchid. He has been known to do some gardening on his own account in the undignified condition of uprolled shirt sleeves.

Considerable paragraphs have been perpetrated concerning Mr. Gladstone's skill with the woodman's ax, but the pastime nearer to his heart is the intimate study of Horace—whose immortal odes he has translated into graceful English verse—and of Homer, upon whose sounding lines he is an acknowledged authority.

How very different is the private life of his contemporary, the rugged Bismarck! During his youth the German was passionately fond of duelling. An authority states that twenty-seven duels in which he took an active part are on record. When surfeited of duelling he turned to practical jokes, and was dubbed "Mad Bismarck." His retirement, it is now asserted, is relieved be never-ending cigars and light beer, with the novels of Du Boisgobey thrown in as a solid.

Among the athletic members of Parliament, Sir Edward Grey claims rightly a high place. One need not look back far to find him holding the amateur tennis championship—an honor which represents not merely a figure of speech, but physical prowess of an exceptional order, cool judgment, a keen eye and great endurance.

Dogs Almost Cause a War.

Dogs and diplomacy do not seem to harmonize. The Italian agent at Sofia took a walk with his dog one evening recently, and whistled for him. He was at once arrested by the police, taken to the station house, and detained for nearly an hour, till he was able to prove who he was. Bulgaria has had to apologize for this. Almost at the same time Spain was begging the pardon of the Russian Legation at Madrid for a similar act. Baron Wrangel, First Secretary of the Legation, had strolled out with an unmuzzled lapdog in his arms, when the police, to enforce the city ordinance against unmuzzled dogs, fell upon him and tore the dog away by force, scratching and bruising the Secretary

IF SILVER WINS and if farm produce, labor and labor products double in price, then metals must also double in price, as they are 95% labor. If labor doubles in cost and the product of the mine doubles in cost, Aermotors, Pumps, Spiral Pipe, Fittings, Cylinders, Tanks and Substructures, being the product of the mine and labor, must also double in cost and price; therefore, your $1 now will buy as much as 2 of the same dollars if silver wins, or if people think it will win. IT IS 2 TO 1 in favor of buying now. The advance may come in a month or in a week. Aermotor prices will not advance unless compelled by an advance in labor and material. Our prices on Brass Cylinders are 40% below anything ever quoted, and our other goods are as low as they can be produced, even with our splendid facilities. Children Cry for Pitcher's Castoria.

Scenes at Niagara.

As so many of our people go on excursions to Niagara Falls, it will be valuable to them to read up on that locality. There are some things they will miss seeing if their attention is not called to them. Wm. E. Curtis in a letter to the Chicago Record, writes:

The electric railroads have added a great deal to the pleasure of tourists visiting Niagara, for they have extended the views of the falls and the rapids on both sides. On the Canadian shore you can take a swift-running open car and ride upon the brink of the chasm from Chippewa creek, which is a mile or so beyond the point where the rapids begin above the falls, to Queenston, a sleepy little town that stands at the head of still water, seven or eight miles below the whirlpool. It is a delightful ride, and gives one a continuous panorama of the scenery on the American side It carries you by the monument which loyal Canadians have erected to the glory of the British empire and the honor of Gen. Brock, who command the British troops in Canada West during the war of 1812.

As we were passing the monument I asked the motorman who Gen. Brock was.

"He licked the Yankees in 1812,' was the reply, as he turned about and grinned.

"Where?"

"Darned if I know, but they say he licked 'em."

An even more enjoyable trolley ride, and that which offers the most tumultuous scenery in all the world, is over the track that has recently been laid at the edge of the river, at the bottom of the gorge, on the American side. It starts at the soldiers' monument in Niagara City, and carries you to Lewiston, where you can connect with the Toronto boat, three times a day. Nearly all the distance you are almost within arm's length of the furious, foaming stream, and occasionally catch a little splashing. It gives a perfect and continuous view of the river from the foot of the falls to the head of navigation—something the public has never enjoyed until the present summer.

Then there is a lovely trolley ride to Buffalo, also, which requires an hour and a quarter and gives you a glimpse of Tonawanda, the largest lumber market in the states, and the village of LaSalle, where that intrepid voyager built his boats.

The old suspension bridge is to be removed and a modern structure, with an arch of steel, that will be twice as large, substituted. The workmen are already putting in the foundations for the piers. It was the eighth wonder of the world when it was erected forty years ago, and the most advanced example of engineering science that then existed. Its picture shares the glory of the cataract in the geographies of all languages and engravings hung on the walls of almost every city of the world. But in comparison with other structures of the kind that have since been erected it is commonplace and no longer attracts attention except as an example of ancient engineering.

Down below the monument to Gen. Brock, at the end of the gorge near Lewiston, she ruins of the first bridge that was erected over the Niagara river still hang in the air. It was built by a Canadian company in 1848, and stood until the winter of 1863, when an ice-gorge carried away the guy-chains that were fastened in the rocks at the river's brink, and a fearful storm of wind that followed soon after carried the roadway off on its wings and wrecked the bridge to such an extent that no attempt was ever made to repair it. The cables from which it was suspended remain, and portions of the timber work still hang to them, having survived the gales of thirty-three winters, although for a quarter of a century they have looked just as if they were sure to fall any minute, and thousands of people have stood upon the banks to see them go down. The people of Niagara ought to be public-spirited enough to take the ruin down, although, as the car conductor observed, it gives strangers something to talk about.

The whirlpool has received a contribution that does not add to its beauty or grandeur, and there is no telling when it can get rid of it. Some thoughtless person above the falls threw into the river a lot of waste timber, which floated down and of course lodged at the most impressive portion of the rapids. The people who live here say that it may remain here for a lifetime to deface the spectacle. One hears many strange stories of the tenacity with which the whirlpool clings to some of the objects that come within its grasp. An old gentleman who has lived at the falls for sixty years told me that when he was a boy a big hemlock log got caught it its clutches, having come over the falls, and actually remained there, swimming round and round incessantly, and growing smaller and smaller by contact with the force of the water, until it was finally worn out. It lasted more than twenty years. Another gentleman told me of a barrel that was thrown over the falls and rode about the surface of the eddies for more than a quarter of a century, when, somehow, striking another solid object, it went to pieces and was released from the water's grasp. Most of the objects that go over the cataract whirl around a few times and then get into the current and ride away on the foam. But others never seem to get started right and are doomed to remain in the swim.

A large wire cable is suspended across the river between the old suspension bridge and the Canada Southern cantilever, which has bags of sand hanging from it like a fringe. It was erected some time ago by a photographer of Toronto, who walked across as Blodin did and carried out a chair and a table and ate his supper poised upon a three quarter inch cable. His name was Dickson, and the strange thing in the story is that he had never attempted such a feat before. Two years ago he got a notion that he would like to be a tight rope performer and strung up a clothes line in his back yard to practice on. He became quite proficient, and the neighbors were immensely entertained by his performances Then he decided to make an attempt to walk across Niagara river. His friends tried to dissuade him, but the more they talked the more determined he became, and he invested all his capital in a cable which was placed from bank to bank by the very men who fastened Blondin's wire twenty-five years ago.

Dickson must have steel nerves, for although he he had never tried a high elevation, and had never walked above the water, or in any other peril, except that of falling, he started out over the foaming rapids without a quiver. The feat was successfully performed, and repeated a few weeks afterward, but when he tried to walk a cable over Genesee falls at Rochester, he got rattled in some way and fell, breaking two or three bones and bruising himself frightfully. He has been confined to his bed ever since, and probably will stick to photography hereafter.

Scott's Emulsion

of Cod-liver Oil with Hypophosphites, can be taken as easily in summer as in winter. Unlike the plain oil it is palatable, and the hypophosphites that are in it aid in digestion and at the same time tone up the system.

For sickly, delicate children, and for those whose lungs are affected, it is a mistake to leave it off in the summer months. The dose may be reduced if necessary.

We recommend the small size especially for summer use, and for children, where a smaller dose is required. It should be kept in a cool place after it is once opened.

Mrs. Webster.

Saturday's Daily,

The report of Mrs. Webster's death that spread over town yesterday was incorrect. This morning we talked with D. B. Bordner who lives only a a mile or two from Webster's and he says she is improving and that it is the opinion of the doctors that she will recover unless blood poisoning should set in. They hope to prevent this although this very hot weather is unfavorable.

Obituary

—George W. Olinger son of Daniel, and Elizabeth Burkett Olinger, was born in Washington county Maryland, January 12, 1811, departed this life August 4th 1896, aged 85 years, 6 month and 22 days. He came from Washington county Maryland to Stark county Ohio, in 1833, was married March 28, 1838, to Barbara Loutzenhouser. To them were born eight children: two sons and one daughter died several years ago, the surviving members of the family are an aged widow, four sons and one daughter. In 1846 the deceased moved his family to Seneca county Ohio, where they lived fifteen years, leaving there to come to DeKalb county, Ind., in 1861 to occupy the farm that was his home until his death. In earlier days the deceased was a member of the German Reformed church in Canton Ohio. The funeral services was conducted from the home three quarters of a mile south of the Rakestraw school house, 2 miles west of Auburn, Thursday Aug. 6, 2:00 p. m. Interment took place in Evergreen cemetery. Rev. J. D. Brosy officiating.

Obituary.

Lilly May Mackey, (Eva Marie Caldwell) was born near Cedar Beach Kosciusko county, Ind., Oct. 12, 1890 and departed this life Aug. 5th 1896. Aged 5 years, 8 months and 2 days. Her father died when she was 7 months old, leaving the mother with a large family to support. Being unable to support them, she was persuaded by friends to place little Marie in the tender care of Mr. and Mrs. Caldwell. She was brought to their home while living in Ligonier March 25, 1892, with whom she has since lived. Mr. and Mrs. Caldwell loved her with all the fondness of their hearts She was the joy and pride of their life, and her childish voice formed the music of the home. But, the little flower that bloomed so brightly, has faded and died. Two years ago, when Mr. and Mrs. Caldwell came to Auburn, little Marie became a member of the infant class in the Lutheran sunday school of which she was a bright and faithful little member. Last sabbath Aug 2 was the last time that she was at sabbath school. Her bright face and sparkling eyes, will be missed by all, her little feet will no longer step to the march of the organ in the Sunday school below, but will press the golden streets above. She was Jesus' little lamb, and He took her to His higher fold on high. Jesus loves the children and He takes them to Himself. Mr. and Mrs. Caldwell are worthy people and have the heart felt sympathies of the people of Auburn, in their sore bereavement. A short service was held at the house Wednesday evening at 8 o'clock, and about 11:30 the family accompanied by friends left for Waterloo, to take the train for Ligonier, where the funeral services were held and interment took place. J. D. Brosy conducted the services at the house.

JEWISH COLONIES.

Prosperous Condition of the Settlements Founded in the Holy Land.

The present condition of the various Jewish colonies established in the holy land through the benevolence of societies and private individuals belonging to the Jewish faith in Europe is described in the last report of the British consul at Jerusalem, says the London Times. It appears that, although not altogether self-supporting, they are increasing in size, are ably managed and give occupation to numerous Jewish immigrant families who would otherwise be destitute. The apparent disinclination of the race to adopt agriculture has hitherto been a hindrance to the establishment and extension of these colonies unless encouraged by external support, but Mr. Dickman thinks that time and proper training will do much to remove this inherent prejudice. The work is carried out in these colonies in accordance with the latest improvements adopted in Europe, so that they have become model farms to the surrounding peasantry, and will no doubt in course of years produce a beneficial effect on the rural population of Palestine. Rich-on-le-Sion, which is the largest colony in Palestine, is occupied almost exclusively with the cultivation of the vine and the making of wine. Large wine vaults have lately been introduced, and are being cultivated in the colony. The wine made is of very fair quality, but a superior quality will be produced as more attention is devoted to its manufacture. A steam factory for making casks, for driving machinery for irrigation and for the manufacture of ice and of glass bottles is now in working order in connection with the manufacture of wine. In the other colonies, such as Ekron and Petah-Tekwah, more attention is given to the cultivation of fruit trees of various kinds and the growing of crops, and large tracts of land which were formerly either marshes or waste have been reclaimed and are now productive. A fair training in agriculture is afforded to Jewish youths by the agricultural schools near Jaffa, called Mikweh Israel, where a considerable number of pupils are boarded free of expense and are instructed in all the elementary branches of education. Farther north, on the slopes of Carmel, in an elevated and healthy location, the large Jewish colony of Zammarin is located. Of late years it has became populous and flourishing, and provides a means of livelihood to many of the Jews who have settled in the vicinity of Safed and Tiberias. Other Jewish colonies have been established in Palestine, but those here mentioned have been the most successful.

CHESS ON TRAINS.

A Simple and Convenient Little Contrivance for the Game.

Chess is the latest game the commuter has levied upon to beguile the hours spent upon the train morning and evening, which he tells his friends are but fifteen-minute trips, says the New York Journal.

At first glance it would appear that a chessboard and chessmen would be difficult to manipulate aboard even so slowly moving trains as the average commutation vehicles. But Yankee ingenuity has brought out a simple and convenient little contrivance that does away with the necessity for a double seat. Two people may sit side by side and play without attracting any more attention than if reading a book. The commuter's chessboard when folded looks like a thin memorandum book about six inches long and three inches wide. It may be easily carried in the pocket. It consists of one stiff pasteboard side covered with thin Russia leather and a leather flap which when opened discloses a miniature chessboard, marked out with strips of thin leather so sewed as to leave slits over each square. The strips across both top and bottom serve to hold the men when not in use or when removed in play.

The chessmen are flat strips of celluloid about half an inch long and one-fourth of an inch wide. These celluloid strips fit into the slits above the squares and are easily moved. The board is held upright in the hand, so that both players may study it.

Finds in Athens.

The work of restoring the Stadion in marble has been resumed, and the temporary seats constructed for the olympic games are being removed. It appears that M. Averoff is prepared to furnish the large sum requisite for complete restoration. The arena will be excavated, and it is expected that many valuable remnants of the ancient structure will be brought to light. The excavations which are being carried out in Melos by the British School of Archaeology have resulted in some interesting discoveries. Among these are a drafted life-size statue of a priest of Dionysus, of which the head and left hand are missing, and the colossal statue, perhaps of Apollo, of which the head and limbs are missing, but a portion of the right leg and foot has been recovered. Four draped torsos of the Roman period have also been found, one probably being the statue of Agrippina. A Roman mosaic floor has been laid bare, and some thirty inscriptions have been discovered, most of them being in the peculiar Melian character.—Correspondence of the Boston Times.

Give Us Facts.

The Butler Record publishes the price of wool for two separate years only, 1892 and 1896. Now what we need in the way of valuable information, is the average price of wool for each year, beginning with 1883. Nothing can be fairer than this, to all parties. Who will furnish a correct statement? A similar price list for wheat, corn, oats, hogs and cattle would be valuable. It should be nonpartison, with only one object in view, to give the people the actual prices for each year named.

Nervous Prostration

Cured by Dr. Miles' Nervine.

Prolonged derangement of the nervous system not only affects the brain and mental powers, but develops disease in some of the vital organs. The most dangerous of these indirect results is when the heart is affected. This was the case of the Rev. N. F. Surface, Fawn River, Mich., who writes under date of Feb. 14, 1895:

"Fourteen years ago I had a slight stroke of paralysis. Overwork brought on nervous prostration. I was exceedingly nervous and the exertion of public speaking caused heart palpitation that threatened my life. I used two bottles of Dr. Miles' New Heart Cure for my heart trouble, and two of Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine for my nervousness and feel better than I ever expected to feel again. I can speak for hours without tiring or having my heart flutter as it formerly did, and I have you to thank that I am alive today."

You Can Depend on It

That Foley's Colic and Diarrhœa Cure is an instant relief for colic, summer complaint, cholera morbus, diarrhœa, bloody flux, chronic diarrhœa, cholera infantum, bilious colic, painters' colic, and all bowel complaints. 25c and 50c. Robbins & McCord. 35

Nine Epidemics

Since 1878 there have been nine epidemics of dysentery in different parts of the country in which Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhœa Remedy was used with perfect success. Dysentery, when epidemic, is almost as severe and dangerous as Asiatic cholera. Heretofore the best efforts of the most skilled physicians have failed to check its ravages, this remedy, however, has cured the most malignant cases, both of children and adults, and under the most trying conditions, which proves it to be the best medicine in the world for bowel complaints. For sale by Davenport, the druggist. 35

Cure a Flux.

My little boy when two years of age, was taken very ill with bloody flux. I was advised to use Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhœa Remedy, and luckily procured part of a bottle. I carefully read the directions and gave it accordingly. He was very low, but slowly and surely he began to improve, gradually recovered, and is now as stout and strong as ever. I feel sure it saved his life. I never can praise the Remedy half its worth. I am sorry every one in the world does not know how good it is, as I do.--Mrs. Lina S. Hinton, Grahamsville, Marion Co., Florida. For sale by Davenport, the druggist. 35

A Scene in Persia.

The Yearly Drama is Enacted in Streets of Tabriz.

For many days the streets have been filled with confusing sounds, not the ordinary sounds of donkeys, horses, camels, drivers, merchants, peddlers, etc., but the sound of companies calling out "Oh, Truth!" or the name of some "emum" or one Mohammed's descendants. At night the din and noises were almost deafening, for from every quarter of the city came the doleful beat of the drum and the still more mournful music of the flute. In all quarters, companies of old men, young men. rich men, poor men and even boys down to toddlers scarcely able to keep along. In the afternoon shops were closed and priests stood on the street corners while crowds gathered around to listen to the Koran and to the tales of Ali and his sons, Hassan and Houssain.

This is the month of mourning and all the women wear black; the men also wear black and many go with bared breasts.

The sounds and disorder increase until the eighth day of the month, and on that night the noises reached the climax.

The next day, our Sabbath, was more quiet because people were preparing for the final effort on Monday, or the tenth of their month, though there were some companies marching about. Sunday night the men went to the mosques where they had their heads shaved, said their prayers, drank tea, smoked the "galion" and listened to the thrilling story of Ali and his sons, and wailed and wept at passages dwelling on the death of Hassan and Houssain. Led on by frenzy and religious fervor, the men are prepared for the awful play of the tenth day.

Early in the morning our servants told us if we wished to see we must be ready to go on the roof early. As this this is the writer's first summer in Tabriz she wished to see what was being done in the streets.

No tongue can describe what greeted our eyes. Men were lined up on one side of the street with leaders on the opposite side. Each man held in his right hand a club or a large knife like a saber, to his left hand he was holding to his neighbor's girdle. All were marching thus side wise in time with the awful dirgelike music of drum and fife, and yelling "shock say," "Hassan, Houssain" and various other cries."

Heads were all bared, exposed to the fierce rays of the almost tropical sun, except for the one tuft of hair left on crown of the head. Each man wore a white muslin shirt all stained from the blood of his dripping head, bleeding from the cuts he made as he marched along cutting the head with the large knife.

Of course, there may have been bogus cases, and the wounds may not always have been bad, but the sight was sickening to see hundreds of men with bloodied shirts and bleeding heads and know that this is suffered in the name of a religion that pretends to worship God—"There is no God but God, and Mohammed is his Prophet."

Next came men all dressed in black, their heads tied up in black after Arabic fashion, for they represent Arabs, their breast bare or their backs, and with clubs of chains made after the fashion of our wire dish cloths, beating their backs and chests. There would be with these, children with heads bared and in some instances cut and bleeding.

The awful sounds, the terrible looks on the faces of the men as they would wail or chant in passing, and their flags of hues to suit their own dress, made one think of nothing else than a panorama of Dante's Inferno passing in the streets, and methought, It is the procession of the lost souls of these people marching into hell.

With a shudder I recalled myself, and thought, No, not yet, for there is a day of salvation for even these people, but only can God, who is king of kings and lord of lords, bring such a mass of sin-steeped humanity back to Himself.

This practice is really a new one and and it is said that Tabriz is the seat of the greatest fanaticism on this line This practice only belongs to the Persian moslems ond various reasons are given for its practice.

Some think that they have the idea of atonement being necessary for sin. They know they are sinful and think to work out their own salvation by such mortification of flesh, while their hearts remain as wicked and lives as sinful as before.

Christ died for the sins of the whole world and we pray for the hastening of the day when these shall see that man can not save himself, but will accept the plan of redemption already offered, and come to Him.

MAY WALLACE.

Sad Sights.

Mrs. Harter had a terrible experience on her trip home from Auburn to Goshen last week. She has written to friends here and added to what we know she saw as she left here, it makes a chapter of unpleasant memories. As will be remembered, she was in the caboose at the station here when little Marie Caldwell was thrown under the wheels and her life crushed out. Shortly after this the train pulled out, and at the close of the five-mile ride she alighted at Waterloo to wait for the west passenger, then soon due. While waiting there she noticed a lady with a little child. The child attracted her attention by its looks and actions and Mrs. Harter asked the mother what was the matter. The mother said she did not know as anything ailed it, but on looking at it became frightened. Mrs. Harter told her she thought the child was dying, and the little thing lived but a few moments. She consoled the heart-broken mother as well as she could, and the train coming soon after, she resumed her journey. Fourteen miles brought her to Kendallville and as the train stood waiting at the station there, an old man came running up evidently to take the train, when he stumbled and struck his head against a car wheel with such force as to kill him. We can imagine the shock all these dreadful accidents, happening so close together must have given her, as her health is none the best. It is said she was nearly prostrated on her arrival at her home in Goshen.

Suprised

Levi McBride, over at Butler was completely surprised Saturday by a sudden call from his children and other relatives. It was his 64th birthday, and they took this way to remind him of it. His daughters, Mrs. Geo. Grund Mrs. Frank Rush, his son, Mr. Curtis McBride, and the entire families went, together with the families of his brothers-in-law E. T. and Joseph Cochran of this place. They went over on the early morning train and at Butler were met by two families of relatives from Bryan, two families from Montpelier and one from Mark Center. All met at about 10 a. m. and went over to Wm. McBride's residence. He was all taken aback to see forty-four people, including children, grandchildren and other relatives march in quietly on him. Of course Mrs. Mrs. McBride had been let into the secret. But they had a most enjoyable meeting including a grand dinner. Then there were presents of a suitable character including a fine upholstered easy chair for Mr. McBride. And when all returned to their homes it was with many happy memories of a pleasant gathering.

Your Boy Wont Live a Month.

So Mr Gilman Brown, of 34 Mill St. South Gardner, Mass; was told by the doctors His son had lung trouble, following Typhoid Malaria, and he spent three hundred and seventy five dollars with doctors, who finally gave him up saying: "Your boy wont live a month." He tried Dr King's New Discovery and a few bottles restored him to health and enabled him to go to work a perfect well man. He says he owes his present good health to use of Dr King's New Discovery, and knows it to be the best in the world for Lung trouble. Trial Bottles Free at Robbins&McCord's Drug Store.

Made Him Pay.

Business is business. To be quick in coming to the point, a man came into the Home Restaurant to-day and made a good square meal, so square a meal, that when he arose he was no longer square but very much round. He then calmly took his hat, watched his chance and sneaked out, without as much as "thank you." This interesting ending was noticed by the proprietor, Miles Baxter, and his "first man" Ed. Shilling. They at once "came to the front" and followed the great "evader" down the street soon over took him and after a brief seance he disgorged the necessary quarter. And "he never came back."

Still Here

J. F. Groves, of St. John was here to-day, and called at the jail to see young Funk, the man he arrested a week or two ago, and brought to town. Dell Funk and another young man named Kaney had been to town and while here bought a revolver, and loaded up on whisky. They drove down south of Wigent's and found four young men talking in the road. Two of them, one a son of Milt Clark and Floyd Depew were filling a tank with water for the threshers, and two others, Frank Pence and a young man named Ballentine, were talking with them. Kaney and Pence began talking, when Funk, who seemed pretty drunk, jumped out and drew his revolver and threatened to shoot Pence. He was got rid of some way but Pence swore out a warrant for Funk's arrest, Groves being a deputy made the arrest. He found Funk suffering from a bad wound in the hand. It seems that in a few minutes after leaving the young men he had the trouble with, that he somehow managed to discharge his revolver in such a way the load went through his hand. He was probably too drunk to handle it properly. Groves took him before 'Squire Noel, and he was bound over to court. But not being able to give bail, Groves brought him to Auburn and turned him over to the Sheriff. He is still here, and Groves says he seems quite repentant and declares he will not fool with whisky or revolvers again.

The Otis Wreck.

More details of the wreck on the the Lake Shore in the Goshen Daily Times of yesterday. It appears that it happened at the high embankment near Otis. Other trains had passed over it within a few hours, but as often has happened in that section of the country, the continued heavy rains had so fully soaked the embankment that it was no better than a mass of slush and the least jar would start it to moving. Probably it was in just that condition when the jar of the approaching train started it, and though the engineer saw the track apparently sound and safe, the first impression the engine made was to set it to sliding. The engine and the mail cars in this way, passed clear over, and the sudden giving way let the other cars in. But the loss of life was on the engine, which turned clear over after crossing the break.

Free Pills.

Send your address to H. E. Bucklen & Co., Chicago, and get a free sample of Dr. King's New Life pills. A trial will convince you of their merits. These pills are easy in action and are particularly effective in the cure of consumption and sick headache. For Malaria and liver troubles they have been proved invaluable. They are guaranted to be perfectly free from every deleterious substance and to be purely vegetable. They do not weaken by their action, but by giving tone to stomach and bowels greatly invigorate the system. Regular size 25c per box. Sold at Robbins & McCord's drug store. 1

for Infants and Children.

MOTHERS, Do You Know that Paregoric, Bateman's Drops, Godfrey's Cordial, many so-called Soothing Syrups, and most remedies for children are composed of opium or morphine?

Do You Know that opium and morphine are stupefying narcotic poisons?

Do You Know that in most countries druggists are not permitted to sell narcotics without labeling them poisons?

Do You Know that you should not permit any medicine to be given your child unless you or your physician know of what it is composed?

Do You Know that Castoria is a purely vegetable preparation, and that a list of its ingredients is published with every bottle?

Do You Know that Castoria is the prescription of the famous Dr. Samuel Pitcher. That it has been in use for nearly thirty years, and that more Castoria is now sold than of all other remedies for children combined?

Do You Know that the Patent Office Department of the United States, and of other countries, have issued exclusive right to Dr. Pitcher and his assigns to use the word "Castoria" and its formula, and that to imitate them is a state prison offense?

Do You Know that one of the reasons for granting this government protection was because Castoria had been proven to be absolutely harmless?

Do You Know that 35 average doses of Castoria are furnished for 35 cents, or one cent a dose?

Do You Know that when possessed of this perfect preparation, your children may be kept well, and that you may have unbroken rest?

Well, these things are worth knowing. They are facts.

A Lake Shore Train Plunged Into a Ditch—Engineer James Griffin and Fireman Roach Went Down to Death

A passenger train on the Lake Shore Railway was wrecked near Otis, Ind., by the washing away of a culvert. The engineer and fireman were killed, but the passengers almost miraculously escaped fatal injury. The train consisted of three passenger coaches and two mail cars. An hour and ten minutes before a freight train had safely passed over the point where the accident occurred. The theory of the railroad officials is that a cloudburst washed out the culvert. Their idea seemed to be verified by the fact that the Louisville, New Albany and Chicago Railway, which has its tracks only a mile distant from the point of the accident had trouble in the operation of its trains during the morning. There was nothing to warn the engineer of danger. The supports of the culvert had been weakened, but the rails were in place. When the train reached the fatal pitfall the engine plunged downward with terrific force.

SHOCKING SUICIDE.

John Koseak Burrows Into a Straw Stack and Applies a Match to the Straw.

Beatrice (Neb.) special: John Koseak, a prominent farmer, aged 25, living near Virginia, committed suicide. He burrowed into the center of a straw stack and set fire to the straw and then shot himself through the head with a revolver. The Coroner was summoned to the scene. A brother of the deceased states that his brother has been keeping company with Miss Hubka and was last seen at her house. When he left he gave the girl a letter. What it contained has not yet been made public, but soon after she read it she summoned her brothers and they went in search of him, and soon after found the straw stack in a blaze and heard the report of the revolver that ended his existence. The body was burned to an unrecognizable mass.

Another Wreck at Jersey City.

Jersey City special: A New York, Susquehanna and Western passenger train crashed into a Pennsylvania Railroad locomotive which was going backwards and drawing an empty C. & O. train to the yards on the elevated tracks at Henderson street and Railroad avenue. Both locomotives, a passenger and a dining car were wrecked. Engineer John Shay of the Susquehanna train, was badly cut on the head, and other employes were slightly injured. Conductor John Baxter had a narrow escape and Engineer Albert Chapman and Fireman John Patterson of the Pennsylvania locomotive, escaped injury. The signal towerman is blamed.

Big Steamers Sunk.

The large first-class freight steamers William Chisim, and the Oceanic, met in collision in the Detroit River at Detroit. The former was inbound and the latter had cleared for Cleveland and Buffalo. Both steamers were crushed in below the water line and both sank in the river. With their cargos they will be a total loss. It is impossible to learn by what error of judgment the boats got together. It is reported that some lives were lost, but no details can be learned at this hour.

Dynamiters to Be Set at Liberty.

London special: In the House of Commons Sir Matthew White Ridley, Home Secretary, stated that as the result of a medical examination of the prisoners, the home office had ordered the release of the dynamiters, Daly, Gallagher, Whitehead and Devany, now undergoing life sentence in English prisons. The prisoners, he said, would be set at liberty as soon as the doctors advised such action.

Slept on Duty and Died.

While guarding an open switch on the Northern Ohio Railroad at Vaughnsville, Ohio, James Gardner was killed by a passing train. It is thought he must have fallen asleep while on duty, and perhaps lain down on the track. He was about 30 years old and unmarried.

Buggy Plant Burned.

About a third of the Michigan Buggy Company at Kalamazoo, Mich., was destroyed by fire. The loss is estimated at $65,000. Insurance, $40,000.

Destroyed by Lightning.

During a storm in St. Joseph County, Indiana, the barn of Wm. O. Jackson was struck by lightning and burned to the ground.

Mangled His Child.

The 3-year-old son of Charles Fairbanks, a farmer living near Bettsville, Ohio, wandered in the tall weeds in front of the mower when Mr. Fairbanks was cutting millet on his farm, and before the father noticed the child the mower had cut off both its feet.

A Toledo Hero.

Lena Gurley, aged 12 years, went out of her depth while bathing at Toledo. George Danterman, a prominent merchant, tried to save her and both were drowned. Danterman left seven orphans.

Failure of a Shoe House.

E. S. Sanborn & Co., of Lynn, Mass., manufacturers of ladies' shoes, have failed. The firm is rated at $150,000. The liabilities are placed at $75,000; assets at between $50,000 and $60,000. The Boston banks are the principal creditors. Slow collections is the cause.

Claud Hoover Hanged at Omaha.

Claud Hoover was hanged at Omaha, Neb., Friday morning in the presence of a small number of persons. Hoover expressed repentance. Last fall Hoover killed his brother-in-law. Hoover was drunk and the shooting was the result of some fancied wrong.

MAKING AN ISSUE.

Democrats Issue a Document on the "Business Men's Campaign."

A Washington correspondent says that political affairs are quiet at the several headquarters. The weather seems to affect even the politicians. At Republican headquarters letters from Kansas, Iowa and Missouri all spoke of improvement in the political outlook and said that all that was needed at this time was great quantities of financial literature. The Democratic congressional compaign committee has issued a document on the "Business Men's Campaign." It says that the Republicans propose such a campaign and that the Democracy accepts the issue. The document first quotes Mr. Bryan's declaration that the farmer or the hired employe is as much a business man as the banker or the big merchant. It then gives a list of the number of persons employed in fourteen gainful pursuits, including agriculture, mining, manufacturing, transportation, the purpose being to show the comparatively small percentage comprised under the head of bankers, brokers and wholesalers. The document comments on these figures, winding up with the assertion that from the Republican standpoint only the few bankers, brokers, wholesalers and corporation officers are business men, while from the Democratic standpoint the millions of farmers, producers and laborers of all classes are as much business men as the few who live, thrive and grow rich by trading in the products of labor.

DYING BY SCORES.

New York Experiences the Worst Scourge of Heat in Her History.

Monday was another scorching day, and 188 people were killed by the heat in Greater New York and in the dense New Jersey population that borders on the west shore of the North river. This terrible mortality was not entirely due to the heat of the day. It was due to the terrific heat that had scourged that vicinity for six days, and which seemed to culminate in all its fury Monday. The death list for New York city alone aggregated eighty-two, and it is certain that all the names were not reported to the authorities. Gangs of men went through the East Side at night opening every hydrant. From Houston to Division street, east of the Bowery, every street was filled with running water. Half-naked men and women plunged into the hydrant streams. Children lay in the water in the gutters. The official heat record was 91 degrees, with 65 percentage of humidity. It is the most fearful scourge of weather that ever came upon New York. There was no relief in any part of the country. At Chicago, 60 deaths were directly traceable to the heat, which registered 98 degrees. There is a singular lack of fatal prostration in the Southern cities.

BRITONS LEASE THE ROAD.

English Syndicate Gets the Tehuantepec Isthmus Railway of Mexico.

An English syndicate, at the head of which is Sir Whetman Pearson, member of parliament for Colchester, has just concluded a lease with the Mexican Government of the Tehauntepec Isthmus Railway. The terms of the lease include an agreement on the part of the syndicate to finish works already well advanced for the improvement of the narbor of Coatzacoa Lieoz, at the Atlantic terminus of the road, and to construct the harbor works at Salina Cruez, the Pacific terminus, which were included in the original plans, but which the Mexican Government has been so far unable to execute. The road itself will be greatly improved and put in the condition of a first-class line. A line of ships, plying between Salina Cruez and San Francisco, will be put on to deliver freight to the many lines plying in the Gulf of Mexico. A determined effort will be made to secure the freight and low-priced passenger traffic of San Francisco. On the other side of the isthmus it is expected to get the bulk of the European fine freight, such as dry goods, which now comes by steamship to New Orleans and by rail to San Francisco.

Wheat Displacing Rye.

Thomas Ewing Moore, commercial agent at Weimar, Germany, has forwarded to the Department of State a report on the consumption of wheat and rye flour in that country. Since 1879, he says, the consumption of rye bread has steadily decreased and wheat bread shows a more than proportional advance. As the United States exports large quantities of wheat and wheat flour to Germany, Mr. Moore says, this is of great importance. The year 1895 was remarkable for an extraordinarily large consumption of both breadstuffs. Of wheat there was used 278 pounds per capita and of rye 151 pounds per capita. This was owing to large supply and small prices. Last year rye sold for $28.50 per 1,000 kilos and wheat $33.91 for the same quantity. The prices of wheat and rye flour per 220.46 pounds in that year were: Wheat flour, $5.17; rye, $3.98. The flour imports have steadily increased since 1890 with the exception of 1895, when they were slightly lower than the previous year. The imports are still largely in excess of the exports. The imports last year were 32,537 tons, of the value of $1,475,600. The United States furnished but 3,910 tons, a comparatively small quantity, and takes third place among the countries exporting grain to Germany, the Russian commercial treaty giving that country a great advantage. American flour is more expensive than any other kind, and this fact accounts for small imports of that article. Advantage should be taken by the American farmer and exporter, says Mr. Moore, of the growing demand for these articles in Germany.

Rain Closes a Day of Death.

Following is Tuesday's record of deaths from heat, at cities suffering most severely:

	Deaths.	Prostrations
New York and suburbs	164	550
Brooklyn	20	63
Philadelphia	7	40
Jersey City	12	28
Boston	11	50
Chicago	17	65

Then at Chicago came the deluge. Black cloud embankments were wreathed and riven by electric garlands and hissing lightning bolts. The thunders rolled and roared and burned, ripped and rattled and crashed, deep reverberations mingling with ear-splitting peals until it seemed that all the artillery of heaven had been parked and was trained upon one spot. Within forty minutes an inch of water fell, and the mercury likewise tumbled from 93 degrees to 78.

Five Drown in the Delaware.

Five persons were drowned in the Delaware river opposite Bridesburg, a suburb of Philadelphia, by the capsizing of a small rowboat. Four persons were drowned in Lake Michigan at "Double L gap," a mile north of Benton Harbor. The men, with a dozen others, were bathing when two of the number, who could not swim, were caught by the undertow and the others went to their rescue. The brave fellows lost their own lives in the effort, while a third had a narrow escape by a drowning man clinging to him and pulling him under.

Ship Telegraph System.

A description of a new electric telegraph has been forwarded to the Department of State by Robert Kirk, consul at Copenhagen. The apparatus was constructed by a young boatswain in the Danish navy, and makes it possible to communicate with a ship at a certain anchor ground without any direct line from the land. An electric battery is placed on the shore, with one pole in contact with water or moist earth, while the current from the other pole, through a telegraph key and a revolution interrupter, is conducted to a cable which is laid out to the anchor ground and placed around the latter in a coil with a diameter of 1,000-1,200 feet. On board the ship at the anchor ground, or a short distance outside the coil, there is a small solenoid, with which a telephone is connected. When a message is sent from the land a bell sounds on the ship and the communication is sent by the telegraph key through the telephone instrument. The signals may be based on the Morse alphabet. The apparatus may also be so constructed that an answer can be sent from the ship.

WAR ON THE DEFENSELESS.

Japanese in Formosa Aim to Stamp Out the Native Population.

From far Formosa, where for upward of a year Japanese troops have been vainly striving to crush out the seeds of post-bellum opposition to Japanese innovations, comes a story which, for barbarous cruelty and defiant violation of all ethics of civilization, fortunately has few parallels in history, even of the savage races of the world. The terrible tale of rapine, murder and wanton cruelty reached Victoria, B. C., by the steamer Empress of Japan and fully bears out the statement on the situation in Formosa given publicity by the Rev. Dr. Mackay, on his return to that island six months ago. Other equally credible correspondents are now the witnesses against Japan, and the burden of their arraignment against Japan is that, seeing neither fame nor profit to be gained in the subjugation of the Formosans by the arts of modern warfare, recognized as legitimate by civilized nations, the Japanese troops sent to the island have embarked on a crusade of blood, their object being to crush out all signs of discontent by, as far as possible, exterminating the native population. The policy of extermination has been zealously pursued from the beginning of the campaign, and what with the destruction of their crops, the burning of their villages, the desecration of the graves of their loved ones, the ill-treatment of their wives and daughters and the butchery of their innocent children, the people are driven to the last expedients of desperation.

THEY ASK FOR GOLD.

San Francisco Depositors Would Like to Exchange White for Yellow Money.

The agitation of the financial question, which has resulted in sending gold up a fraction of 1 per cent above par in New York, is causing San Francisco banks much trouble with people who wish to deposit silver and take out gold. Some of the banks refuse to take any considerable amount of silver on deposit. During the past two months the supply of gold in the sub-treasury has decreased from about $15,000,000 to less than $9,000,000. The enormous shrinkage was one of the prime causes which led to the issuance of the order which stopped the redemption of silver certificates in gold coin.

BURN THE PRIEST ALIVE.

Terrible Atrocities of Mussolmans Near Heraklion, in Crete.

At Anapolis Pedinda, near Heraklion, in the island of Crete, Saturday, 1,000 armed Mussulmans butchered thirty unarmed Christians in the precinct of the St. John monastery. Several priests and women and children were among the victims. One woman was slaughtered for saving her children and her husband was butchered on his knees. Several churches were desecrated and a priest named Jeremiah had his ears and nose severed from his head and was then burned alive on a pyre of sacred pictures.

Mrs. William L. Wilson Ailing.

Postmaster General William L. Wilson did not sail from New York on the steamer St. Louis as he had expected. He had gone aboard the vessel, but just before the gang plank was hauled in he received a telegram announcing the serious illness of his wife. Mr. Wilson hurried home.

Prof. Lilienthal is Killed.

Prof. Otto Lilienthal died at Berlin from the effects of a fall from his flying machine. The aeronaut arose fifteen meters from the mountain, when he lost his balance and fell.

Killed in a Trolley Car.

At Columbia, Pa., three persons were instantly killed and fifteen injured, some fatally, by the derailment of a trolley car on the Columbia and Donegal electric road Sunday night.

Shah's Slayer is Hanged.

Mollah Reza, who assassinated the Shah of Persia in May last, was hanged in Teheran Wednesday morning in the presence of an immense concourse of the people.

Big Fall Off in Cotton.

August Department of Agriculture crop report shows condition of cotton Aug. 1 to be 80, a loss of 12.4 points during July.

SUNSHINE IS DEADLY

HUNDREDS ARE LAID LOW IN VARIOUS PLACES.

Suffering in the Cities Is the Worst Ever Experienced—In One Day Seventy-two Die in New York and a Score Perish in Chicago.

Slain by the Hot Sun.

The whole of the United States has passed through its most remarkable meteorological experience for years. Excessive heat has combined with humidity to make the lot of man and beast almost unendurable. All records for eight years have been broken. In New York and Brooklyn Sunday seventy-two people were killed outright; in Chicago, 19; in St. Louis Saturday, 25; in Philadelphia, Boston, Pittsburg, Detroit and other towns, lesser numbers, though the heat was intense. In addition to these, there were thousands of prostrations, many of which will terminate fatally. The suffering among the very poor of the cities has been terrible. The following table shows Sunday's record:

New York and Brooklyn	72
Philadelphia	23
Baltimore	19
Chicago	18
Small Illinois towns	9
Cincinnati	3
Small towns in Indiana	3
Small towns in Ohio	3
Boston	2
St. Louis	2
Pittsburg	1
Cleveland	2
Louisville	1
Memphis	1
San Antonio	1
Sioux City	1

Worst Since 1892.

New York city has not had such a succession of hot days and such lists of prostrations by the heat since 1892. In July of that year the official thermometer registered on the 25th, 94; 26th, 96½; 27th, 92½; 28th, 94; 29th, 95½, and fell on the 30th to 94. The humidity was high as well as the heat, and the published list of prostrations and fatal sunstrokes rose to thirty-one deaths and ninety-two prostrations in New York and Brooklyn on the 28th, and sixty-five deaths and 133 prostrations on the 29th. The feverish efforts of those who live in narrow and airless rooms to get sleep caused more than the usual number of persons to roll from roofs and fall from the balconies of fire escapes.

The hottest day of the present protracted spell of fierce heat, and the most unbearable of all this summer, fell upon Philadelphia beginning at midnight Saturday, and bringing death to twenty-four persons and prostrations to an unusually large number. Men and women dropped exhausted in the streets and a few died there before help could reach them. Others were found dead in their beds, and still others succumbed while under treatment in the wards of the various hospitals. Philadelphia has felt nothing like the present spell since July, 1892, when for seven days humanity sweltered and sickened under a temperature that fluctuated between 90 and 102 degrees.

Unabated heat dealt death to Chicagoans Sunday. Prostrations despite the quiet of the day, were reported in every quarter of the city. Two hours of lake breeze in the morning grappled with the rising temperature and choked it down until the afternoon, when it arose to 93, the maximum for the day. Had it not been for this the prostrations earlier in the day must have been much greater. At midnight nineteen deaths from heat had been reported to the health department. The police cared for 61 cases of prostration, 17 of them resulting fatally. Most of the cases were reported in the afternoon. The police ambulances were taxed to their utmost to respond to the unusual number of calls which were made upon them, and the attendants at the hospitals had their hands full preparing ice compresses and other remedies necessary in caring for their patients. The deaths due to sunstroke reported to the health department for four days are as follows:

Thursday	4	Sunday	19
Friday	5
Saturday	8	Total for 4 days	36

For the entire corresponding week last year but one fatal case of sunstroke was reported. The high death rate last week is charged by officials of the health department directly to the terrific heat and the high degree of humidity in the atmosphere. It is much greater than last year's record and confirms the belief of the department that for years Chicago has not suffered so greatly from the heat. The records for last week and the corresponding week in 1895 are compared as follows:

1896.	Deaths.
Sunday, Aug. 2	28
Monday, Aug. 3	106
Tuesday, Aug. 4	61
Wednesday, Aug. 5	85
Thursday, Aug. 6	103
Friday, Aug. 7	109
Saturday, Aug. 8	85
Sunday, Aug. 9	81
Total	658

1895.	Deaths.
Friday, Aug. 2	64
Saturday, Aug. 3	80
Sunday, Aug. 4	37
Monday, Aug. 5	107
Tuesday, Aug. 6	77
Wednesday, Aug. 7	61
Thursday, Aug. 8	69
Friday, Aug. 9	104
Total	599

At St. Louis, for a fortnight each day has broken its record. Saturday the official thermometer recorded a continuous temperature of 99 degrees during nearly five hours. On Friday the record was nearly as high. Sunday the thermometer reached 90 degrees at 10 o'clock and attained its maximum of 98 degrees soon after 3 o'clock, remaining practically stationary until after 5 o'clock. At 7 o'clock in the evening the mercury had fallen to 93 degrees. There were forty-eight cases of prostration from heat Saturday, with eight deaths. Sunday, when no labor or manufacturing was in progress, there were eighteen prostrations and two deaths from the heat. The high temperature is leaving its mark upon the city's mortality record. The normal rate is about 200 deaths a week. Last week 273 burial certificates were signed.

Had Sunday been a day of labor in Boston there would have been a long list of fatalities to record. It was, with one exception, the hottest day of the summer so far, and the heat was made more intensely uncomfortable by the fact that the humidity was very great. The hospitals Sunday night reported only two deaths. The number of prostrations was very large.

In Cincinnati, the heat has caused many deaths, but there have been only two fatalities directly from sunstroke. The temperature has been in the 90's for a week. The weather bureau reported the maximum temperature 94.1 at 3 p. m., 91 at 6 p. m. and 95 at 10 p. m.

At Omaha, the heat has been almost insufferable. A few prostrations have been reported, and physicians report many cases of partial sunstroke. One fatality occurred Sunday.

Senator Wolcott of Colorado will support McKinley.

BRYAN'S TRIP EAST.

Crowds at the Stations Along the Route to See the Nebraskan.

W. J. Bryan, the Democratic presidential candidate, was the recipient of many demonstrations while en route from his home in Lincoln, Neb., to New York city to receive the official notification of his nomination. The trip was inaugurated under favorable conditions. It was a day of torrid temperature, but long before the time for the departure of the Bryan party the Rock Island depot platform in Lincoln was crowded, and when the carriage containing Mr. and Mrs. Bryan drove up a round of cheers went up from over 1,000 throats. From that time on until the train pulled out people jostled each other as they pressed around their fellow citizen and grasped his hand and wished him God speed. As the train drew away from the station a thousand fluttering handkerchiefs waved a parting adieu. On the second day of the trip the party left Des Moines at 6:50 a. m. Colfax was reached a few minutes before 8 o'clock and nearly 1,000 people were wedged into the narrow space between the tracks. Many of them were miners with their lamps in caps. At Newton at 8:15 there were 1,200 to 1,500 enthusiasts on the platform. They were so bent on cheering that it was with difficulty that Gen. Weaver succeeded in finally restoring order while Mr. Bryan made a brief speech. At Iowa City a ten minutes' stop was made and 1,000 people voiced their enthusiasm through the medium of a brass band. The crowd at Davenport followed to the hotel and stood in the parching sun until Mr. Bryan had finished his dinner, when he addressed them from the hotel porch.

When Chicago was reached at 7:20 o'clock Saturday night, there were nearly 10,000 people massed about the Rock Island station, anxious to catch a glimpse of the presidential candidate. Almost 1,000 of these were members of the various silver organizations which went to make up the procession that escorted Mr. Bryan to his hotel. The streets were filled with people anxious to see the nominee for President. Mr. Bryan bowed to the right and left continuously all the way to the hotel. When the Clifton House finally was reached Mr. Bryan went immediately to the balcony, where the formal exercises were held. William J. Strong, the Republican chairman of the reception committee, delivered the address of welcome, and Bryan spoke to as many people as could crowd in front of the hotel balcony. The party left Chicago Sunday night, continuing the trip east.

INSURRECTION AT CRETE.

The Unspeakable Turk Displays His Usual Atrocity.

The powers having naval and commercial interests in the Mediterranean are just now anxiously watching the struggle which has again recommenced between the Greek population of Crete or Candia, which after Sicily, Sardinia and Corsica, is the largest island in that sea, and the forces of its sovereign, the sultan of Turkey. The prospects of political independence, or, rather, of eventual annexation to the kingdom of Greece, do not seem hopeful for the Greeks.

The Turkish soldiery, by all accounts, have displayed in this island a remarkable decline of their old military quality, behaving like brigands, in cruel orgies of massacre, outrage and plunder. The newly appointed governor, Abdullah Pasha, has failed hitherto, if he has seriously endeavored, to check these savage practices, and five European consuls at Canea have jointly protested against them.

HARBOR OF CANEA, CRETE.

It is admitted, on the other hand, that murders and other outrages have been perpetrated by some bands of Greek insurgents belonging to a rude highland race, and not subject to any discipline or military command. The state of affairs is very different in some districts, and at one end or side of the island from that which prevails at another. In the town of Canea, a well frequented port on the north coast, a Mussulman mob, supported by the Turkish soldiers, rioted and committed great excesses, killing the "kavasses" or chief guards of the Russian and Greek consuls.

Notes of Current Events.

Frank Lomeo, an Italian blacksmith in New York city, shot and fatally wounded his wife and then killed himself.

The twenty-sixth annual convention of the Catholic Total Abstinence Union met in convention at St. Louis. About 1,200 delegates were present.

Henry M. Whitney, the Bocton gas magnate, brother of William C. Whitney of New York, is seriously ill at his home from an attack of appendicitis.

Patriotic Spaniards, living in Argentina, have given a Clyde building firm an order for a cruiser of 4,500 tons to cost $1,600,000 and to be delivered in eighteen months as a gift to Spain.

A wind storm at San Louis, province of Santiago de Cuba, has demolished the barracks there, killing two guerillas outright and burying seven others under the ruins. Five persons were killed by electricity.

The will of the late Robert Garrett, formerly president of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad, has been filed for probate. The bulk of his estate, which is estimated to be worth $5,000,000, is bequeathed to his wife.

The Mussulmans have burned 200 Christian houses in the village of Kahodike, in the province of Selino. Christians as a reprisal are burning the Mussulman villages. Hostilities have been resumed in various parts of Selino.

Prof. C. W. Winchell, who holds the chair of Greek in Park College, Parkville, Mo., has mysteriously disappeared. He had been spending his vacation in the East and the last heard from him was a letter written from Cincinnati on his return trip a week ago.

Justice Calvin E. Pratt, of the appellate division of the New York Supreme Court, died suddenly of apoplexy at Rochester, Mass., aged 68 years. In politics Judge Pratt was a Democrat. He had a distinguished war record and left the army with the rank of brigadier general.

Freight Conductor Rouse of Newark, O., alleges that he caught Mrs. Bush in the act of setting his house on fire. In his night clothes he chased the woman, firing twice at her, thinking she was a man. Mrs. Bush had poured oil on the house and ignited it while the Bush family were asleep upstairs. She has been arrested. She is probably insane over the loss of considerable valuable real estate.

BRYAN IS NOTIFIED.

THE DEMOCRATIC PRESIDENTIAL NOMINEE ACCEPTS.

Immense Gathering in Madison Square Garden—Candidate Talks for Two Hours—Makes the Effort of His Life—Sewall Is Likewise Informed.

Democratic Candidates Accept.

William Jennings Bryan formally accepted the Democratic presidential nomination at Madison Square Garden, in New York, Wednesday night. Mr. Bryan's run across country had played havoc with his voice. He had gone to bed the night previous with a well-developed attack of laryngitis and had been confined to his room under the doctor's care all of Wednesday. It was at first feared that he would not be able to speak at all. Mr. Bryan, for the most part, made no effort to deal in oratory, but confined himself to the reading of a carefully prepared address, from whose text he did not vary, as from his manuscript he only now and then lifted his eyes.

It was a scene to inspire an orator. Madison Square Garden is a beautiful auditorium with its shallow galleries, its great tiers of boxes at the rounded ends of the hall, its low roof studded with electric lights. Eighteen thousand people had assembled in the big place at 8 o'clock. Every one of the 8,500 seats was occupied, and 10,000 persons stood in the open spaces at the ends of the hall. These people had assembled with a huge stock of good nature, and perhaps one in five of them came with genuine enthusiasm in his heart. All were there to greet one upon whom the mantle of fame had dramatically fallen. Aside from the members of the National Notification Committee, the prominent Democrats who honored the occasion with their presence hailed principally from the West and South. Senators Jones and Stewart occupied conspicuous seats. Senators Roach of North Dakota, Blanchard of Louisiana, Pasco of Florida and Blackburn of Kentucky were in the rear of the platform, as were Representatives Livingston of Georgia and Richardson of Tennessee, ex-Representative George Fred Williams of Massachusetts, A. J. Warner of Ohio, Col. Joseph Rickey of St. Louis, Richard P. Bland, Col. Richard Bright, ex-Gov. Hogg of Texas, Banker Creighton of Omaha and Henry Clay Sulzer of New York.

The big hall filled early, not without much confusion at the entrances. When the crowd saw "Silver Dick" Bland it set up a shout, which was as nothing to the cheers which greeted Mrs. Bryan when she came in with Mr. St. John and took a seat near the platform. "She's all right!" shouted one enthusiast, at which the people laughed and cheered again. Presently a lusty shout near the main entrance, which was taken up and rolled to the far ends of the big hall, announced the arrival of the hero of the hour.

After Mr. Bryan had worked to the front of the platform and smiled and bowed to the audience, which cheered him for fully a minute, Mr. Jones, chairman of the national committee, introduced Elliott Danforth of New York as chairman of the meeting. Mr. Danforth merely welcomed the strangers who were within the gates of New York, and presented Gov. Stone of Missouri, the chairman of the notification committee. He spoke for twenty-five minutes and at the conclusion turned and placed in Mr. Bryan's hands a big roll of parchment, on which had been engrossed the official notification of the Chicago nomination. Mr. Bryan bowed and smiled, while the audience rose to its feet and cheered. The band played, and an enthusiast excitedly waved an American flag over Mr. Bryan's head.

Chairman Danforth's introduction of Mr. Bryan was followed by an uproarious demonstration, which continued persistently for several minutes. Bryan himself waved his hand deprecatingly, but the enthusiastic ones went on with their shouting. Chairman Danforth rapped with his gavel, but in reply a man in one of the boxes waved a chair out over the heads of the people below and called for three cheers for Bryan. Chairman Jones appealed for order, and another Tammanyite distinguished himself by calling for three cheers and a tiger. Finally those who wanted to hear what Mr. Bryan had to say hissed the ones who wanted to hear the sound of their own voices, and then order was restored.

Mr. Bryan began reading his manuscript. It was painfully evident, however, that the candidate was not himself.

Mr. Bryan spoke for one hour and fifty minutes, and the hands of the clock pointed to 10:35 when he finished the peroration addressed to the citizens of New York. The terrific heat had made the upper galleries almost unendurable, and before Mr. Bryan had finished a majority of their occupants had defiled through the doors. Candidate Sewall was very heartily cheered when he stepped forward after he, with "Silver Dick" Bland and other leaders on the stage, had grasped Mr. Bryan's hand in congratulation. Mr. Sewall wore a black frock coat buttoned tightly about his breast. He was handed the formal notification of his nomination by Senator Jones. Mr. Sewall makes no pretensions to oratorical ability, and, although his voice might fill an ordinary hall, it was hardly equal to Madison Square Garden, with hundreds tramping about the floor. His words were few, and at 10:51 Chairman Danforth declared the meeting adjourned.

THE SILENT SHORE.

CHAPTER XVIII.—(Continued.)

And that night, in Walter Cundall's library, Senor Guffanta told his story.

Told it calmly and dispassionately, but with a fullness of detail that struck a chill to Stuart's heart.

"I had been but a few days in London," he said, "when I learnt by Walter's own hand—in the letter you have seen—that he was also there, and that I was to go and see him. I was eager to do so, and on the very night he was murdered, on that fatal Monday night, I set out to visit him. He had told me to come late, and knowing that he was a man much in the world, and also that, from living in Honduras, where the nights alone are cool, one rarely learns to go to bed early. I did go late; so late that the clocks were striking midnight as I reached his house. But, when I stood outside it, there was no light of any kind to be seen, only a faint glimmer from a lamp in the hall. 'He has gone to his bed,' I said to myself, 'and the house is closed for the night. Well, it is indeed late, I will come again.' And so I turned away, and, knowing that there was a road through your park, though I had not gone by it, I determined to return that way."

"Through the park—where he was murdered?" Stuart asked.

"Yes, by that way. But before I reached the gates, and when I was outside the palace of your queen, Buckingham Palace, the storm that had been threatening broke over me. Caramba! it was a storm to drown a man, a storm such as we see sometimes in the tropics, but which I had never thought to see here. It descended in vast sheets of water, it was impossible to stir without being instantaneously drenched to the skin, and so I sought shelter in a porch close at hand. There, seeing no one pass me but some poor half-drowned creature who looked as though the rain could make his misery no greater than it was, I waited and waited—I had no protection, no umbrella—and heard the quarters and half-hours, and the hours tolled by the clock. At last, as it was striking two, the storm almost ceased, and, leaving my shelter, I crossed the road and entered the park."

"Yes!" Stuart said in a whisper.

"Yes, I entered the park, and went on round the bend, and so, under the dripping trees, through what I have since learned is called the 'Mall'."

"Go on!" Stuart exclaimed.

"I had passed some short distance on my road meeting no living creature, when but a little distance ahead of me I saw two figures struggling, the figures of two men. Then I saw one fall, and the other—not seeing me, there were trees between us—passed swiftly by. But I saw him and his face, the face of a young man dressed as a peasant, or, as you say here, a workman; a young man with a brown mustache."

For a moment Senor Guffanta paused, and then he continued:

"I ran to the fallen man, and—it was Walter—dead! Stabbed to the heart! I called him by name, I kissed him, and felt his breast; but he was dead! And then, in a moment, it came to my mind that it was not with him I had to do; it was with the murderer. I sprang to my feet, I left him there—there, dead in the mud and the water with which his blood now mingled—and, as quickly as I could go, I retraced my steps after that murderer. And heaven is good! I had wasted but two or three moments with my poor dead friend, and ere I again reached the gates of the park I saw before me the figure of the man who had passed me under the trees. He was still walking swiftly, and once or twice he looked round, as though fearing he was followed. But I, who have tracked savage beasts to their lairs, and Indians to their haunts, knew how to track him. Keeping well behind him at a fair distance, sometimes screening myself behind the pillar on a doorstep, and sometimes crossing the road, sometimes even letting myself fall back still farther, I followed him. At one time, when I brought him into my sight again, it had been in my thoughts to spring upon him, and there at once to kill him or take him prisoner. And then I thought it best not to do so. We had moved far from the scene; who was to prove, how was I to prove that it was he who had done this deed, and not I? And there was blood upon my clothes and hands—it was plainly visible! I could see it myself! blood that had flown from Walter's dead heart on to me as I took him in my arms upon the ground. No, I said, I must follow him, I must know where he lives, then I will take fresh counsel with myself as to what I shall do. So I went on, still following him. And by this time the dawn was breaking! He went on and on, walking, perhaps, for half an hour or so, though it seemed far more to me; but at last he stopped, and I had now some difficulty in preventing him from seeing me. He had stopped at a gate in a wall, and with a key had quickly opened it."

"The gate of the garden of Occleve House!" Stuart exclaimed, quivering with excitement.

"Yes," the Senor answered, "the gate of the garden of Occleve House. And now I had to be careful. I was determined to see where he had gone to through that gate, what he was doing in that garden; but how to do it? If I looked through the railings he would see me, he would know he was discovered—he might even then be able to escape me! If I had had my pistol with me, I would have stood by the gate and looked at him through it, and then, if necessary, would have shot him dead. But I had it not; I had thought of no need for it when I left the hotel that night. I did not know what was before me when I went out. But I knew I must do something at once, and so, seeing that the street was empty and no creature stirring, I advanced near to the gate, stretched myself flat upon the pave, and with my head upon the ground looked under the lowest part of the railings and saw——"

"What?" Stuart asked, interrupting him again in his excitement.

"A changed man, one different from him I had followed. Still a young man with a brown mustache, but a young man whose habit was that of a gentleman. He was dressed now in a dark, well-made suit, and with his hands he was rolling up the peasant dress I had seen him wear. Then he stooped over what seemed to be a hole, or declivity, near the wall and dropped the suit into it, and arranged the weeds and long grass above it, and then slowly he went to the house, and, taking again the key from his pocket, entered the door."

CHAPTER XIX.

"What man could thus have had the entrance to the back of the house?" Stuart asked. "I am bewildered with horrible thoughts!"

"I also was bewildered, but I am now no longer so. I knew the man's face; now—to-day—I know for certain who he was. Within the last few days it flashed upon me, yet I doubted; but my doubts are satisfied. I only learned of his existence ten days ago, or I should have suspected him before."

"Who was it?" Stuart said. "Tell me at once."

"Wait yet a moment and listen to me. As I saw that man enter the house, a house that I, a stranger, could see was the mansion of some person of importance, it came to my mind that this was the owner, the master of that house, who had killed my friend. His reason for doing so I could not guess—it might have been for the love of a woman, or for hate, or about money—but that it was so I was confident. And I said to myself, 'So! you cannot escape me! I know your house, to-morrow I shall know your name, and, if in two or three days the police have not got you in their power—I will wait that while, for it is better they should take you than I—then I will kill you.' And I went away thinking thus; there was no need to watch more. I held him, for he could not escape, I thought, in my hand."

"But it was not the owner of the house," Stuart said, "it was not Lord Penlyn who killed him. He was away at an hotel at the time."

"Yes, he was—though still it would be possible for him then to have entered his own house—but his was not the face of the man I had seen. I learned that, to my amazement, when for the first time I stood before him. But, listen again; In the morning, at a restaurant, I found in a directory, of which I had learned the use, that that house was Occleve House, and that Lord Penlyn was the owner of it. And then my surprise was great, for only an hour or so before I had found that Occleve was the right name of Walter Cundall."

"You had learned that?"

"When I lifted Walter in my arms in the park, I felt against his breast a book half out of his pocket. The murderer had missed that! I took that book, for even in my haste and grief I thought that in it might be something that would give me a clew. But what were really in it of importance were a certificate of his mother's marriage, another of his own birth, and a letter, years old, from her to him. They told me all, and, moreover, they proved to me, as I then thought, that his murderer lived in the very house and bore the very name that by right seemed to be his."

"They were the certificates he showed to them on the morning he disclosed himself," Stuart said, "and he had not removed them from his pocketbook when he was killed!"

"Yes! that he showed to them; you have said it! It was to two of them that he showed these papers. And one was the friend of the other, he lived with and upon him, he dares not meet me face to face, he evades me! he, he is the murderer. He, Philip Smerdon!"

Stuart sprang to his feet.

"Philip Smerdon!" he exclaimed. "No, no! it cannot be!"

"It is, I say! It is he. Of all others, who but he could have done this deed? Who but he who crept back to Occleve House having in his pocket the keys whereby to enter it, who but he who shuns me because it has been told him that I knew the assassin's face! And on the very night that he is back in London, sleeping in that house, are not the clothes that might have led to his identification removed?"

Stuart paused a moment, deep in thought, and then he said: "It cannot be! On the day before the murder, in the morning, he left London for Occleve House. He must have been there when it was committed."

"Bah!" Guffanta said, with a shrug of his shoulders, "he did not leave London, he only made a pretense of doing so. All that day he, in his disguise, must have been engaged in tracking my poor friend, and at night he killed him." Then he paused a moment, and when he next spoke he asked a question.

"Where was he going when he left Occleve House this afternoon in the cab, and with his luggage?"

"He was going to join his father, he said," Stuart answered. "His father is ill and has been ordered abroad for his health, and, having recovered some money from his ruined business, he is going on the Continent, and Smerdon is going with him."

"And to what part of the Continent are they going?"

"I do not know, though he said something about the French coast, and afterwards, the Tyrol. Why do you ask?"

"Why do I ask? Why? Because I must go also! I have to stand face to face with him, and be able to convince myself that either I have made some strange mistake, or that I am right."

"And—if you are right?"

"Then I have to take him to the nearest magistrate, or, if he resists, to kill him."

"You will do that?"

"I will do anything necessary to prevent him ever escaping me again."

They talked on into the night, and Senor Guffanta extracted from the other a promise that he would lend him any assistance in his power, and that, above all, he would say nothing to Lord Penlyn that, by being retold to Smerdon, should, if he were actually the murderer, help him to still longer escape.

"I promise you," Stuart said, "and the more willingly because I myself would give him up to justice if I were sure he is the man. But that, of course, I cannot be; it is you alone who can identify this cruel murderer. But, in one thing I am sure you are wrong."

"In what thing?"

"In thinking that Lord Penlyn is in the slightest way an accomplice, or suspects Smerdon at all. If he did so suspect him, I believe that he would himself cause him to be arrested, even though they are such friends."

"What motive would Smerdon have to kill Walter except to remove him from the other's path? Do you think he would have done it without consulting Lord Penlyn?"

"I am certain that if he did do it, as you think——"

"As I am as convinced as that we are sitting here!"

"Well, then, I am certain that Lord Penlyn knows nothing of it. He is hasty and impetuous, but he is the soul of honor."

"Perhaps," Guffanta said; "it may be so. But it is not with him that I have to deal. It is with the man who struck the blow. And it is him I go to seek."

"How will you find him?"

"Through you. You will find out for me where he is gone with his father—if this is not a lie invented to aid his further escape—and you will let me know everything. Is it not so?"

"Yes," Stuart said; "I myself swore that I would find the murderer if I could; but, as I cannot do that, I will endeavor to help you to do so. How shall I communicate with you?"

"Write, or come to the 'Hotel Lepanto.' And when you once tell me where that man is, there I shall be afterwards. Even though he should go to the end of the world, I will follow him."

Then Senor Guffanta went back to his hotel, and told Diaz Zarates that he should soon be leaving his house.

"I have to make a little tour upon the Continent, and I may go at any moment."

"On a tour of pleasure, Senor?" the landlord asked.

"No! on a voyage of importance."

And three days afterwards he went. A letter had come to him from Stuart, saying:

"S. has really gone with his father. He has left London for Paris on the way to Switzerland. They are to pass the summer at some mountain resort, but the place is not yet decided on. At first they will be at Berne. If you meet, for God's sake be careful, and make no mistake."

"Yes!" Senor Guffanta muttered to himself as he packed his portmanteau, and prepared to catch the night mail to Paris. "Yes, I will be careful, very careful! And I will make no mistake!"

CHAPTER XX.

The summer began to wane, and as August drew to a close the world of London at large forgot the murder of Walter Cundall.

It forgot it because it had so many other things to think about, because it had its garden parties and fetes, and Henley and Goodwood; and because, after that, the exodus set in, and the Continent, Scotland and Cowes, as well as all the other seaside resorts, claimed its attention.

It is true one incident had come to light which had given a fillip to the dying curiosity of the world and society, but even that had scarcely tended to rouse fresh interest in the crime.

This incident was the discovery that Lord Penlyn was the heir to all of the dead man's vast wealth.

The news had come out gradually through different channels, and it had set people talking; but even then—at this advanced state of the London season—it had scarcely aroused more than a passing flutter of excitement.

And society explained even this fact to its own satisfaction—perhaps because it had, by now, found so many other things of more immediate, and of fresher, interest.

Cundall had been, it said, a man of superbly generous impulses, one who seemed to delight in doing acts of munificence that other men would never dream of; what more natural a thing for him to do than to leave this great wealth to the very man who had won the woman he had sought for his wife?

Was it not at once a splendid piece of magnanimity, a glorious example of how one might heap coals of fire on those who thwarted us—was it not a truly noble way of retaliating upon the woman he loved, but who had no love for him?

She would, through his bequest to her husband that was to be, become enormously rich, but she could never enjoy the vastness of those riches without remembering whence they came; every incident in her life would serve to remind her of him.

So, instead of seeing any cause for suspicion in the will of Walter Cundall, the world only saw in it a magnificently generous action, a splendidly noble retaliation.

For it never took the trouble to learn the date of the will, but supposed that it had been made on the day after he had discovered that Ida Raughton had promised herself to another.

(To be continued.)

ENTHUSIASM

Often a Wonderful Factor Which Works Great Good.

An explosion from fire-damp took place in a coalmine near Scranton, Pa., by which four miners were buried in one of the remote tunnels. The work of excavation was carried on vigorously three days, but no sound or sign from the buried men was heard. Nobody knew how many tons of rock and debris still shut them into their living grave. A private letter thus describes the scenes:

The work of rescue was thoroughly planned, the digging was done by gangs of miners who relieved each other at regular intervals. But a hopeless apathy seemed to have fallen on them. They muttered to each other as they slowly shoveled out the earth, that the men were dead long ago. The wives and children of the victims hung around them with white, hopeless faces, crying and praying. The owners of the mine stood apart, and whispered together with gloomy shakes of the head. Everything and everybody was covered with grime, and when the sun set, employers and workmen concluded, in a feeling of despair, that it was at last time to give up effort.

Just then a buggy drove hastily up, and a young man leaped out of it. It was the youngest member of the firm, who had been absent at the time of the accident. He was very pale, but his eyes were shining. The women crowded around him.

"'Dead? Not a bit of it!' he cried, cheerily. "They had enough food to keep them alive longer than this. Hello, boys! Why, you've made tremendous headway! You must be near the men. Give me a pick. Come along! We'll have them out in no time!"

He had thrown off his coat and was dealing muscular whacks at the barrier.

"Give them a cheer to let them know we're coming. Now, altogether! Women and all! One—two—three—hurray!"

He had put new life into them all. A rousing cheer rang out, and every man worked with a will. Hours passed. His energy did not flag. The women ran for food or stimulants. The gangs eagerly relieved each other, digging with zeal, and at intervals the cheery hurrah went up from many voices. At the last shout the leader threw up his hand for silence.

A feeble cry was heard. The men were saved. They owed their lives to the enthusiasm of that young man.

There is no quality which contributes more surely to success in men's lives than a boyish, hearty energy combined with common sense and good judgment. A biographer of Lord Nelson declares him to have been always the eager boy; the ship he commanded was always to him the best in the navy; his officers and men the best in England. This gay enthusiasm not only helped him to win his brilliant victories, but gave him the devoted love of the English nation.

Danger from Dust.

The Italian physicians who have been making a study of the component parts of the street dust of Turin, one of the cleanest cities in Europe, by the way, report that the germs of every disease known to science were discovered. On the sweets exposed for sale in the streets, and on the surface of food sold in the open air, they found the germs of tuberculosis, anthrax, and ten other maladies. Nothing can be really safe to eat if there is danger even in dust.

WOMAN AT HOME

IS MRS. CLEVELAND'S PROPERTY

PRESIDENT Cleveland rides in Mrs. Cleveland's carriage at Gray Gables. His coachman is not his at all, but his better half's. From the handsome pair of bays, the carriage the coachman, down to the very harness, the entire outfit is hers. It is said that her ownership does not stop at the contents of the stable, but the entire estate is hers as well; but, if this is true, there is one thing in which the man of the house is permitted to assert his supremacy. The President pays the taxes. The assessors of the town of Bourne have Mr. Cleveland on their little list, and do not recognize his wife as a source of financial relief to the town treasury. The President is good enough for them. He accepts the decree of values of the Monument Neck estate and settles with the tax collector without a murmur each year.

Mrs. Cleveland's new pair are light bays, and much better matched than the pair she drove last summer. They are by no means small, but in good proportion to the two-seated, canopy-topped carryall to which they are nearly always attached. Mrs. Cleveland's horses' harness is black leather throughout and somewhat elaborate. It is silver mounted in a new pattern, and on the saddle pad in either side, on the blinders and on each rosette of the bridle are these three letters in a monogram: "F. F. C." Frances Folsom Cleveland, they stand for, and are the evidence that the equipage throughout is the personal property of the wife of the President. These initials are raised letters of polished silver of a peculiar, elongated, very English pattern.

Miss Lillie B. Pierce.

Miss Lillie Pierce, who read the declaration of independence at the opening of the national silver convention, is one of the ablest and most charming of the young women in St. Louis who have devoted themselves to elocution. St. Louis prides itself upon the number and the quality of its female professors of elocution, and Miss Pierce occupies a place in the forefront of that profession. Her great power of declamation began to show itself when she was a mere tot. At the tender age of 6 she electrified her teacher by declaiming, with marvelous force and expression, Mr. Eddy's great oration on the decline and fall of the North American Indian. When she had reached the grammar grade her recitation of Rienzi's address to the Romans and of Marco Bozzaris' death were famed throughout the city. As she grew older Miss Pierce set her wing to higher flights and heavier performances, and successfully coped with Spartacus' outburst concerning his intention of making Rome howl and other gems of tragic import. It is said that her reading of the declaration of independence is a stirring effort. Her voice is remarkable for its volume, and her attitudes are said to be art itself. Miss Pierce is pretty, cultured, and might have made a success upon the stage had her ambition led her that way.

MISS PIERCE.

Chances of Marriage Spoiled.

A mother who has brought up both boys and girls is strongly opposed to the higher education for her gentler offspring. She says that a girl usually does not get out of college until she is 22 or 23, and "by that time her chances of marriage are sensibly diminished." But there are a great many who hold that a girl's chance of happiness is really increased by a college education. On the other hand, a girl is flung into society, immature and half-educated, with no future before her except in matrimony, and her ignorance of the world is such that she is likely to make a match which will prove unfortunate. On the other hand, the college girl has learned how to extract pleasure from books and pictures; and she can earn her own living and does not depend upon the chance of some man offering her a home. In fact, she is not so prone to take the first chance that offers, and while it is probable that "a girl's chance of matrimony is sensibly diminished by a higher education," it by no means follows that the higher education diminishes her chance of happiness.

Symbolical Marriages in India.

A curious custom prevails in certain parts of India which may be called a symbolical marriage. In families where there are several daughters the younger sisters may only marry after the elder sister is married. That, of course, is not always the case, but the obstacle can easily be surmounted if the elder sister declares herself ready to marry some tree or a large flower or some other lifeless object. In this way the disagreeable consequences of disregarding the time-honored custom may be avoided and the younger sister can safely be wedded to her living choice.

Cultivate Ease and Repose.

"In your own person you must live up to what the social world asks," says Ruth Ashmore, in an article addressed to young girls in the Ladies' Home Journal. "Achieve the stillness of form that is the great charm of the English woman. Learn to be quiet of body, do not jerk, do not wriggle, do not move from chair to chair, do not restlessly pick up first one and then another of the trifles on the table and toy with them, do not bite your lips, do not set your jaws as if you were going to fight a battle, do not tap your foot, and do not show, by moving your hands backward and forward, that the enemy of good form, restlessness, is controlling you. Then, when you talk, avoid all those little smart speeches that seem to you so clever, but which are very apt to be coined at the expense of somebody else."

Mrs. Thomas C. Platt.

While everybody knows something of Thomas C. Platt, the great Republican boss of New York, little is generally known of his wife, and yet Mrs. Platt is hardly less interesting than the boss himself and is the virtual power behind the throne. She takes an active and intelligent interest in the affairs that interest her husband and is well posted on the politics of the State and nation. Her husband's triumphs have been hers and his disappointments have been harder on her than on him.

MRS. THOMAS C. PLATT.

In appearance Mrs. Platt is tall, with dark hair, tinged with gray, and dark eyes that look at one with a very direct, penetrating glance. Her features are small and exceedingly well formed and her manner is cordial and dignified. One of Mrs. Platt's greatest charms is her voice, which is exceedingly rich and musical. She dresses with taste, inclining now to grays and blacks, with much fine lace. She is thoroughly feminine in dress and manner. Mrs. Platt is now anxious that her husband should abandon politics, fearing that the strain is greater than he can continue to bear.

Skirt Grips of Jeweled Gold.

With the wide skirts came in novelties in jeweled skirt grips, and safety pins of gold owed their popularity to the blouse, whose belt they fastened down securely to the jupe. Grips resemble handsome pins or clasps, and have a strong gold eye attached to the reverse side, in which the hook that is usually sewed on the band of a skirt is fastened. Some of them are plain, but substantial; others are a mass of delicate filigree work, and studded with jewels. They are useful articles for holding up a heavy gown.

The Irish Joan of Arc.

Her remarkable beauty no less than her sweet womanliness and patriotic fervor has made Miss Maud Gonne a successful worker in the cause of Irish freedom. She is called the Joan of Arc of Irish politics. The daughter of the late Col. Gonne, who was Irish by birth but anti-Irish in sentiment, she was reared in a circle which was strongly opposed to home rule for the green isle. Her father was attached to the vice regal court, and here she was the reigning belle. But when, upon the death of her parent, she declared her sympathy for the Irish people she was frowned upon and had to seek new friends.

MISS MAUD GONNE.

Then came a determination to work publicly for her countrymen. She went on the platform as a political speaker and toured England for the Liberal party in the last elections. She has also lectured in France and Belgium.

Forecasts for Autumn.

The sack or box coat will be much in evidence this fall.

Braiding and sets of braided garnitures are to be popular.

Yokes are universally worn, but a short, stout figure will look better in a long V.

Next winter will be a winter of broad-brimmed hats and ostrich plumes.

The coming season promises to be a fur season, and the long-haired kinds will be in especial favor.

New skirts for autumn wear have their fullness flowing farther to the back and sides and the front less flaring.

This fall very few plain materials will be worn. The advance wool goods are in plaids, checks, Persian effects and mixtures.

Ombre, or shaded, ribbons and alpaca ribbons, which shed the dust, are the coming ribbons for this fall and next spring's wear.

One feature by which the very latest made gown may be recognized is by its high cincture, or girdle, of black satin ribbon, accompanied by a short bolero.

FOR LITTLE FOLKS.

A COLUMN OF PARTICULAR INTEREST TO THEM.

A Little Samaritan.

He was a tiny chap, says the Louisville Commercial, and could hardly be seen when he entered a well-known restaurant the other evening. The little fellow was well dressed, and caused some comment when he asked the clerk what the price of a turkey sandwich was.

"Ten cents."

"Well, give me a ham; it's only five cents."

While the clerk was preparing the sandwich, the boy fished a solitary nickel out of his pants pocket and paid for the goods. Then he walked out rapidly. Some men who were in the place at the time followed him out to see what he was going to do with the sandwich. They found him giving it to a dirty, ragged newsboy, a little boy like himself.

"I only had a nickel. I got this for you. Next time you get hungry come out to my house, 1426 —— street, and I'll see that you get a good meal. Good-by."

Then the little philanthropist took his departure.

Two Brave Girls.

When girls do brave deeds, boys cannot do less than applaud them. Let all boy readers, then, give particular attention to the following story, which comes from Alameda, California, by way of the San Francisco Chronicle.

Dora Patterson and Vida McKean, two 12-year-old girls, saved John Baker from death by drowning last night. Baker was out on the marsh digging clams, when he walked into a quicksand covered by shallow water. There he began to sink, and the more he struggled the farther he sank into the treacherous sand.

Luckily for Baker, the two girls were near enough to hear his cries, and hastened to help him. He was already up to his shoulders in the water, and was sinking fast. The girls had presence of mind enough to pull off some rails from a fence near by and push them out to him.

They could only get within about twenty feet of Baker, but he managed to reach the fence-rails and keep himself up while the girls went to the nearest house and got a rope. This they threw to Baker, and he fastened it under his arms. Then, with the aid of the supporting fence-rails, Baker was pulled out of the quicksand and safely landed on shore.

A Child's Logic.

The blind reasoning of a child is often as amusing as their childish faith is enviable.

A little boy of six years had developed a bad habit of rising in the night to drink from the water-bottle, and had been forbidden in vain. On the night of a recent storm, his parents being away, his aunt tucked him safely in bed.

"Now, Dicky," she said, "remember I can tell if you go to the water-bottle."

"Oh, no, auntie," he smiled, slyly, "how can you?"

"I can tell," she said, with conviction.

"But how?" asked Dick, skeptically.

"I can," she repeated; "but since you won't promise, you naughty boy, I shall empty the bottle." And she did so, to the child's consternation.

In the middle of the night the gable of the house was blown down, and crashed like thunder through the ceiling of Master Dick's room. As his aunt and the servants rushed in a terrible sight met their gaze. The bed was almost hidden by masses of brick and masonry, two iron feet at the head being driven completely through the floor. With a shriek his aunt fell on her knees.

"O Dicky! poor Dicky!" she cried, "He's been killed!"

The words had hardly left her lips when there came a light, faltering step from the bath-room, and, as they turned, there stood Dicky, his teeth chattering with cold, a candle in one hand and a full water-bottle in the other. For a full moment he surveyed the bed with its ton or two of debris, and then shook his head with sorrowful admission:

"Yeth, auntie," he declared; "you thed you could tell if I did."

Grandpa's Policeman.

Willie had been spending his vacation at grandpa's on the farm and he found a great many things there which surprised as well as interested him.

One day he was walking in the woods or "timber" as grandpa called it, and away up in the branches of a tree he espied a large white bird. He knew at once from its size and the shape of its head that it was an owl, and he sped away to the house as fast as his feet could carry him.

"Grandpa," he shouted, as soon as he reached the door, "there's a big white owl up in the timber. Can't I see if I can shoot him? I want him so much for a specimen."

Grandpa looked up slowly at the excited boy and then he answered deliberately, "Shoot him! No indeed! He's my policeman." Then seeing Willie's look of astonishment he went on. "Yes, there's a band of robbers on this farm and that owl will arrest most of them before the summer is over if we let him alone."

Willie looked even more astonished at this information and his resolve to go straight back to the woods suddenly forsook him and he dropped into a chair instead.

"Why, grandpa," was all he could say.

Grandpa smiled a little as he asked, "Would you like to know more about them?"

"Yes, indeed," answered Willie.

"Well," said grandpa, "this band of robbers likes to gnaw the bark off the young trees in the orchard, and that you know kills the trees. Then they eat the seeds that are planted in the ground; they nibble the young vegetables and even gnaw off the grass at its roots. Now can you guess who these robbers are?"

"No," said Willie slowly, and beginning to look relieved. "Are they squirrels?"

"No," said grandpa, "they are smaller still. They are field mice. You would not think that such little creatures could do much harm, but if our policemen, the white owls, hawks and weasels, which catch the mice, were killed, their number would increase so rapidly that all the crops would suffer."

"And there wouldn't be any apples, or corn, or—oh, my!" said Willie, "I'm glad you didn't let me kill that owl."—The Standard.

CONFIDENCE GAME ON COWS.

Electric Light Used to Make Them Believe Day Is Dawning.

Dairyman Wilder, whose milk-producing establishment is about ten miles north of Santa Cruz, is one of the most ingenious men in all California, and has done what no other dairyman ever attempted. Everybody that has ever tried to milk a cow before daylight knows what a job it is. Bossy is generally of the opinion that there is a time for all things and firmly objects to being awakened and milked when she thinks she should be asleep. Many cows will refuse to be milked to the extent of kicking and lying down.

All of these troubles have been Dairyman Wilder's and not long ago he determined to overcome them. In fact, it was necessary that he should, as he was often late in getting milk to his customers in Santa Cruz. It cost considerable money, but he has more than made up for the outlay. At present he has one of the finest electric light plants in the State, and his cows are as easy to milk as in broad daylight.

When the electric plant was in position and ready for work there were three big arc lights over the center of the yard where the cows slept at night, and dozens of others fixed all over the different buildings, the entire lot capable of producing about 10,000 candle-power—enough to make the yard as bright as day. The plant was of the best quality, as everything was tried in the daytime before the sunrise was sprung on the cows.

It worked like a charm. The bright rays of the light had no sooner been turned on than the cows commenced to get up. Most of them looked surprised to see the day break so soon, but when the milkman arrived with his pail they seemed to think it was all right, and stood perfectly still while being milked. The light also affected the poultry, for the cocks commenced to crow, and the hens went around hunting for nests. Ducks, geese, dogs and cats were all affected the same way, and the whole barnyard was awake at 2 o'clock in the morning.

It has not proved a case of the animals getting used to it, for they behave the same way now after the artificial sunrise has been in operation for several months. Poor beasts, they are blissful in ignorance of Mr. Wilder's shabby trick.—San Francisco Call.

Italian Adventures in Abyssinia.

Comparable in many respects to our Indian fighting, the disastrous campaign in Abyssinia has not merely taught the Italians a hard lesson, but has supplied them with a fund of stories of individual bravery which will prove bracing to the national valor, though the main result of the campaign is crushing to the national pride.

Men engaged in desperate conflict with the North American Indians are known to save one charge in their rifles or revolvers to be used on themselves at the last extremity—to save them from Indian torture. It is estimated that hundreds of Italians died by their own hands in the battle of Adowa and during the terrible days which followed it for the same reason.

General Arimondi is known to have committed suicide in the presence of his remaining men; but this was rather from chagrin and grief than from fear of torture at the hands of the enemy.

Sometimes the Italian officers were too ready to hasten their fate, and in some instances they estimated too unfavorably the character of their enemy. Captain Ademollo and Lieutenant Menarini, after being both badly wounded, fell into the hands of the Abyssinian chief, Sebat. They expected to be put to death, but through the intervention of the chief they were given drink and set at liberty.

Soon, however, they were surrounded by another band of about a dozen natives. By this time the two officers had been joined by an Italian corporal, who had his rifle. Giving themselves up for lost, the two officers were about to shoot themselves.

"Don't be such fools!" said the corporal. He led the way to a rock, and the three white men leaned their backs against it. Then the corporal proceeded to bring down three or four of the Abyssinians to skillfully that the rest took to flight. Captain, lieutenant and corporal all succeeded in reaching a place of safety.

The name of the corporal is not preserved by the Italian papers which narrate this adventure, though he seems more worthy of fame than many men of higher rank.

THE AUBURN COURIER

OFFICIAL PAPER OF DeKALB COUNTY.

JAMES A. BARNS, Editor.

Registered at the Auburn, Indiana Office as second-class matter.

THURSDAY,.....AUGUST 20, 1896

Opening Gun.

There will be a democratic meeting in Auburn on Saturday of this week, Aug. 22, at 2 p. m. This will be the first one of the campaign and all are requested to come out and hear the living issues discussed from a democratic standpoint. Hon. J. M. Robinson, our candidate for congress, Hon. Free Kelley and others will address the meeting. Give us a good rally.

Campaign Quartet.

The campaign, as far as music is concerned, is now open. A "Campaign Quartet" has been formed, composed Frank Lahnum Wm Kruse, Art Beidler and Saxby McIntosh. As will be seen, it is strictly non-partisan, Lahnum and Kruse being democrats, and Beidler and McIntosh republicans, so they will sing for both parties. Their first engagement will be with the Bryan Club next Tuesday evening. They will be prepared to sing at the meetings of any and all clubs. Arrangements for their services can be made with D. M. Link or Art Beidler.

St. Joe Rally

The democrats had a called meeting at St. Joe Saturday evening and, it proved a splendid affair. Arrangements had been made for a good meeting, and seats provided for about 500, but when the people had gathered in it was found that large numbers had to stand up, or provide seats for themselves. Hon. J. M. Robinson was present and made the address which was so enthusiastically received that he was induced to occupy all the time, which he did, though other speakers had been provided. Mr. Robinson again proved his immense popularity, for everywhere he goes, he meets the most enthusiastic reception. A big club was organized. Our people should remember that Mr. Robinson speaks here Saturday afternoon.

Getting Down.

A republican paper that will invade the sanctity of the death chamber to make a political point, ought to be called down: A letter from Angola calls our attention to a remark made in the Dispatch to the effect that the late G. A. Porter had lost his woolen mill through the effects of free trade. The writer says that Mr. Porter lost his property "through deals with two Auburn men, one a free trade democrat and the other a free trade republican and the deal was made under Ben Harrison's free trade administration."

Legal Tender.

People are not fully aware that most of our money is legal tender for any amount. Gold coins of all kinds, and silver dollars are legal tender for any amount. So are the U. S. treasury notes. Fractional silver is legal tender for any amount not above $10. Bank bills are generally, not legal tender. Also it does not appear to be well known that the reason President Cleveland vetoed the bill for coining the seigniorage silver in the treasury, was because the silver to be so coined was not made a legal tender. He gave congress to understand that if they would change the bill so the money provided for would be legal tender, he would sign it. But congress did nothing.

Glad Tidings to Asthma Sufferers.

Lawson Elvidge, of Barrington, Ill., states he was cured of chronic asthma of long standing by Foley's Honey and Tar. It gives positive relief in ALL cases of asthma so that this disease, when not completely cured, is robbed of all its terrors by this great remedy. No sufferer should be without it. 50c. Contradictions.

The eminent senator from Ohio, took part last Saturday, in the grand opening of the campaign for the republicans of that state. Mr. Sherman is spoken of as the leading member of the U. S. senate. Let us see if he is entitled to this distinction.

A man who has been in public life forty years, who has been in the senate nearly twenty-five years, who has been chairman of the most important committee and who has been secretary of the U. S. treasury, ought to be able to put up a strong discussion, on any subject, and especially on the subject of our national finances.

But we propose to show that with all his ability, learning and experience, Mr. Sherman put up an exceedingly weak argument for the view of the gold cause he espouses. And we propose to show, not only that he is far from being right, but that he surely knows he is wrong.

For instance, he presumes on the ignorance of his hearers, when he says, as he did Saturday.

"We cannot by law fix the value of either metal or coin."

And within fifteen minutes he gives himself the lie by saying:

"Ever since 1879, all forms of money, whether gold, silver or paper were maintained at par. And although silver bullion has declined in market value, the coins made from it have been kept at par with gold coins at the legal ratio of 16 to 1."

These two statements are direct contradictions and one of them must be false.

Again he contradicts his first assertion by saying.

"All these forms of money, (gold, silver and paper,) have been maintained by the government, at par with gold, and they travel the circuit of the world without diminishing their purchasing power. Though silver has fallen to about half its former value, yet we have maintained silver coin made from it at a parity with gold at 16 to 1."

We would like to ask, of what value is any statement made by a man who will flatly contradict himself twice in speaking fifteen minutes.

Again in this same speech, he says: "It, (free coinage,) would violate every contract made since Jan. 1, 1879"

But he known that no congress will pass any law "impairing the obligation of contracts."

And in the same speech, Senator Sherman started the manifest and silly falsehood that,

"The silver dollar is a legal tender at $1 to pay debts, but to purchase any article, it is worth only 53 cents."

Did anyone ever before hear such nonsense. It will as all know, pay $1 debt; it will also purchase $1 worth of groceries or anything else. It will pay $1 of anyone's old subscription due on the COURIER, or it will purchase a new subscription to the COURIER. Let anyone try it, and then believe John Sherman and J. B. Foraker.

For Foraker, who spoke next after Sherman, also, made a bad break. He said:

"Silver dollars are maintained at par with gold because they are redeemable in gold."

Will Foraker or any one else, point out a law that says silver dollars are redeemable in gold? If we take ten dollars in silver to the treasury and demand for it ten dollars in gold, will we get it? Let some one try.

And so on through both speeches, they deceived the people, by making statements which they themselves contradicted before concluding. Everyone should read these, no matter what his politics may be.

Five Tramps.

This forenoon Marshal West, Sam McAnally and other men including two policemen from Fort Wayne captured five fellows just north of John Shugers' residence in the woods. The tramps were about the Junction this morning and when they saw the police they ran Several shots were fired but none of them stopped until caught. It was thought that they might one of them be the man who killed a gentleman at Fort Wayne last night. After carefully searching the men they found no gun or any valuables on their person and they were turned loose. All five were polocks.

The Dispatch

Our neighbor in the next block ought to brace up and write its own leaders. Then it would keep tab on what it says, and possibly keep nearer shore.

Someone who signs himself, "Pro Patria," is writing on the financial question and at the same time getting into deep water. Pro Patria should not deceive "for the good of the country."

Pro. Patria says in effect, "You cannot coin silver at the ratio of 16 to 1 and keep it at par with gold."

But that is exactly what we have done and are doing.

All the silver we ever coined has been at about that ratio, and there has never been a time when it was not at par. And such a time is not likely to come. Even this year, we are making over seven millions of new siver dollars, each as good as a gold dollar. These are facts known to all.

Again see what a wild assertion P. P. makes.

"The American silver dollar is worth twice as much as the Mexican dollar, and will buy twice as much in Mexico, in the United Statee, in Canada and anywhere else in the world."

If he believes this, and we presume he does,——anyone who would make such a foolish assertion would be foolish enough to believe it——then he ought to try it. "Anywhere else in the world" our silver dollars would cease to be money, and so would the Mexican dollars, and each "would buy" only what its bullion value would pay for. And in this case, the Mexican dollar would be worth a little the most, as it contains 3¼ more grains of bullion. And what we here assert in regard to our silver dollars, is true as to our gold dollars. Our gold dollars go abroad as bullion only and not as dollars. They are weighed and sold at so much an ounce, and if a Mexican gold dollar weighed more than ours, it would bring more, just as their silver dollar does.

Filled the Ditch.

There was a lively lawsuit at Waterloo last Friday, in which our old friend A. D. Moore was a chief actor. He had got into trouble with a neighbor, about one of the public drains that ran through their farms. Moore got a little balky, and went and filled up the drain, which is "contrary to law as made and provided." The prosecutor had him arrested for it, and he got pretty badly scared, so much so, that he sent for a number of prominent men, friends of his, to plead his case for him with the prosecutor, who was also called in. Moore explained matters so well, that he was let off. He had made the prosecutor believe there was no public drain, and that he would keep it in proper order anyway. But the prosecutor soon found he had been deceived and ordered him re-arrested. The constable, John Duncan, of Waterloo went down to serve the papers on him, and as soon as Moore saw what was up, he gave a sudden run for tall timber, and though the officer is something of a sprinter he could keep in sight of his man. Then Duncan got help to search the woods, but it was sometime before he could be found. He was then taken before 'Squire Charlie Reed at Waterloo, and a trial had on Friday of last week. Rose and Rose defended Moore, while Judge McClellan represented the state. The upshot of the affair is that Moore has to "fling in" $10 for the future benefit of the School Fund, and a lot of costs. Besides, that ditch must be kept open, for it was laid under the state ditch law

CARLYLE AND THE CABBY.

How the Latter Lost the Trade of the Great Philosopher.

Carlyle was well known to London cabmen. For years he engaged a particular driver from the rank, and refused to have any other. This man, however, lost his custom in a somewhat peculiar manner.

Some medical students got to know of his preference for the driver, and, getting hold of the driver one day, they inquired if he knew who his fare was, when he told them he did not. The students informed him that he was one of the most famous and eccentric writers of the day, and, giving him a book, advised him to appear to be reading it whenever Carlyle approached the stand.

Cabby, without any suspicion, acted on their advice, and when the old sage next came for a cab he seemed deeply impressed in a very pretentious book.

"Hillo! what's that you're readin'?" inquired the Ecclefechan philosopher.

"A most hout-an'-hout, tip-top, splendid book, about that 'ere French revolution," was cabby's gushing reply.

"Eh! what dae ye say? Let me see it," said Carlyle, holding out his hand.

"Oh, certainly, sir," said the driver, handing him a copy of his "History of the French Revolution."

"Weel, my man," inquired the sage, apparently delighted, "are ye sure that you're readin' this work intelligently?"

"Perfectly sure," said the Jehu, confidently; then, thinking he ought to say something in praise of the book, he added, "Why, sir, it's almost as good as 'The Newgate Calendar.'"

The grim old Dumfriessian glared at him, grunted out something, turned abruptly around, and engaged the next cab. From that day Carlyle never looked at him, but stuck to the second man, who happened to have had the honor of driving most of the distinguished men of the century.—Pittsburg Dispatch.

QUEEN VICTORIA'S HANDS.

How She Keeps Them Plump, White and Unwrinkled.

"You are quite right in your surmise that her majesty possesses wonderfully beautiful hands, though they are by no means small for her height; that they are plump, white and unwrinkled. Would you like to know the reason?" asked the manicure who was beautifying my hands for a dinner party.

Of course I was all attention.

"Well, as you are doubtless aware, her majesty is a great knitter. Indeed, she is invariably at work with her needles, either at scarfs or mittens for the poor, little vests for her man, great-grandchildren, or cots and bed quilts. The mere exercise induced by the hand tendens to whiten, refine and keep them in good shape, while, in the same way, the hands never look more attractive than when so employed."

"Why have so many cooks prettily shaped hands and arms?" I asked.

"Simply because they do so much with them. Kneading bread is one of the best beautifiers the hands can have. Where women who work much in the house usually fail to secure pretty hands is by not drying them well after each washing, and by not wearing gloves for rough labor, such as the cleaning of grates. Of course, it is a wee bit of trouble always to put on gloves, but smooth, unwrinkled hands are worth a good deal to every woman, or should be, I think."—Answers.

Fencing in the Giant's Causeway.

As a sequel to recent meritorious attempts to direct the attention of tourists to the many charms of scenery and greenery existing in "the distressful country," comes the humor that the astute owner of that portion of the coast embellished by the well-known Giant's Causeway is busily at work upon a ring fence which will effectually place this natural phenomenon on the footing of a paying exhibition. This policy is scarcely likely to increase the confidence of hesitating visitors who, at the present time, can with difficulty be persuaded to put aside prejudice and undertake that most delightful experience—an investigation of the many points of interest to be found in Ireland.—London Truth.

Perfectly Impartial.

The wife of one of Lord Powis' keepers was asked by the clergyman of her own parish why she went running off three miles to another church whenever the earl went there. Why didn't she keep to her own church? "His lordship likes to see his servants at church," replied the woman. "Which do you think most of, then," asked the parson, "Lord Powis or the Almighty?" "They have both been very good to me, sir," replied the woman, averse to invidious comparisons.—Household Words.

Tardy Penitence.

"Why won't mamma's little boy tell mamma what he's been stuffing himself with?" anxiously asked the maternal parent, bending over the couch. "You have been in the pantry, Johnny, eating too much of something you ought not to have eaten at all, and you won't tell me what it is. It makes me sick at heart!"

"It makes me sick o' tart, too!" moaned Johnny, turning his face to the wall.

But mamma did not catch on.

To Improve the Flavor of Coffee.

During damp weather in the summer coffee often loses its flavor and strength. An old housekeeper says that if the quantity of coffee berries needed for breakfast be put into a bowl, covered closely, and put into the warming oven over night the flavor of the coffee will be much improved.—New York Sun.

BUTLER.

One of the noticeable events of the past week has been the quiet marriage of Clyde Blaker, son of David Blaker east of town, and Miss Susie Jennings, daughter of Hiram Jennings deceased. Miss Jennings was left an orphan a few years ago by the death of both her parents, yet in spite of all her disadvantages she acquired a good education and has filled the place of teacher in several district schools, and for the past year has filled an important position in Butler public schools, in which position we believe she continues the coming year. Mr. Blaker is also a teacher of considerable experience. Our people unite in good wishes for the happiness of these worthy young people.

Last Monday afternoon, Aug. 10, will be long remembered for the wild display of lightning. The dwelling occupied by Geo. King northwest of Butler, was struck and considerably damaged. On the sample day the large barn on the Case farm near Spencerville was also struck and considerably damaged as was also the barn on the Provines farm about a mile west of the Case farm. Both these barns had received strokes of lightning before. The same storm struck and damaged four houses in Angola, and a barn northeast of Angola, and burned two barns just north of the same place. About all of these buildings were insured.

Mrs. John Crouse is seriously ill at her home on east North street.

Butler was nearly drowned out last Friday afternoon, water fell so rapidly that teams hitched on the sides of the streets were nearly kneedeep in water, all the lower parts of the town were flooded a number of houses surrounded by water but as it was very warm it afforded the children an excellent chance to wade and splash to their hearts content without going outside their own door yards.

CORUNNA.

Born on the 12th inst., to Gus. Fraas and wife, a boy.

Will Franks was in town over Sunday with his parents.

Mrs. Albert Buchanan and Mrs. Frank Campbell are visiting in Albion this week.

M. A. Carter will get out the first issue of the Corunna Echo on Thursday of this week.

We hear that there will be another store opened up in town in a few days.

Verily, the corporations are making their power felt already. We under- the Lake Shore Railroad Co. has cut the section men to half time. As a matter of course if the gold standard wins, the men will work more time and their wages be doubled—perhaps.

The U. S. Gov't Reports show Royal Baking Powder superior to all others.

The Tent Meetings.

The meeting at the Volunteer tent last evening was one of the most interesting which has been held since they commenced. The subject Dr. Palmer selected to speak on, was Missions and slum work in the cities which the posts are doing there. His account of the reclamation of the men and women reached by this line of work was very touching. Dr Palmer has been engaged in mission work in Chicago for some years, and when asked why he is with the Volunteers said. "It is the coming field of usefulness for the church as the Gospel must be coming to the people and not wait for the people to go to the church. The future church to succeed must do as Christ and the Apostles did, work as missionaries. He has been doing evangelistic work for some time past and has been in the west. With his work with the Volunteers a line of religious books will be sold at cost for cash and they can be seen at the tent. People are asked to examine them. Bible Readings will be given each afternoon from 3 to 4 o'clock, subject the "Baptism of the Holy Ghost." All are invited to attend.

Grove Meetings

Angola, Ind., Aug. 17, (Special)—The three day's annual meeting of the Christian church of Steuben county, was concluded here Sunday by a grove meeting and basket dinner in the court yard park. Elder Victor Dorris, of Kentucky, the preacher who secured 287 new accessions to the church here last winter, delivered the morning address, which was powerful and eloquent Elder J. O. Rose, of the Christian church at Kendallville, preached the communion sermon at 3 o'clock, p. m. which was a masterly and able effort. There were nearly 2,000 persons in attendance and the crowd was seemingly as orderly as though it were within the walls of a church edifice. It was a rather an unusual feature to hear the bell in the tower of the temple of justice calling christians together for worship but such was the case Sunday When the court house bell rings, it generally means, "Come ye sinners, poor and needy," but on this occassion it meant "Come, ye christians, bow in reverence." The next annual meeting will be held at Hamilton, in Aug. 1897.

Sent it to His Mother in Germany.

Mr. Jacob Ebensen, who is in the employ of the Chicago Lumber Co., at Des Moines, Iowa, says: "I have just sent some medicine back to my mother in the old country, that I know from personal use to be the best medicine in the world for rheumatism, having used it in my family for several years. It is called Chamberlain's Pain Balm. It always does the work." 50 cent bottles for sale by Davenport, the druggist. 35
